But, in view of the conditions suggested when I had the floor before, the committee thought it was but fair to give to the Secretary of the Interior an opportunity of permitting some contested case or cases involving large and considerable sums of money to be settled in a tribunal more judicial in its form than a local land office or the General Land Office, and that was all that was desired by the committee. I personally am disposed to think that the amendments offered by my colleague from Kansas [Mr. PETERS] ought to be accepted, particularly that one sending the case on appeal to the courts of Oklahoma for adjudication rather than to the courts of the District of Columbia and the Supreme Court of the United States. We know that these courts are encumbered now with innumerable cases, and the sending of these appeals there would necessarily work delay and possible hardship for a long time to come.

For that reason I favor any proposition which will secure an early consideration of them; and personally I favored sending them to the courts of Oklahoma, but the judgment of the committee was otherwise, and as a member of the committee I acquiesced. But now as the matter is brought to the attention of the House I am disposed to favor the amendment of my colleague, and for the reasons suggested as well as others that might be named.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendments of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PETERS].

Mr. PERKINS. Is the vote to be taken now upon both or only one of the amendments?

The CHAIRMAN. The first amendment proposed by the gentleman from Kansas.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 23, noes 29.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PETERS. Now, Mr. Chairman, I offer an additional amendment.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. Is that to the original proposition?

Mr. PETERS. This is an amendment to perfect the proposition proposed to be stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. There is a question of parliamentary status which the Chair will state to the committee. The Chair is inclined to hold that this is the parliamentary condition. The motion made by the gentleman from Arkansas to strike out the proviso is pending; but pending that it is in order to move an amendment to perfect the provision which is proposed to be stricken out. The gentleman from Kansas moves the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out the words "District of Columbia," in lines 22 and 23, and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "Territory of Oklahoma."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon agreeing to this amendment.

Mr. SPRINGER. What is the purport of this amendment?

Mr. PETERS. I will state in a word that it is to make the appeal to the supreme court of the Territory of Oklahoma instead of the supreme court of the District of Columbia.

Mr. SPRINGER. That will delay the matter still further. That is all.

The amendment was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The committee informally rose; and a message was received from the President, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announcing approval of acts of the following titles:

On the 6th instant,

An act (H. R. 7215) authorizing the Secretary of State to appoint two suitable persons to represent the United States at the international conference in regard to the protection of industrial property, and making an appropriation therefor.

On the 7th instant,

An act (H. R. 5235) to change and fix the time of holding terms of the district and circuit courts at Texarkana, Ark.

On the 11th instant,

An act (H. R. 3266) for the relief of the heirs of Noah W. Yoder.

The committee then resumed its session.

TERRITORY OF OKLAHOMA.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I would like to have the proviso read as amended.

The proviso was again reported.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I move to strike out the last word, and I shall just take time enough to say that I am absolutely unable to discern in what way this amendment particularly betters the condition of affairs. There is still, and would be still, an appeal from the supreme court of the Territory to the Supreme Court of the United States. That means, of course, this long delay of years in favor of the "sooners" who are laying claim to these lands, upon which towns are located and which are covered by hundreds of houses and buildings of one sort or another. Their determination is delayed indefinitely by these appeals to the court. The persons who are in possession by right will be compelled under the proviso as amended to expend such sums as the contestants may see proper to coerce them into paying. I am as much opposed to the proviso as amended as I am to the original provision.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I am more opposed, if that can be, to this amendment than I was to the provision as it stood before. What have we now as proposed by the gentleman from Kansas and adopted by the committee? That cases will be tried by the local land offices, then appealed to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and then from the Commissioner of the General Land Office to the Secretary of the Interior; and after the Secretary of the Interior has tried it, upon petition of some of these men out there, the Secretary of the Interior certifies it back to the Territory of Oklahoma to go into their courts and be tried there. Now, who ever heard of going from the authorities here back to the courts of the Territories?

Mr. PETERS. If my friend from South Dakota will allow me, I will state to him that there is no certifying it back. Under the law as provided, if a party desires to appeal to the supreme court of the Territory of Oklahoma he must make a showing before the Secretary of the Interior that his case will settle a large class of cases, and if that is done within sixty days he can take this appeal.

Mr. PICKLER. That is just what I say, that they can try all the way through to the Secretary of the Interior, and then if they are not suited they can have it certified back to the Territory of Oklahoma for its supreme court to try. I want to know if there was ever such a proceeding as that heard of before. I want to say that I do feel an interest in those people because I know many of them so well. I want to say to the House now, and to the committee, that there can only be one object in this and only one can result, and that is, that the men who went in by special trains, who stood in with the railroad companies, who were there contrary to law, and who are settlers upon the best and most valuable property, they are the only class of men who can be or are interested in this provision. I do not know how it comes in here; I do not care; but that, gentlemen, is the fact in the case; and it benefits that class alone. It is directly in opposition to the honest settler; and of that there can be no question.

Now, again I say, in conclusion, why not let the people of Oklahoma be governed by the same laws and in the same way that the settlers are governed in every State and Territory in the Union? That is all that they want. The gentleman to the contrary notwithstanding, I say, in Oklahoma Territory to-day, and I know what I am talking about, that there is no one who wants this provision except those men who went in there contrary to law.

Mr. SPRINGER. I say that the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. PICKLER. I am not mistaken. I will say to the gentleman that I was there three months and he was only "toasted" three days. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. PETERS. I desire to offer another amendment to the proviso.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Amend by striking out all after the word "therein" in line 24.

Mr. PETERS. The purport of that amendment is to strike out all the words that provide for an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States. That leaves the matter to be regulated by the law as it exists at present in regard to appeals from the supreme court of any State or Territory. I do not see any use in retaining the provision for the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States. If this amendment is adopted there will be simply an appeal to the supreme court of the Territory of Oklahoma, and then an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States only in such cases as are provided for by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs upon the amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MCRAE] to strike out this portion of the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from South Dakota to this section, which has been printed in the RECORD and which is similar to the amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas, will be regarded as withdrawn, and the Clerk will read section 12.

Mr. HARE. Mr. Chairman, before that is read I desire to offer an amendment to be considered as pending when that part of the bill to which it applies is reached.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARE] for leave to offer an amendment and have it considered as pending when the proper section shall be reached in the committee. The amendment will be read for information, after which the Chair will ask for objection.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out section 26; strike out section 27; strike out section 28.

Amend section 29 as follows: Strike out lines 1, 2, and 3 and insert the following words: "The district court of Muscogee shall have exclusive original jurisdiction in the following cases."

Strike out the lines beginning at the word "and," in line 62, section 30, and ending at the word "territory," in lines 72 and 73.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked by the gentleman from Texas that these several amendments shall be considered as pending when the appropriate sections shall be reached. Is there objection?

Mr. KILGORE. Yes, sir; I object.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to section 11.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Amend section 11, line 11, by adding, after the words "final proof," the following words:

"Provided, That no person who entered said Territory of Oklahoma contrary to law or the President's proclamation of March 23, 1892, shall obtain title to any lands or town lots in that portion of the Territory of Oklahoma which was opened to settlement on the 22d day of April, 1892."

Mr. PICKLER. I do not wish to discuss the proposition. I call for a vote.

Mr. PERKINS. I hope that amendment will not be adopted. There is nothing in this act that attempts to settle these controversies at all. This amendment is entering upon a field that was considered when we had the town-site act before the House, and was discussed generally. There is nothing in this act which attempts in any way to regulate or determine these controversies between litigants or contestants in Oklahoma or to settle their rights or interests one way or the other. We are simply attempting to create for them a Territorial government and tribunals in which they may settle their controversies according to the law as it is, and I hope that we shall not now enter upon this field. If we are now to enter upon this field it will take the remaining time that is left to the committee for the consideration of this bill and we shall not get away from this section this afternoon.

The amendment was rejected—ayes 15, noes 42.

Mr. TARSNEY. Mr. Chairman, I believe that section 11 is disposed of, and I desire to call attention again to the amendment to section 10 which I offered yesterday, and which was temporarily passed over. I desire to say to the committee that I have examined that section of this bill which, if any, covers the case, and it does not seem to me to be sufficient. It is section 19. It provides that—

The President may, at such times as he may deem it necessary, direct land offices to be opened in the Territory of Oklahoma.

Now, my amendment provides that one land office shall be established in the district of lands that are opened by this bill, and if that be adopted there will be no necessity for section 19. There is no provision in this bill making an appropriation to cover the cost of establishing land offices. It is simply left discretionary with the President to direct their establishment, and the President certainly will not establish any land offices until provision is made by appropriation to pay the cost of their establishment.

There is absolute necessity for the establishing of a land office, because No Man's Land lies more than 225 miles away from any place where there is a land office now, and the convenience of the persons who intend to occupy those lands demands that immediate provision be made for a land office nearer than the one at Guthrie. There is another and a still more potent reason why this amendment should be adopted and another land office established immediately. It is that those who expect to settle upon and become claimants to these lands shall have protection in the rights which the laws guaranty to them in making settlement.

It is known to this committee that a correspondence had been carried on between the Interior Department and the agents or officers of the Government at Guthrie for months after the opening of the Territory, which culminated in July last by the Secretary of the Interior writing a letter to the register of the land office at Guthrie, in which he condemned him in most explicit language as a corrupt official and as a co-conspirator of others who were trying to seize upon and steal those lands.

I desire to read for the information of this committee a few pertinent paragraphs from that letter. After reciting all the correspondence that had passed between the Secretary of the Interior and the register of the land office, the Secretary says:

Your communication of the 3d ultimo—

This letter was dated July 1, 1889,—

Your communication of the 3d ultimo was received in due course of mail and laid before the President, who has been advised of the correspondence between us. I was directed by him to reply to you that your explanation was not satisfactory. * * *

The President, as well as myself, also marks with emphasis the fact that your former law-partner, Mr. Kenner, was one of those for whom a location was made in connection with your half-brother, Mr. Dille, and that it appears as if you had all left your homes with the preconceived idea that the opportunity offered was a favorable one, by whatever means you had at command, to take advantage of your fellow-citizens and regardless of the law and the trust reposed in you.

Then again he says:

I do not deem it necessary to continue this correspondence. You have long ere this arrived at a full understanding of my views as to your action and the position which you hold in the future towards this office. I am not authorized by the President to request your resignation, but I am directed by him to express to you the views herein embodied.

Mr. Chairman, in some remarks which I submitted upon this question a few days ago I said that this register of the land office had, in stronger language than I could command, been condemned by the Secretary of the Interior and condemned by the President of the United States. Yet, sir, since the 1st day of July last, these corrupt officers have been permitted to remain in office, to adjudicate upon the rights of honest citizens, and they are there to-day adjudicating upon cases in which their own fraudulent acts are the gist of the controversies.

Mr. Chairman, I said in my previous remarks that these officers were permitted to remain there by the President and the Secretary of the Interior after being condemned by both as corrupt and unworthy. When I said that, I stated only the facts, and I would not withdraw therefrom one word. Yet, sir, an improper reflection upon the Secretary of the Interior may be drawn from those facts, and I expected some gentleman on the other side of the House, representing the State which I have the honor in part to represent, to rise here and defend the Secretary of the Interior from the imputation the facts warrant. As no gentleman on that side has seen proper to do so, it is my duty and pleasure as a Representative of that State to say that the Secretary of the Interior is a citizen of our State—one in whom we have a just pride.

We know him; we believe him to be an honest man; and this letter, with its burning words of indignation, the indignation of his honest heart at the corruption of these officials of his Department, entitles him to have it said here by me that those officials are not there to-day by his act or consent, but are there because his hands are tied by a higher power that retains them there in payment for political services given in aid of those in higher authority. In the name of honest citizens who expect to acquire title to homes in No Man's Land, I protest against leaving the adjudication of the titles of those lands in the hands of those officials, denounced as corrupt by the President and yet retained in office by him.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I do not understand what much of what the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. TARSNEY] has said has to do with the amendment offered by him—a proposition that has no relation to the field of discussion which he has entered upon, and to which, so far as I am concerned, no reply will be made.

I simply desire to say that the committee thought it right that four land offices should be provided for Oklahoma; and in this nineteenth section we supposed we had made ample provision in that respect. There are two land offices there now; and this section provides for four, which would give two additional offices. But to avoid any controversy I think the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri may be accepted, as it seems to me entirely proper that one of these offices should be located in No Man's Land. Undoubtedly one would be located there; but, to avoid ambiguity or uncertainty, I am quite willing that the amendment should be adopted.

The amendment of Mr. TARSNEY was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 12. That it is hereby made the duty of the Commissioner of the General Land Office to carefully examine each claim before issuing a patent to the claimant; the entryman shall be required to make full proofs, and unless it shall appear that the claim was taken in good faith, and that there has been full performance of all the terms and requirements of law, he shall refuse a patent and declare all prior proceedings before him in such case to be null and void. All persons settling on lands under the provisions of this act shall be required to select the same in square form, as near as may be, and to maintain a continuous personal residence of five years on the land, and to improve and cultivate the same for that period in the manner required by the homestead laws, and that the provision of section 2305 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, entitled "Homesteads," shall apply to this act: Provided, That registers and receivers of the land offices in the Territory of Oklahoma shall have the power to subpoena witnesses and to compel their attendance in all land contests instituted in their respective offices; but the party desiring the attendance of such witnesses shall advance the fees for one day's attendance and for mileage to and from the residence of such witnesses at the same rates allowed in the courts of the Territory.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to amend the section just read by adding the provision which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

No person who shall be at the time seized in fee-simple of 160 acres of land in any State or Territory shall be entitled to enter land covered by the provisions of this act.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, in 1841, when our public domain seemed to be entirely boundless, persons, even under the pre-emption law, were not permitted to enter public land if they owned in any State or Territory 320 acres. That was the law fifty years ago. Now here are lands that are to be paid for at a higher price than we have ever required heretofore. The country is full of landless people who need homes for themselves, their wives, and their children. The number of such persons is increasing every year. It does seem to me the country can not afford to deprive its landless citizens of the opportunity of obtaining land by permitting persons of ample means to acquire land within the limits of our small remaining public domain. I trust there will be no opposition to this amendment.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] will reflect a moment he will see that his proposition would work manifest injustice to a great number of poor people. Under such a provision, the man who already owns 160 acres of land, but which is so heavily mortgaged that there is no hope of redemption, would be prevented from going into this Territory and selecting a piece of land. It seems to me it is not right to make any such prohibition. There are men in the gentleman's own State who own, perhaps, 160 acres of land, but who, by reason of financial difficulties, have had to mortgage their land, which would sell to-day for but little more than the amount of the mortgage. Yet, if these men should seek a new home in Oklahoma, they would be shut out by the gentleman's amendment from obtaining land there.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, fifty years ago, as I have said, when our public domain seemed without limit, it was thought proper to impose a restriction upon the entry of our public lands, even in cases where $1.25 an acre was paid. No person was permitted to make a purchase of the public land on those terms if he was already the owner of a half section of land. If that policy was sound then it is still sound now.

Mr. PETERS. I oppose the amendment for the reasons I have stated and for this additional reason: If a mortgage has been practically foreclosed by the court, although the title has not yet been confirmed in the purchaser, the person who has thus practically lost his title under the foreclosure of a mortgage would, under this amendment be cut out from the opportunity of obtaining 160 acres of land in this Territory. There are large numbers of persons in Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, Iowa, and Kansas who would be excluded under precisely those circumstances.

Mr. HOLMAN. On the other hand, my friend from Kansas will bear in mind that in his own State, in my State, and in my own neighborhood men of ample landed possessions have gone down into Okla-home and acquired under our public-land system a quarter-section of land, worth when acquired $10, $15, $20, or $30 an acre. Is this the way we are providing for the landless people of this country?

Mr. PERKINS. If the gentleman from Indiana will modify his amendment so as to exclude only those persons who have 160 acres of land elsewhere unencumbered, I for one will make no objection to the amendment.

I know there are many cases, as suggested by my colleague, where men have their homes mortgaged beyond hope of redemption, and who ought not to be excluded by this bill from securing new homes within the boundaries of this Territory.

Mr. MCADOO. Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] will be adopted. This House will be held to strict accountability by the landless people of the United States if that amendment is not adopted. The object of the land laws is that any honest man, the head of a family, shall have the opportunity to secure 160 acres of the public domain where he can establish a home for himself and family. That public domain has almost gone. By the last report of the Land Commissioner there are only five millions of arable land now the property of the United States. I warn you, gentlemen, when the last acre of the public domain has become private property and the landless people come to contemplate the new landocracy, the new barons of North America, then will come the great strain upon our republican institutions.

For myself I have been rather friendly to keeping up these large Indian reservations. I believe they have done much good. They have preserved the public domain at a time when speculators and land-grabbers, alien and domestic, have been taking up the acres of the public lands from the people. I have been loath to advance, with any degree of swiftness, so far as my individual vote is concerned, toward any further extension to the opening up of the public domain by making these Indian reservations part of the public land of the United States.

It has been suggested by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], as to the question of mortgage, that the mortgage can be dated at any time, and taxes and all other liens are incumbrances in the meaning of this section. At any rate there is no reason why it should not be made sure, where landless citizens honestly intend by industry to make homes on the public lands which belong to the people of the United States, that they alone should be interested in the making of these Indian reservations a part of the public lands.

Indeed, sir, you can not make the bill too sure, if there is any doubt about it, that these lands shall only be made a part of the public domain so that they may go into no other hands than those of the honest settler. It is for that purpose I am in favor of the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana.

I have heard it stated on this floor by gentleman from the western portion of our country that it seemed strange to them we who represent working communities in the East should take such interest in the land of the West. Why, sir, the land of a country is the life of it, the blood of it. You can not have a free republic unless the people are rooted and grounded in the soil where they toil, and the working people in the manufacturing towns in the East, in the great commercial centers of our country, are as deeply interested in the land question as the men who live on the frontier of the country. It is the burning question with the whole people of the United States. Every evil which affects Europe to-day comes from land. Whenever you get in this Republic a great number of tenant farmers, instead of the homes of the free landholders who now produce millions of bushels of wheat and corn, you will have a number of dependent serfs to go to the ballot-box instead of independent freemen.

Keep back the public domain as long as you can for the people of the United States, because the public lands are the safety-valve of Republican institutions in the United States. When this land is owned by corporations and speculators, when the foreigners who are now acquiring vast amounts of land in this country have supplanted the independent farmer with the tenant system, and the share system which leads to the tenant system, and the wholesale mortgage system which prevails in vast portions of our country, then we will witness the departure of the very pillar of American institutions, the independent farmer who owns his land and lives under his own roof-tree, owing obligation to no man and bowing only to God and his own conscience. [Applause].

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I agree with the general tenor of the remarks made by the gentleman from New Jersey in every respect. I desire, however, the attention of the gentleman from New Jersey and also the gentleman from Indiana for a few moments, while I remind them of a local proposition involved in the amendment. The amendment of the gentleman from Indiana provides that no person who is the owner of 160 acres of land in any State of the Union shall be permitted to take any lands under the provisions of this law in the new Territory.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is, under the homestead law.

Mr. SPRINGER. Under the homestead law. Now, if the amendment applied to lands hereafter opened to settlement there could be no legal objection. But if you apply it to a homestead already taken you present this difficulty—

Mr. HOLMAN. It can not apply to them, of course, for the rights are vested.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is just what I was going to suggest. But you do apply it to all homesteads taken under this act.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes; but vested rights can not be impaired.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is the point, and I want it so stated in the amendment; for this will leave it to the decision of the land officers to determine whether the provision shall be strictly construed or whether they may go behind the law and determine the question of vested rights. It does not specify in clear and unmistakable terms.

Mr. HOLMAN. I did my best to have it inserted in the other form.

Mr. SPRINGER. If the gentleman will modify the amendment in that respect, then it will be only objectionable in my judgment in one other feature, and that is that it singles out a man owning 160 acres of land and incapacitates him from taking any advantage of the homestead provisions of this bill under the general land laws, although he may not be worth a thousand dollars, while the millionaire, who has got his money invested in United States bonds, not taxable, may go into Oklahoma and avail himself of the provisions of the law to acquire additional land. This seems to me to be discrimination that ought not to be permitted in legislation. It is a discrimination against the poor land-owner and in favor of the great rich bondholder and monopolist, who has his lands in mortgages upon the farms of the Western States and Territories, but owns actually no lands.

So I hope the provision of the amendment will be modified in that respect in order that we may put this question beyond cavil as to whether it is intended to discriminate against the small landholders or whether it will treat the great monopolists in the same way and provide that a man who is worth in any State or Territory of the Union a thousand dollars over and above his indebtedness shall not be allowed to take advantage of the homestead provisions of this bill. Then it will be fair and just to all. In its present form it is a discrimination against the poor land-owners and in favor of the monopolists and bondholders.

Mr. DOCKERY. I was going to suggest that I was in hopes the gentleman from Illinois, from his large experience, would give us the benefit of it in this direction, so that in the preparation of this amendment we might get rid of the difficulty he suggests.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to modify the amendment, Mr. Chairman, by inserting the word "hereafter"—

The CHAIRMAN. That has been already done.

Mr. PERKINS. I propose what I send to the desk as an amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "land" insert "unencumbered at the date of the passage of this act."

Mr. SPRINGER. Let the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana be read as it would stand if the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas shall be adopted to it.

The Clerk read as follows:

No person who shall be at the time seized in fee-simple of 160 acres of land unencumbered in any State or Territory shall hereafter be entitled to enter land covered by the provisions of this act.

Mr. DOCKERY. The amendment of the gentleman from Kansas, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me would defeat the very object the gentleman from Indiana has in view; for all that is necessary in the world for any citizen to do in order to acquire a homestead in Oklahoma would be to encumber his homestead in the State.

Mr. PERKINS. Oh, no; it must have been done at the date of the passage of this act.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Indiana.

The question was taken; and the Chair decided that the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I think the committee must be acting under some misapprehension. The amendment of the gentleman from Indiana cuts out every man who may be the owner to-day—

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest that debate is not in order.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask unanimous consent to make an explanation of one minute. And then, if necessary, I shall have to ask a division on the question just taken.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PERKINS. The amendment of the gentleman from Indiana would cut out from the advantages of this act every man who may be the owner to-day of 160 acres of land in some one of the States or Territories of this Union.

Mr. HOLMAN. Not now, but at the time of making the entry.

Mr. PERKINS. It is an exception to the general law, and would deprive, as I have already suggested, every man who has a title to 160 acres of land, although it may be encumbered by mortgages in excess of its actual value. My amendment modifies it so as not to deprive those who may be the owners in fee of 160 acres of land, but upon which there may be incumbrances. Such lands may be encumbered beyond their value, and if the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana prevails these men are deprived of the privileges and benefits granted by the Government to its citizens in Oklahoma under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. MCADOO. I desire to submit a word in reply to the gentleman from Kansas.

The CHAIRMAN. Before the gentleman proceeds the Chair will state that there is a misapprehension as to the effect of the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas. The Chair will again put the question. The Chair will state that the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. MCADOO. Mr. Chairman, a single word on the point suggested by the gentleman from Kansas. The amendment proposed by the gentleman is to the effect that if there is an incumbrance upon the land under this act the party owning this property can take advantage of the provisions embodied in this bill and secure additional lands in Oklahoma. Now, in order to do that and to make himself eligible to take advantage of the provisions of this act and to get 160 acres more land in Oklahoma, all he would need to do would be to put a mortgage upon his land.

Mr. PERKINS. Oh, no; the amendment prescribes that the mortgage or incumbrance must be on the land at the date of the passage of this act.

Mr. MCADOO. Oh, he could have the mortgage antedated.

Now, the gentleman from Illinois says that this provision is in favor of bondholders and against the land-owners. But instead of mortgaging his land, he can sell it and put the money into his pocket. Now, if we are going to aggregate anything, let us aggregate money and segregate the land. I do not care if a man chooses to sell his land and put his money in his pocket, nor how much money he may have, but I certainly favor limiting the amount of land that a man may be permitted to take up; and for that reason I think the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas will nullify and render entirely inoperative the good effects to be secured by the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. PETERS. But the amendment to the amendment says that the land must be unencumbered at the time of the passage of this act.

Mr. MCADOO. All he will have to do will be to antedate the mortgage.

Mr. PETERS. That could not be done.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, it is evident that men looking to speculation in the public lands watch carefully the proceedings and progress of your legislation, and such a provision as this, announced months before it will take effect, will give them an opportunity of evading this provision by fictitious incumbrances on their land. No matter how trivial the incumbrance may be or how valuable the possessions of a man may be, he will be enabled under the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas to take 160 acres of land in Oklahoma as a free gift. A man might well afford to leave his valuable farm to his employe temporarily and go upon and acquire title to lands in Oklahoma, thus defeating the purpose and spirit of the homestead law. That law was intended to dedicate the public domain to securing homes for our landless people.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. PEEL. Before the vote is taken I hope the committee will vote down the amendment of my friend from Kansas, for I think if he reflects for a moment he will see that it will virtually destroy the homestead law itself. Under that a man has a right to take 160 acres of the public domain. Now, if a man has acquired in any part of the country 160 acres of land under the original homestead act, and voluntarily places a mortgage upon it for its value, or even half its value, he has had the advantage of the money at least.

Now, simply because he has placed himself in that attitude, to give him the right to take another additional 160 acres, simply because he has put an incumbrance upon it, gives him that much advantage over the man who has not placed himself in that condition. And I say it would be a discrimination given to a man who mortgaged his homestead, as it gives him a double benefit over the man who has not mortgaged.

Mr. MCRAE. Mr. Chairman, my colleague is right in the statement he made. This amendment ought not to prevail. I question further whether the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] ought to prevail unless it be made general in its application. I am opposed to making a law that applies to one part of the country and does not apply to other parts. If this be a declaration on the part of Congress that they mean to apply this to all the public lands of the United States, then I am in favor of it, but as a discrimination against the citizens of Oklahoma I am opposed to it.

But if you permit one citizen to acquire a title under the homestead law simply because the land he may have in the State from which he has moved is mortgaged and deny this right to the man who has kept his home free from incumbrance, you put a premium upon farm mortgages. This is not good policy, and it is not in keeping with the spirit of the homestead law.

In this line, tending to show the danger of farm mortgages, I ask the Clerk to read a petition of the Farmers' Alliance from the State of Kansas showing how this mortgage business is working; and from that, if true, it would appear that they are dangerous; that Congress, as far as possible, ought to discourage mortgaging homes rather than give a premium on them.

The Clerk read as follows:

The petition of the Farmers' Alliance says:

"Whereas the shrinkage in values on both real and personal property in the State of Kansas in the past two years has caused very great financial embarrassment among the farmers of our State, and in many instances the farmers have become unable, by reason of these shrinkages, to prevent proceedings in foreclosures, which are increasing to an alarming extent; we, the undersigned, electors of Kansas, therefore respectfully petition your excellency to call a special session of the Legislature of Kansas for the purpose of providing for the relief of our farmers, giving the mortgagee of a homestead at least two years in which to occupy, enjoy, and redeem, if possible, after sale of mortgaged premises, and to provide, also, for a stay of execution on all judgments on promissory notes and mortgaged bonds for a reasonable time after judgment, without bond."

Mr. MCRAE. This matter seems to have been sufficiently important for this great agricultural organization of that State to ask that the Legislature be called in extra session to relieve the people against foreclosures and grant stays of execution. Now, I believe that this amendment will encourage the mortgaging of homes. I want this new country settled by people who own their lands in small holdings, without incumbrances, if possible. I would not take from a man the right to mortgage his homestead or anything he has title to, if he wishes to do so and his wife consents; but I do not want Congress to do anything to encourage him to do so. If he is driven to that by misfortune, let him do it, but not till then. It is a matter of business; but, as a rule, it ought not to be encouraged, and ought not to be done except as a last resort.

Mr. PERKINS. If the gentleman is sincere, he must see that he puts himself in a rather inconsistent position. He offers that memorial as an evidence of the condition of the people of Kansas; and yet at the same time he says, notwithstanding that, this proposition ought not to prevail. If the prayer of that memorial be true, it is one of the best arguments in favor of and is the best evidence that this amendment should be accepted. If the people are in the condition recited in that memorial, as my friend suggests, they ought to be allowed to take homesteads in Oklahoma, as every other citizen will be permitted to do. I do not acknowledge that that statement is correct; but if the statement be correct, it is the best argument that this amendment ought to be accepted, and that the suffering condition in which they are said to be in that memorial should be relieved; and they ought not to be excluded from the privilege of entering another homestead.

Mr. MCRAE. That is a good argument to make against the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, but not a good argument for yourself.

Mr. DOCKERY. If the present condition continues, the homestead will have to be mortgaged very soon.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. MCRAE; and it was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is upon the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Indiana.

The question was put; and the Chairman announced that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. PERKINS. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 59, noes 50.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask for tellers on that.

Tellers were ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will appoint the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] to act as tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 82, noes 72.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MCRAE. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding the following after the word "void," in line 8: "Subject to an appeal to the Secretary of the Interior, as in other cases."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I offer this amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out all the section after the word "act" in the sixteenth line.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I will say to my friend from Kansas in charge of the bill that a few days ago a bill reported from the Committee on Public Lands relating to this very matter of summoning witnesses when their presence and testimony were desired passed the House. It covers the whole question in a general law, but I will suggest to him that I will be governed by his decision in the matter.

Mr. PERKINS. I know, Mr. Chairman, that the suggestion made by the gentleman from Missouri is true, that a general law has passed the House, and while it is correct so far as the House is concerned, has it received favorable consideration in the Senate?

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I have no doubt that it will receive favorable consideration because of the great necessity for such legislation.

Mr. PERKINS. I was in favor of the general law, and when this provision was incorporated in this bill that matter had been considered and discussed in the committee, and as we did not know whether the general bill might become law, as a matter of caution and safety we incorporated this provision in the bill, because it is very important to those people claiming these lands to have this provision.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. There is no doubt about its importance, but I think there might be a conflict if the general law and this one were also adopted.

Mr. PERKINS. I shall not resist the amendment, Mr. Chairman. The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 13. That lands entered in the Territory of Oklahoma shall not be subject to any judgment or lien obtained upon indebtedness contracted or obligations incurred prior to the issue of patents therefor, nor shall such lands be sold or contracted to be sold, leased or contracted to be leased, conveyed, mortgaged, or in any manner encumbered prior to final proof and the record thereof made in the office of the register and receiver of the district where the land is located; and any sale, lease, conveyance, or mortgage made, executed, or contracted for prior to such final proof and record shall be absolutely null and void; and all assignments, transfers, and mortgages of unpatented land entries shall be at the risk of the assignees, transferees, and mortgagees, who shall have no recourse against the United States for any failure of claimant's title before issue of patent. No entry shall be allowed of any homestead except to actual settlers thereon; and no preferred right of entry shall be given to any person by reason of claim of occupancy prior to the application to enter the land, except in cases of actual occupancy and continued residence upon the land to the date of the application to enter. And no right of an alleged settler as such shall attach to any land in the Territory until the date of his actual, bona fide and continuous residence upon the tract he proposes to enter; and his declaratory statement shall contain a true and full statement of the date and facts of residence on the land and last place of residence prior thereto, and detailed description of improvements, all verified by oath of the applicant and at least one credible witness, made before the register or receiver of the proper land office, as to all facts, except that proof of the applicant's place of residence may be made before any officer authorized by law to administer oaths; but the use of such affidavit in the Territory shall, in case of false swearing thereto, subject the party to the same penalty as though sworn to before the register or receiver of the proper office.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires the attention of the committee, particularly the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. STONE], as to the parliamentary condition of the amendment which has been offered by those gentlemen to section 12. The amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] was adopted and thereby made a part of the section. Then the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. STONE] moved to strike out all of the section after the word "at," in the sixteenth line, which was adopted, and in pursuance of that would carry with it the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, which clearly was not the intention of the committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. I was out of the House for a moment. When did the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. STONE] make his motion?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is quite accurate in his statement of the chronological order of the amendments. [Laughter.]

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I was not aware, Mr. Chairman, at what point the gentleman from Indiana's amendment came into the section. The purpose of my amendment was simply to strike out the proviso which included the last word of the section as printed.

The CHAIRMAN. By unanimous consent, the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Missouri will include the lines that he has named, specifying them.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. PICKLER. I call for the reading of the amendment that I submitted to section 13.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 13 by striking out all after the word "patent" in line 15 of said section.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the portion of the section that I have moved to strike out, for the same reason that I was opposed to the former section discussed this morning; that is, that this section undertakes to radically change the general homestead law, and, as I think I can demonstrate very clearly, imposes greater burdens upon settlers than ever have been imposed upon the settlers in any other State or Territory. The portion that I move to strike out reads in part as follows:

No entry shall be allowed of any homestead except to actual settlers thereon; and no preferred right of entry shall be given to any person by reason of claim of occupancy prior to the application to enter the land, except in cases of actual occupancy and continued residence upon the land to the date of the application to enter.

Now, in the settlement of that country a great many men went to Oklahoma last spring, settled on their quarter-sections of land, and then returned to their homes to raise a crop, intending to return in the fall, which they have done. This provision interferes with the rights of such men. It provides that no man shall obtain any right of entry by reason of former occupancy until he files his application to enter in the land office. That is wrong. The general law permits any man to settle upon a quarter-section of land at any given date, and to have ninety days after this date to file upon his land; that is, he settles to-day and is given ninety days to file. Now, these Oklahoma settlers should have the same right.

Again, I call attention to the further provision:

And no right of an alleged settler as such shall attach to any land in the Territory until the date of his actual, bona fide and continuous residence upon the tract he proposes to enter.

Now the man who settled on his land last spring and went home for six months had no continuous residence there during the summer. He made his settlement, his filing, under the general homestead law; and under the general law his residence is allowed to commence six months in the future; and in fact nearly all of the men who settled upon the land there did it in that manner. I understand from members of the committee that this section has come down from some former legislation and that it is not understood exactly how it gets into this bill. It certainly inflicts great hardship on the settler.

But here is a still greater burden, and I beg special attention to this:

And his declaratory statement—

shall contain a true and full statement of the date and facts of residence on the land, and last place of residence prior thereto—

That, it seems to me, is an impertinence. I do not know why a settler should be called upon to tell where he lived last, but I do not complain of that provision particularly. It goes on—and detailed description of improvements, all verified by oath of the applicant and at least one credible witness, made before the register or receiver of the proper land office, as to all the facts except that proof of the applicant's last place of residence may be made before any officer authorized by law to administer oaths.

Now, whereas in any other State or Territory if I desire to settle upon a quarter-section of land as a homestead I go alone, without any witness, to the office of the clerk of the circuit court, make my affidavit and file upon the land, and that is transmitted to the land office, under this provision the settler in Oklahoma must go in person to the land office—and it will be 100 miles journey for many of them—and in addition to that (what is not required of a settler elsewhere) he must take with him a witness and have him swear to these facts before the register or receiver. This, I say, imposes upon the settler not only the burden of making this journey himself, however great the distance may be, but the further burden of taking with him and paying the expenses of another witness. Now, in my judgment, this is all wrong.

The remainder of the provision relates to punishing for perjury persons who give evidence before these officers. Now it seems to me this is all useless. Let the homestead law remain as it is in its application to this Territory. The general law is good enough for settlers elsewhere; it is good enough for settlers in Oklahoma. These excessive burdens should not be imposed upon them.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that debate on this section and pending amendments be limited to two minutes.

Mr. MCRAE. I want to move another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will have that opportunity.

Mr. MCRAE. If the proposition is to limit debate on the pending amendments, I have no objection, but on this section I want to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The entire question is in the power of the Committee of the Whole. The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Indiana to limit debate on this section and pending amendments to two minutes.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. MCRAE. I move to strike out section 13; and if my friend from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] desires to continue his remarks, I will yield him three minutes of my time.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I shall vote for the motion of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MCRAE] to strike out this whole section. The policy of the present Administration, and especially of the Secretary of the Interior, is more liberal toward settlers than the policy pursued for the last few years. I believe this is right. There has been such a strain to prevent the operations of "land-grabbers" and speculators, as they are called, that the pendulum has swung over too far in the other direction, until too great burdens are imposed upon the settler.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. TARNSEY] went out of his way in an effort to criticize the present Secretary of the Interior, of whom the worst that he could say was to read from the Secretary's criticism of officers who, as the Secretary thought, had been guilty of questionable practices. The gentleman might well stop there in his criticism, because for bravery as a soldier, for integrity as a citizen and public official, the present Secretary of the Interior is unassailable and his character is above reproach. Let us not impose on these people in Oklahoma worse burdens than are imposed on the people in other Territories.

Mr. MCRAE. Mr. Chairman, I see no reason why the general provisions of the homestead law, so well understood by all, should not apply in Oklahoma as well as elsewhere. The people there ought to enjoy its benefits and be made to comply with its requirements. The settlers in that Territory ought not to be required to do more than is required of other settlers under the homestead laws in other parts of the country. They should be permitted to make proof of their compliance with the law as to settlement and cultivation in the manner now prescribed by law. I think that sections 13 and 14 ought both to be stricken out, and the provisions of section 2301 of the Revised Statutes ought to be extended to this Territory for uniformity. I am opposed to making different laws for different localities. It is contrary to the established policy of our public-land system to permit the lands to be sold or encumbered before the patent issues, or to make the receiver's final receipts conclusive evidence of title behind which the Government can not go, as this section evidently intends to do. We have never gone to that extent, and there is no reason why we should undertake to do it at this time and for this territory. Here is a bill coming from the Committee on Indian Affairs, with no jurisdiction over public lands, dealing with only a small part of the public lands, proposing radical changes in the laws and the methods of procedure for entering and passing to patent public lands. It is evident that this committee has not given to the public-land features of this bill that consideration which its importance demanded.

In my opinion all we should do is to organize the Territory and extend the public-land laws over it. This bungling manner of dealing with the matter will in the end make much trouble to the Department and produce hardships upon the settlers. There are many objections to the subsequent sections, but they can not under the resolution heretofore adopted ordering the previous question be amended.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. MCRAE to strike out section 13, it was rejected, there being—ayes 9, noes 71.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the motion of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] to strike out so much of the section as he has indicated.

The question having been taken,

The CHAIRMAN said: In the opinion of the Chair the amendment is rejected.

Mr. PICKLER. I demand a division.

The question was again taken; and there were—ayes 32, noes 64.

Mr. PICKLER. I call for tellers.

Tellers were not ordered, only 11 voting in favor thereof.

So the motion of Mr. PICKLER was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 14. That any person entitled by law to take a homestead in said Territory of Oklahoma, who may have located and filed upon a homestead therein under and in pursuance of the land laws applicable to said Territory, and who has complied with such laws, may receive a patent therefor at the expiration of eighteen months from date of locating upon said homestead upon payment to the United States of $1.25 per acre for land embraced in such homestead.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I move to amend by striking out the whole of section 14. But I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] if he has any objection to the adoption of that amendment.

Mr. PERKINS. Oh, yes.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, strike it out.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, this section proposes to allow the homesteader to go out, after he has occupied his land for eighteen months, by paying the price of $1.25 per acre.

Mr. Chairman, I am opposed, or would be, to imposing any burdens upon the people of Oklahoma which would not be common to homesteaders throughout the country. I am opposed also to conferring any special privileges upon the people settling in Oklahoma which can not be enjoyed by the people of any other State or Territory in the Union.

I am utterly unable to see a solitary reason why the homesteaders in the Territory of Oklahoma should be permitted to enjoy this great privilege denied to homesteaders everywhere else throughout the country. It is certain, if it is intended to speculate in these public lands, it is one of the easiest methods which could be provided for that purpose. We have just stricken out the general commutation clause of the homestead law, and it will not apply to this bill when it passes. Persons who have entered homesteads under this law are allowed by sections already agreed to to have the benefit of any time during which they have occupied their lands heretofore. If they have been on them one year or eighteen months when this act goes into effect they will be credited with that extent of residence. It is now proposed that within eighteen months any homesteader can in the Territory of Oklahoma, by paying $1.25 per acre, receive his patent.

Mr. PICKLER. Will the gentleman allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I have no objection.

Mr. PICKLER. I think in the consideration of the burdens imposed on the settlers in the last section of the bill you ought to give them a quarter of a section each.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I have said all I desire to say.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Chairman, I do not think we can readjust the land laws of the country on this bill. [Laughter.]

I have a few words to say before this debate is closed, in reference to the merits of the Senate and House bills; but, in the first place, I wish to reply to what was said as to this Cherokee Outlet being a steal on the part of the Cherokees. I deny most emphatically that it is a steal or anything like it. On the contrary, Mr. Chairman, if even-handed justice were done by this Government to the Cherokees it would give them back the lands in North Carolina, Alabama, Georgia, and Mississippi which these Indians gave in exchange for the lands in this Territory, "including the Cherokee Outlet."

In the brief time at my disposal I propose to make a perfect deraignment of the title by which these Cherokee Indians hold these lands, which was unquestionably inherent in them originally to the lands in North Carolina, Alabama, Georgia, and Mississippi, and afterwards to the lands for which they exchanged them in this Territory.

In the first place, let me refer to section 3 of the act of March 28, 1830, which provides—

That in the making of any such exchange or exchanges it shall and may be lawful for the President solemnly to assure the tribe or nation with which the exchange is made that the United States will forever secure and guaranty to them and their heirs or successors the country so exchanged with them, and if they prefer it the United States shall cause a patent or grant to be made and executed to them for the same, provided always that such land shall revert to the United States if the Indians become extinct or abandon the same.

Here, in the most unequivocal language, it was made lawful for the President solemnly to assure these Indians with whom the exchange is made that the United States will forever secure and guaranty to them, and their heirs or successors, the country so exchanged with them, and if they prefer it the United States shall cause a patent or grant to be made and executed to them for the same.

Next let me read the third article of the treaty of 1835:

ART. 3. The United States also agree that the lands above ceded by the treaty of February 14, 1833, including the Outlet, and those ceded by this treaty shall all be included in one patent executed to the Cherokee Nation of Indians by the President, according to the provisions of the act of May 28, 1830. It is, however, agreed that the military reservation at Fort Gibson shall be held by the United States. But should the United States abandon said post and have no further use for the same it shall revert to the Cherokee Nation. The United States shall always have the right to make and establish such post and military roads and forts in any part of the Cherokee country as they may deem proper for the interest and protection of the same, and the free use of as much land, timber, fuel, and materials of all kinds for the construction and support of the same as may be necessary: Provided, That if the private rights of individuals are interfered with a just compensation therefor shall be made.

Is there not the utmost assurance here that the right and title of the Cherokee Indians to these lands shall remain undisturbed? Who can doubt it?

Then we come to the treaty of August 17, 1846. It is a treaty in which all united. It was the treaty after the patent was issued on the 31st of December, 1838. It reads:

That the lands now occupied by the Cherokee Nation shall be secured to the whole Cherokee people for their common use and benefit, and a patent shall be issued for the same, including—including the 800,000 acres purchased, together with the outlet west promised by the United States, in conformity with the provisions relating thereto contained in the third article of the treaty of 1835 and in the third section of the act of Congress approved May 28, 1830, which authorizes the President of the United States, in making exchanges of lands with the Indian tribes, "to assure the tribe or nation with which the exchange is made that the United States will forever secure and guaranty to them and their heirs or successors the country so exchanged with them; and if they prefer it that the United States will cause a patent or grant to be made and executed to them for the same, provided always that such lands shall revert to the United States if the Indians become extinct or abandon the same."

Can there be any reasonable doubt these Indians were guaranteed a perpetual outlet west and a free and unmolested use of all the country lying west of the western boundary of the above-described limits, and as far west as the sovereignty of the United States and their right of soil extend?

The treaty of 1866 is the strongest possible recognition of their right to this property. The patent was issued to them in 1838.

In 1866 (twenty-eight years afterward) the United States entered into this agreement with them in regard to the very land conveyed in the deed, in which the following agreement appears:

The United States may settle friendly Indians in any part of the Cherokee country west of the ninety-sixth degree, to be taken in a compact form, in quantity not exceeding 160 acres for each member of each tribe thus to be settled, the boundaries of each of said districts to be distinctly marked and the land conveyed in fee-simple to each of said tribes, to be held in common or by their members in severalty, as the United States may decide.

Such lands thus disposed of to be paid for to the Cherokee Nation at such price as may be agreed on between the said parties in interest—

What parties in interest? The Cherokee Nation on the one hand, as one of the contracting parties, and the friendly tribes that propose to settle there as the other contracting party—subject to the approval of the President; or, if they should not agree, then the price to be fixed by the President.

I say, Mr. Chairman, the title of these Cherokee Indians to these lands, including the Cherokee Outlet, is complete and indefeasible.

You now propose to extend a Territorial limit over these lands and thus throw a cloud upon their title. Is it just? On the contrary, is it not most unjust?

I ask, Mr. Chairman, in good faith whether we are not bound to respect the titles by which they hold these lands upon which they live and which have been guaranteed to them by the Government in the most solemn manner.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposing to strike out the section.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 63—

Before the announcement of the negative vote,

Mr. SPRINGER. I make the point that 4 o'clock has arrived.

The CHAIRMAN. On this question the ayes are 63 the noes 70.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The hour of 4 o'clock having arrived, the bill will now be reported to the House under the special order.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. PAYSON reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill S. 805 (the Oklahoma bill) and the House substitute therefor, had directed him to report the same back with certain amendments to the substitute in accordance with the resolution adopted by the House yesterday.

The SPEAKER. The first question is on agreeing to the amendments, which will be read. Is a separate vote demanded?

Mr. HOOKER. I think we had better have a separate vote on the various amendments, for this matter has gotten to such a stage now, and is in such a state of conglomeration, that even the committee do not understand what it is.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 3 by adding after the word "Territories," in line 6, the words "and who shall be qualified electors of the Territory."

The amendment was adopted.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out, in lines 27 and 28, in section 3, the words "has not been a bona fide resident of said Territory for sixty days previous to said election" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "are actual residents of said Territory at the time of the passage of this act."

The amendment was adopted.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

Amend section 4, lines 15 and 17, by striking out the word "governor" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "Secretary of the Interior."

The amendment was adopted.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

Add to section 4 the words "provided the county sites located by this act may be changed in such manner as the Territorial Legislature may provide."

The amendment was adopted.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

Amend section 4 by striking out the word "six," in the third line, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "seven;" also amend by adding the words "and the Seventh County" after the words "the Sixth County," in the sixth line of section 4.

Also by adding the following words after the word "Beaver," in the twentieth line: "The county seat of the Seventh County shall be at Stillwater, and said county shall embrace the northeast corner of the Territory."

The amendment was adopted.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

In lines 6 and 7 of section 6 strike out the following words: "or where the contract was made or the cause of action accrued."

The amendment was adopted.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

Amend section 7 by inserting after the word "Territory," in line 6, the following: "Provided, That section 2139 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall be enforced in the said Territory until after the adjournment of the first session of the Legislative Assembly of said Territory."

The question was taken; and on a division there were—yeas 87, noes 88.

Mr. PERKINS, Mr. PETERS, and others demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 133, nays 104, not voting 92; as follows:

So the amendment was adopted.

The following pairs were announced until further notice:

Mr. BECKWITH with Mr. COMPTON.

Mr. BROWER with Mr. BLAND.

Mr. FEATHERSTON with Mr. DARGAN.

Mr. WHEELER, of Michigan, with Mr. PERRY.

Mr. BELDEN with Mr. DUNPHY.

Mr. STURBLE with Mr. STAHLNECKER.

Mr. CLARK, of Wisconsin, with Mr. BARWIG.

Mr. GIFFORD with Mr. SKINNER.

Mr. SCULL with Mr. JASON B. BROWN.

Mr. MORSE with Mr. GOODNIGHT.

Mr. RANDALL, of Massachusetts, with Mr. ANDREW.

Mr. FRANK with Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi.

Mr. WILSON, of Kentucky, with Mr. PAYNTER.

Mr. WILBER with Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania.

Mr. SPOONER with Mr. GRIMES.

Mr. LEHLBACH with Mr. DIBBLE, until Wednesday morning.

Mr. KNAPP with Mr. MUTCHLER, on all political questions until Monday, March 17.

Mr. STEWART, of Vermont, with Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia, until Tuesday next.

Mr. RAINES with Mr. WILEY, on the Oklahoma bill.

Mr. THOMPSON with Mr. ANDERSON, of Mississippi, on this bill.

Mr. KETCHAM with Mr. BUNN, for the rest of the day.

Mr. O'FERRALL with Mr. VANDEVER, for the rest of the day.

Mr. ROCKWELL with Mr. ELLIOTT, for the rest of the day.

Mr. BINGHAM with Mr. BLOUNT, for the rest of the day.

Mr. STIVERS with Mr. CRAIN, for this day.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR with Mr. BLANCHARD, for the rest of the day.

Mr. LANSING with Mr. NORTON, for this day.

Mr. KENNEDY with Mr. HAYNES, for this day.

Mr. WATSON with Mr. GIBSON, for the rest of the day.

Mr. BOWDEN with Mr. MCRAE, for the rest of the day.

Mr. HOUK with Mr. ENLOE, on this vote.

Mr. MORSE. I am paired with the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. GOODNIGHT] on political questions, but I do not consider this a political question, and accordingly have recorded my vote.

Mr. PETERS. I desire to say that my colleague [Mr. TURNER] is absent sick at his room, and I was not able to obtain a pair for him. If present he would have voted "yea."

Mr. DUNPHY. I am announced as being paired with Mr. BELDEN, but I have recorded my vote, as I do not regard this as a political question.

Mr. ROWLAND. My colleague [Mr. BUNN] is absent sick.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. JASON B. BROWN] is detained from the House by sickness.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a statement, and if under that statement I am entitled to vote under the rule I desire to do so. I was in the Hall when the second roll-call was made, but at the time when my name was reached I was engaged in the examination of a matter that is pending before Congress and did not hear my name. If under that statement I am entitled to vote, I desire to do so.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman would not be entitled to vote.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, I was sitting in my seat during the roll-call and did not hear my name called.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman listening, so that he thinks his name was not called?

Mr. HOPKINS. I was not listening specially.

The SPEAKER. Then the Chair is not allowed to entertain the request of the gentleman to vote.

Mr. YARDLEY. I voted "yea," but the Clerk has announced me as being paired.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. ROGERS] is absent on account of sickness.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask that the reading of the names be dispensed with.

Mr. HOPKINS. I object.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

Amend section 8 by striking out all after the word "States," in line 10, and inserting the following: "And any person residing in the Territory of Oklahoma in whom there is Indian blood shall have the right to invoke the aid of the courts therein for the protection of his personal property as if he were a citizen of the United States."

Mr. SPRINGER. I rise to a question of order. Was that amendment that the Clerk read adopted?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that the amendment was adopted.

Mr. PERKINS. That amendment was not accepted in Committee of the Whole, and I make the point of order against it.

Mr. HOOKER. Oh, yes; it was adopted in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PERKINS. I am mistaken. I was thinking of the amendment offered by the gentlemen from Georgia [Mr. BARNES].

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

Amend by inserting after the word "States," in line 8 of section 10, the following words: "Except section 2301 of the Revised Statutes, which shall not apply."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

Amend, after the word "States," in line 34 of section 10, by inserting the following words: "Except section 2301 of the Revised Statutes, which shall not apply."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

Add to section 10 the following:
"Provided, however, That no part of the land embraced within the Territory hereby created shall inure to the use or benefit of any railroad corporation (except the rights of way and land for stations heretofore granted to certain railroad corporations), nor shall any provision of this act or any act of any officer of the United States done or performed under the provisions of this act or otherwise invest any corporation owning or operating any railroad in the Indian Territory or Territories created by this act with any land or right to any land in either of said Territories; and this act shall not apply to or affect any lands which upon any condition on becoming a part of the public domain would inure to the benefit of or become the property of any railroad corporation; and any question that shall arise under this provision shall be referred by the Secretary of the Interior to the Attorney-General for his opinion thereon."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

Amend by striking out all of section 11, after the word "proof," in the eleventh line.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

Amend section 11 by adding thereto the following proviso:
"Provided further, That the lands in this section declared a part of the public domain of the United States and hereby opened to settlement are hereby created into a public land district, and the President is hereby empowered and directed to locate land offices for the same in said district, and to appoint, in conformity with existing law, a register and receiver for said land office; and for the purpose of carrying out this provision the sum of $2,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated."

Mr. TARSNEY. That amendment, Mr. Speaker, belongs properly to section 10. It was agreed to as an amendment to section 10.

The SPEAKER. Was the amendment agreed to as part of section 10?

Mr. SPRINGER. We went back to that section and agreed to it.

The SPEAKER. In committee this was agreed to as an amendment to section 10, and will be submitted to the House as an amendment to that section.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

Amend by adding to section 12 the following words:
"No person who shall be at the time seized in fee-simple of 160 acres of land in any State or Territory shall hereafter be entitled to enter land covered by the provisions of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

Amend section 12 by adding the following words after the word "void," in line 8: "Subject to an appeal to the Secretary of the Interior, as in other cases."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

Amend section 12 by striking out all of the section after the word "act," in the sixteenth line, down to and including the word "Territory," in the twenty-third line, being the words following: "Provided, That the registers and receivers of the land offices in the Territory of Oklahoma shall have the power to subpoena witnesses and compel their attendance in all land contests instituted in their respective offices; but the party desiring the attendance of such witnesses shall advance the fees for one day's attendance and for mileage to and from the residence of such witnesses at the same rates allowed in the courts of the Territory."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is upon agreeing to the substitute as amended.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to ask the Chair whether a certain amendment offered by myself yesterday can be voted upon under the order of the House. I will state the facts as succinctly as possible. A portion of the special order under which we are acting reads as follows:

And at 4 o'clock on said day the committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been agreed to, and thereupon, etc.

Yesterday these proceedings occurred in Committee of the Whole:

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. I ask the gentleman to withhold that motion for a moment until I make a request that an amendment which I have prepared be printed in the RECORD, to be considered as pending to-morrow when the previous question operates.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey sends to the desk an amendment, which will be printed in the RECORD and be considered as pending when the previous question operates.

Thereupon follows the amendment, which appears on page 2234 of the RECORD. My inquiry is whether this leave granted in Committee of the Whole is such an enlargement of the order of the House as to bring that amendment before the House for action, the Committee of the Whole having risen before the amendment was reached because of the expiration of the period, to wit, the arrival of 4 o'clock?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is not. The question is upon agreeing to the substitute.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Speaker, before that question is put I wish to say a word. I did not hear the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN] distinctly, but I presume he was calling attention to an amendment offered by him yesterday, to strike out certain sections of the bill. The amendment was offered under these circumstances, as I understand: It was to be considered as a pending amendment, to be voted upon like other amendments; and while it might not have been reached in Committee of the Whole, yet it was a pending amendment, and I think that under a fair construction of the order amending the rules for the special purpose of passing this bill, amendments pending at the time when the committee rose may be voted upon in the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not see how the committee can enlarge the resolution of the House.

Mr. HOOKER. That would not enlarge it.

The SPEAKER. The resolution says "such amendments as may have been agreed to." The question is upon agreeing to the substitute as amended.

The question was taken; and the Speaker declared that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. HOOKER. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 160, noes 25.

Mr. HOOKER. I call for the yeas and nays.

The question was taken on ordering the yeas and nays; and they were refused, only 26 members voting in the affirmative.

The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays are refused, and the substitute is agreed to. The question is upon the third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PERKINS. I move to amend the title so as to conform to the new provisions in the bill. It ought to read "A bill to organize the Territory of Oklahoma, to establish courts in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes."

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. PERKINS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table. The latter motion was agreed to.

REPRINT OF A REPORT.

Mr. CUTCHEON. In behalf of the Committee on Military Affairs I ask that House Report No. 529, in relation to Army appropriations, be reprinted on account of errors.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MILLS. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas moves that the House do now adjourn. Pending that motion the Chair desires to lay before the House a report from the Committee on Enrolled Bills.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. KENNEDY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 1701) making an appropriation for the removal of a dangerous obstruction to the entrance of the harbor at Milwaukee, Wis.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. SPOONER, on account of a death in his family.

To Mr. SAWYER, for five days, on account of sickness and death.

To Mr. YARDLEY, for six days, on account of important business.

To Mr. STEWART, of Vermont, for four days, on account of important business.

To Mr. BUNN, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

To Mr. LEHLBACH, for five days.

CORRECTION OF A BILL.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to lay before the House the bill S. 410, which the House yesterday asked the Senate to return in order that it might be amended by the insertion of the word "Surgeon" between the word "Supervising" and the word "General," so as to read "Supervising Surgeon-General." The suggestion of the change was made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BAKER]. If there is no objection, the amendment will be made.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ARCHIBALD HUNLEY.

Mr. FITHIAN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5067) for the relief of Archibald Hunley.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of resisting his superior officer, and the decision of said military court-martial upon said charges, and all other charges which appear against said Archibald Hunley, late a private in Company H, Thirtieth Regiment of Illinois Volunteers, on the records of the War Department; and the proper Department of the Government is hereby directed to settle all claims for back pay, bounty, pension, or allowances as if such charges did not exist.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. WASHINGTON. Does it carry any appropriation?

Mr. FITHIAN. It makes no appropriation.

Mr. WASHINGTON. But will not the soldier under this bill receive additional pay or allowances?

Mr. FITHIAN. Whether there be any pay or allowances due him is a matter to be determined hereafter by the officers of the Government. The bill provides that the charge against this soldier be removed.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill, which was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MILLS. I now ask a vote on the motion to adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 3 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE AND OTHER COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

FOG-SIGNAL AT CUCKOLD'S ISLAND, BOOTH BAY, ME.

Letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, recommending an appropriation for the establishment of a fog-signal at or near the Cuckold's Island, in Townshend Harbor, Booth Bay, Me.—to the Committee on Appropriations.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, March 14, 1890.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, stating, in response to a resolution of March 10, 1890, that the questions relating to the withholding of patents for lands within the limits of the grant to the Union Pacific Railroad Company which are free from all claims and were not reserved at the date of the definite location of the company's road, are still under consideration in the Interior Department, and for want of time the inquiry in regard thereto has not yet been completed; and that, as the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office is part of the record in the matter under consideration and is subject to be affirmed or reversed by the action of the Secretary, it should not at present be promulgated.

The communication was read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution to which this communication is a response was offered by the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], and it will lie upon the table until he shall come in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in response to a resolution of March 3, 1890, a report from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs relative to persons who have been added to the membership of the Sac and Fox Indians; which was read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution to which this communication is a response was also offered by the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], and, in the absence of suggestion, will lie upon the table without further order until he shall come in.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills received yesterday from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs:

A bill (H. R. 347) to grant the right of way to the Galena, Guthrie and Western Railway Company through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 7509) granting to the Palouse and Spokane Railway a right of way through the Nez Percé Indian reservation in Idaho; and

A bill (H. R. 7754) granting right of way to Little Falls, Mille Lacs and Lake Superior Railroad across Mille Lacs Indian reservation.

The bill (H. R. 1590) to ratify an act entitled "An act to provide for a wagon-road between Mount Idaho, in Idaho County, and Little Salmon Meadows, in Washington County, in Idaho Territory" was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. MOODY presented a petition 34 citizens of Andover, S. Dak., and a petition of 21 citizens of the same place, praying for the free coinage of silver; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MANDERSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2455) making appropriation for the improvement of the military reservation known as Fort Walla Walla, in the State of Washington, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. SPOONER, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2714) for the erection of a public building at the city of Aurora, Ill., reported it with an amendment.

Mr. VEST, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment:

A bill (H. R. 505) for the construction of a railroad and wagon bridge across the Mississippi River at South St. Paul, Minn.;

A bill (H. R. 507) granting the counties of Hennepin and Dakota, Minnesota, the right to build two bridges across the Minnesota River; and

A bill (H. R. 5667) to amend an act to authorize the construction of a bridge across Trail Creek, in the city of Michigan City, Ind.

Mr. WASHBURN, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2730) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the St. Louis River at the most accessible point between the States of Minnesota and Wisconsin, reported it with amendments.

Mr. FRYE, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2842) to establish wind-signal display stations at Thunder Bay and Middle Islands, Lake Huron, reported it with amendments.

He also, from the same committee, reported a bill (S. 3122) to amend section 4426 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, "Regulation of steam-vessels," which was read twice by its title.

Mr. VEST, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3876) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Red River of the North, reported it with amendments.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. VEST. I move that when the Senate adjourn to-day, it be to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

RATE OF INTEREST ON TAX ARREARAGES.

Mr. McMILLAN. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5179) fixing the rate of interest to be charged on arrearages of general and special taxes now due the District of Columbia if paid within a time specified, to report it with an amendment, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It provides that the rate of interest to be collected of any person owing arrearages of general taxes prior to July 1, 1888, or assessments for special improvements, including the laying of water mains, now due to and the liens for which are held by the District of Columbia, shall be 6 per cent. per annum, in lieu of the rate and penalties now fixed by law and of all accrued costs.

The amendment of the Committee on the District of Columbia was, in line 11, to strike out "April" and insert "June;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That this provision shall only apply to taxes and assessments paid on or before the 30th day of June, 1890.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

DISTRICT TAX SALES.

Mr. VANCE. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5825) prescribing the times for sales and for notices of sales of property in the District of Columbia for overdue taxes, to report it without amendment, and to ask for its immediate consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

It proposes to require the commissioners of the District of Columbia to prepare a list of all taxes on real property in the District, subject to taxation, on which taxes are levied and in arrears on the 1st of July, 1889, and each and every year thereafter (including all taxes due to the late corporations of Washington City, Georgetown, the levy court of the county of Washington, and the District of Columbia). The commissioners are to publish the same with a notice of sale in a pamphlet of which not less than 3,000 copies shall be printed for distribution to tax-payers applying therefor.

On the first Tuesday in April, 1890, and the third Tuesday in March of each year thereafter, the commissioners are to give notice which shall contain the name of each and every person in which each piece of property is assessed, together with the amount of assessment upon each piece, by advertising twice a week for three successive weeks in the regular issue of two or more daily newspapers published in the District, that the pamphlet has been printed and that a copy thereof will be delivered to any tax-payer applying therefor at the office of the commissioners, and that if the taxes due, together with the penalties and costs that may have accrued thereon, shall not be paid prior to the day fixed for sale the property will be sold, under the direction of the commissioners, at public auction, at the office of the collector of taxes, commencing three weeks after the first publication of the notice and continuing on each following day, Sunday and legal holidays excepted, until all the delinquent property is sold.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will ask if that is a House bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is a House bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then it is all right. I noticed that the other House had passed such a bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHRIST CHURCH PROPERTY IN WASHINGTON.

Mr. VANCE. A Senate bill quit-claiming the title of the Government to certain property in this city was passed by this body, sent to the other House, and was there slightly amended in the matter of designating more particularly the property. I am instructed by the Committee on the District of Columbia to report it favorably and recommend the adoption of the House amendment and to ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title of the bill will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 296) vesting in the vestry of Christ Church, Washington Parish, District of Columbia, all of the right, title, and interest of the United States of America in and to square south of square 1092 in the city of Washington, District aforesaid.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments of the House of Representatives will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 7, after the word "Parish," insert "otherwise called the vestry of Washington Parish."

Amend the title by adding, after the word "aforesaid," "this being an act to remove a cloud upon the title of said lot."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendments made by the House of Representatives.

The amendments were concurred in.

ANACOSTIA AND POTOMAC RIVER RAILROAD.

Mr. FAULKNER. The bill (S. 1083) to amend the act giving the approval and sanction of Congress to the route and terminal of the Anacostia and Potomac River Railroad, in the District of Columbia, was passed by the Senate and subsequently by the House of Representatives with an amendment. I am instructed by the Committee on the District of Columbia to report back the amendment and move the concurrence of the Senate therein.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the House of Representatives will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 14, after the word "street," insert:

Provided, That so much of the act of August 1, 1883, as authorized the company herein named to lay its tracks on Seventh street, east, between M and G, is hereby repealed.

The amendment was concurred in.

SUGAR-BEET INDUSTRY OF BOHEMIA.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing to report back favorably (with a report which I ask may be printed) a resolution referred to the Committee on Printing, which was submitted by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. PADDOCK] on the 12th instant; and I ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed 5,500 copies of the Sugar-Beet Industry of Bohemia, a report by Commercial Agent Hawes, of Reichenberg, 5,000 for the use of the Senate and 500 for the use of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. MANDERSON. I wish to say that the printing of this report is desired by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. It has been examined by the Committee on Printing, and it is found that the cost of printing 5,500 copies will be a little over $200. The document contains very valuable information upon this subject, which undoubtedly should be given to the public interested in the question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. DOLPH (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3114) for the adjudication and payment of Indian depredation claims; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. DOLPH. This bill was prepared by a gentleman who has given a great deal of attention to these claims. I have glanced through it and believe it contains some valuable provisions, and I call the special attention of the chairman of the committee to it. I move that it be referred to the Select Committee on Indian Depredations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FAULKNER introduced a bill (S. 3115) to punish the unlawful appropriation of the use of the property of another in the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3116) to punish the carrying or selling of deadly or dangerous weapons within the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3117) for the relief of Levi Teets; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HIGGINS introduced a bill (S. 3118) to establish a circuit court of appeal; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HIGGINS. I wish to state that this is a substitute for the bill (S. 2619) to establish a circuit court of appeals, previously introduced by me. I ask that the Committee on the Judiciary be discharged from the further consideration of that bill, and that it be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. CASEY introduced a bill (S. 3119) granting a pension to William Wansbrough; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PIERCE introduced a bill (S. 3120) to amend an act for the relief of the Sioux Indians at Devil's Lake agency, North Dakota; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland, introduced a bill (S. 3121) for the relief of John R. Bond; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. EVARTS introduced a bill (S. 3123) to amend an act to prohibit the importation and immigration of foreigners and aliens under contract or agreement to perform labor in the United States, its Territories, and the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3124) granting a pension to Catherine S. Lawrence; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CHANDLER introduced a bill (S. 3125) for the relief of A. N. Kimball, and sureties on his official bond as receiver of public moneys; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. ALLISON introduced a bill (S. 3126) to construct a public building at Oskaloosa, Iowa, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. MANDERSON introduced a bill (S. 3127) amending an act entitled "An act to constitute Lincoln, Nebr., a port of delivery, and to extend the provisions of the act of June 10, 1880, entitled 'An act to amend the statutes in relation to immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes,' to said port of Lincoln;" which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SAWYER (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3128) granting an increase of pension to Henry Zell; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. MITCHELL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 390) to amend paragraph 3 of section 4693 of the Revised Statutes, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SAWYER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

ECKINGTON AND SOLDIERS' HOME RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. HARRIS. I move to take from the table Senate bill 157 with the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further morning business, that order is closed, and the Senator from Tennessee moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 157) to amend the charter of the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands this to be a Senate bill which passed the other House with an amendment. The amendment of the House of Representatives will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment is to add as a new section:

SEC. 6. That this act shall be considered as an amendment to the act of June 19, 1889, granting a charter to the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway, and shall be construed as being subject to all limitations and conditions of said original act, except as specifically provided otherwise herein.

Mr. HARRIS. I move to concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives. The bill was laid over the other day at the instance of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], who was in his seat a moment since, but is not in his seat at this moment. I want the House amendment acted upon this morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senate ready for the question upon agreeing to the House amendment?

Mr. COCKRELL. What is that?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be again read.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the title of the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title of the bill will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 157) to amend the charter of the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the Senator from Tennessee will not insist upon that until my colleague can be here. He is in the building and will be here in a few moments.

Mr. HARRIS. I thought he was in his seat when I asked the Senate to take up the bill. I want the amendment concurred in this morning. I have sent a page to hunt for the Senator from Missouri, but inasmuch as he is absent at the moment I am willing to pass from it. However, I shall move again to proceed with it the moment the Senator appears.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let it be passed over informally.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not understand the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. SHERMAN. The bill being now pending, it may be passed over informally until the Senator from Missouri comes in.

Mr. HARRIS. Let it be passed over informally.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be passed over informally.

Mr. PADDOCK. I ask unanimous consent—

Mr. VEST entered the Chamber.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Missouri is now here. Let the amendment of the House be again read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the House of Representatives will be again read.

The amendment was read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment made to the bill by the House of Representatives.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, my objection to the bill, and I state it very frankly, is to that provision in it which gives to this company the right to construct additional overhead electric wires in the District of Columbia. Senators will remember (at least those who were members of the last Congress) that the question of overhead electric wires was discussed in granting the original charter of this company, and a resolution was passed by the Senate, after debate, instructing the Committee on the District of Columbia to report legislation forbidding the construction of overhead electric wires in this District. It is unnecessary to repeat the arguments pro and con had in that discussion.

While that matter was pending in the Senate the District appropriation bill was reported with a provision prohibiting the construction of overhead electric wires in the District after, I think, the 15th of last September. That was the settled rule and law of the District in the general enactment, as I understand it. The company proceeded with a haste which was remarkable to construct its overhead wires along New York avenue, to erect its poles and put up the wires there, and managed to finish the work before the limitation of time fixed in the general appropriation law arrived.

Now, I take my part of responsibility for not having objected to this provision when the bill was passed through the Senate. I did not know there was any such provision in the bill until my attention was called to it after it had passed the House of Representatives and come back to us with this amendment. I am informed, for I claim to be no expert in such matters myself, that under parliamentary rules the body of the bill as it passed the Senate can not now be reached unless it should be by an amendment to the amendment which nullifies the provision in the main body of the bill to which I have referred—either that or that the bill itself must be rejected.

I have no other interest in this matter than that of any other Senator. If the Senate now, in the teeth of the general enactment which was solemnly passed through both Houses of Congress, prohibiting overhead electric wires in this District, choose to violate that rule and to give this company the right to put up these overhead electric wires upon North Capitol street, one of the handsomest avenues in the city, of course I can stand it if the rest of the Senate have no objection. That is the whole case.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I do not understand the Senator from Missouri as objecting to the House amendment. His objection goes to the bill as it passed the Senate and as it passed the House of Representatives.

I have once or twice before stated upon this floor, and I will now restate, that there is not an electrical expert in America who will not assure the Senator from Missouri, and every other Senator, that an electric current with an energy of 500 volts or less never endangers animal life; that is not hurtful to man or brute; and that a current with an energy of 500 volts is more than equal to propelling any line of street cars within the limits of the District of Columbia.

But, notwithstanding the objection of the Senator from Missouri, the executive authority of this District, composed of three commissioners, whose duty it is to look well and carefully to the public interests within this District, recommended the passage of this bill as it is. A committee of nine Senators, especially appointed to look after District interests and District affairs, with absolute unanimity reported this bill. The Board of Trade of the city of Washington have recommended its passage in its present form. A large number of persons outside have recommended it. The Senate by its vote has recommended it. The other House by its vote has recommended it. The whole world, so far as it has been consulted, seems to be decidedly in favor of it, except the Senator from Missouri.

I leave the Senate to decide between the Senator from Missouri and the District commissioners, the Senate Committee on the District of Columbia, the action of the two Houses of Congress. I ask that the House amendment be concurred in, which will end this controversy for the present.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] speaks of the action of the two Houses of Congress. The action of the two Houses of Congress was to the effect that no overhead electric wires should be put up in this District after the 15th of September last.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator will allow me to say that when he comes to scrutinize the legislation I think he will find that he states it very much too strongly, but I do not care to go into that, and I do not intend to do so. But when I spoke of the action of the two Houses I spoke of their action upon this bill, and the Senator from Missouri will remember that when this bill was under consideration in the Senate he and I debated this electric feature here and then.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I have no recollection of ever having noticed this provision in this bill until the bill came back from the House of Representatives, and I immediately entered my dissent to it as soon as I made that discovery. If anything was said in debate between the Senator from Tennessee and myself, it was not upon that feature of this bill at all, for I solemnly aver that I knew nothing about it, I have no recollection of it, and my attention was not called to it, or I should most unquestionably have objected at the time.

The Senator says the action of Congress is indicated by the passage of this bill. This bill passed through the Senate without any attention being called to this clause in it which permits this company to violate the general provision that was incorporated in the general District appropriation bill as it was passed during the last year. Then the question was debated in the Senate. The provision prohibiting the erection of overhead electric wires was resisted strenuously by the Senator from Tennessee, and after a discussion lasting through the best part of two or three days the District of Columbia Committee was instructed to report a resolution against this sort of thing. Now it is proposed by this same corporation, which then rushed the work through, put up its posts upon New York avenue, and erected overhead wires, in the very first amendment that is proposed to its charter, to violate the general provision of law.

I assume the responsibility of oversight or ignorance, or whatever it may be, in permitting this bill to go through the Senate as it is, but it does not change my opinion; and on that assumption of responsibility I reiterate my opposition to the whole system of overhead electric wires in this District.

Mr. HALE. The Senator will remember, in the line in which he is speaking, that after the contest to which he has alluded the best that Congress could do to preserve any rights, either in law or equity, that these electric companies had ever, in their discretion, condescended to allow them, was to provide that, instead of removing their wires entirely, they should be placed underground whenever the commissioners deemed that that was safe. The upshot of that is, as the Senator says, that we should have no electric wires overhead. The best that Congress would vouchsafe to these companies was that they might be permitted to put them under ground.

Mr. VEST. That is so.

Mr. HALE. The provision is found on page 804 of the statutes of last year.

Mr. VEST. I wish the Senator would read it.

Mr. HALE. This is the provision giving that permission:

That the commissioners of the District of Columbia may hereafter, under such reasonable conditions as they may prescribe, authorize the overhead wires of any telegraph, telephone, or electric-light company to be laid under any street, alley, highway, footway, or sidewalk in the District, whenever, in their judgment, the public interest may require the exercise of such authority, such privileges as may be granted hereunder to be revocable at the will of Congress without compensation, and this authority to continue only until the termination of the Fifty-first Congress.

Mr. VEST. That is my understanding of the condition of the legislation now. I do not propose to go into the general subject of the future or the business of the future in the construction of overhead electric wires. The reviews of the country have been full of that discussion by Mr. Westinghouse and Mr. Edison; experts have given their opinion, and some have said that 500 volts of electricity shot into a human being do not endanger life. I simply say for myself that I want no such experiment on my body or that of any friend. We know that in the city of New York this discussion has resulted in the prohibition of overhead electric wires and the officers of the companies holding that monopoly there have refused to put their wires under ground. Such is the consensus of opinion in the municipalities of the country to-day, as I understand, and if electricians have changed their opinion it has not changed the opinion of the American people in regard to this matter.

No man driving his vehicle along the route of one of the roads that these electric wires are over wants to be exposed to the accident of the wire being detached and killing the animal he is driving, and perhaps himself or a member of his family, and I say now, as I said in a former debate, that one human life ought to be more to the Congress of the United States than all the expenditure of money or consideration of convenience on the part of any corporation. We know what has been the result elsewhere, and when an accident happens here we shall be told that it will not happen again. That is no remedy to the man who, or whose family, has been killed, no matter what his position in life may be, however humble.

I propose to offer this amendment at the end of the amendment of the House of Representatives:

Provided, That no overhead wires shall be used within the limits of this city.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will send the amendment in writing to the desk.

Mr. HARRIS. And upon that amendment I raise the question of order that it is out of order because it does not propose to modify the terms of the House amendment, but it is proposed as a modification of the body of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment is to add to the proposed new section of the House of Representatives the following:

Provided, That no overhead wires shall be used within the limits of this city.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri proposes that the Senate agree to the amendment of the House with the amendment read.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, another answer that has been made to the Senator from Missouri—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee, the Chair understands, raises a point of order.

Mr. HARRIS. I do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will hear suggestions upon that point.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no desire to speak to the point of order.

Mr. HALE. What is the point of order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri moves to amend the amendment of the House of Representatives. It will be read again.

The Chief Clerk read the proposed amendment of Mr. VEST.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee raises the point of order that this can not be received, as not being germane to the subject of the amendment made to the bill by the House of Representatives.

Mr. HARRIS. It does not modify or change the principle of the House amendment, but is intended to affect and to change the body of the bill as agreed to in the Senate and as agreed to in the House of Representatives. It is intended for no other purpose and can perform no other office or have any other effect than that.

Mr. HALE. I only say that it would be a remarkable thing in the history of the Senate, so far as I know of, if an amendment of that kind were held not to be in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would be inclined to hold that the amendment, under the practice and custom of the Senate, was in order.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Can we have the amendment of the House again reported?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title of the bill will be stated, and the amendment of the House will be again reported, together with the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri.

The Chief Clerk read the title of the bill, the amendment of the House of Representatives, and the amendment thereto proposed by Mr. VEST.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, there is another answer to the Senator from Missouri besides the one made by the Senator from Tennessee, and that is that there is no authority in this bill to this railroad company to have overhead wires except in a region of the city now practically without inhabitants. As I remember the terms of it when it was up before and was thoroughly discussed, the branch that is allowed to have the overhead wires is the branch along North Capitol street beyond New York avenue.

Mr. HARRIS. Which is only one or two squares this side of the northern boundary of the city.

Mr. SHERMAN. I submit to the Senator from Missouri, whether it would be fair to this corporation to enact this legislation. It has, in my judgment, erected the most beautiful specimen of an electric railroad now in the United States, as has been stated and I believe correctly—the specimen from Seventh street to North Capitol street. They propose now to erect a line along North Capitol street and an extension to the Soldiers' Home, which will be a great convenience of a suburban character to the people of Washington, seeking generally in the holidays some retreat like the Soldiers' Home park. It is only one square from the present line of this railroad to Boundary street, so that it only goes through in the city of Washington one square probably of about six or eight hundred feet. Senators must be familiar with the ground and must know it. Beyond that it extends up a new road just opened without any houses or habitations upon it. It is purely a suburban extension of the present road. Now to require them in this space of six or eight hundred feet to establish a different system or mode of motive-power or replacement of the wires would be simply idle and futile.

Therefore it is that, although I am in favor of the amendment that has been read, which was made to the law last year, not, at present at least, to allow any railroads to a considerable extent to come within the city of Washington with electric wires, except under ground or in some condition of absolute safety, yet I have no question whatever in voting for the proposition to allow this company to continue its line along North Capitol street to the Soldiers' Home. To that there can be no objection.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Ohio will allow me to refresh his memory. This bill provides in explicit terms that on that branch within the traveled part of the city, if electric cables or wires are used, they shall be put under ground, and the overhead wires provided for are on that part of the line running out from North Capitol street, as the Senator has correctly stated, I forget whether it is one or two squares, but not exceeding two squares within the boundaries of the city and in a part of the city where there are scarcely any buildings on either side of North Capitol street.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator correctly states that this very bill provides that within the city proper in inhabited places the wires have to be under ground. But when you go to the outskirts of the city at the junction of North Capitol street and New York avenue, which we have all traversed over a hundred times, and probably I have a thousand times, and from that point on to Boundary street and so on to Soldiers' Home, there is no considerable number of inhabitants, and every one of them, so far as I know, is in favor of the measure.

Mr. VEST. I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio whether it is not the fact that that portion of the city is being rapidly settled up, and whether he did not agree with me the other day in the discussion of another measure here that if it were not for the nuisance of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad it would be settled from now on more rapidly than any portion of the city has been.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, Mr. President, the route of this proposed new road is not settled at all, because the great body of it, from Boundary street to the Soldiers' Home, the land has only been opened very recently, within a year, and there is not a house on the line, so that it is not settled. It is equally true that the construction of this railroad by a very enterprising citizen of this city—because it was mainly done by him—along its present route to the Catholic University has opened up to settlement a considerable region of country, and a very large number of buildings are being erected along the line of the railroad in consequence of the railroad being constructed there, and no part of the city is likely to be more prosperous and to grow more rapidly than the section traversed by this line of railroad.

I intend to stand by the protection of life in this city and never to vote for a proposition for a railroad within the heart of the city that will not secure to the people absolute security against the possibility of danger by electric wires, as to which there is some danger certainly; but I would not apply this rule to the extension of an existing line through a region that is not now populated and where everybody who is interested at all desires it to be constructed.

It was fully understood when the matter was debated the other day and the bill passed the Senate; this very thing was discussed; and I am only surprised that, with the usual prompt attendance of the Senator from Missouri and his usual observation of what is going on, he did not notice it, because I think everybody else who was here noticed the distinction made in this bill between the extension of the line through a new country and that which extended through the older and settled portions of the city.

Mr. FAULKNER. I want to state to the Senator from Ohio also, in the line of his argument, that the bill when it was introduced and submitted to the committee contemplated the road going through another street than North Capitol street, but when it was submitted to the commissioners of the District of Columbia they suggested that it would be more proper to require the road to go through North Capitol street, as it was a wide street and the poles could be put up there without any inconvenience to the public generally. It was through the advice given and the suggestions made by the commissioners of the District that this line was changed so as to cover about one or two squares within the boundary on North Capitol street, which is a very wide street.

Mr. SHERMAN. I know that North Capitol street is wider than even New York avenue. I think North Capitol street is 130 feet wide, and there is no difficulty in putting a line of poles in the center of the street and having plenty of room on either side.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] is more moderate in his desires as to extending these electric railroads throughout the city of Washington than either the projectors of this enterprise or some of the Senators who favor it.

If the argument of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] amounts to anything, it is that it will be a benefaction to the inhabitants of Washington for these roads to traverse their streets everywhere, and the experience of Senators in the past ought to teach them that this is simply an enterprise in the direction of making constant encroachment upon the highways and streets of this city.

These enterprises are not called for in the beginning by the inhabitants of any section either in the populated parts of the city or in the suburbs. A company or an individual purchases available lands outside of the populated parts of the city and seeks to open those lands by getting Congress to charter an electric railroad. The committees of the two Houses having the subject in charge and the bodies themselves are importuned until at last their consent is given upon the proposition that this is intended to be a suburban road. When this road which is the subject of debate here now was first chartered it was stated to the Senate under the most solemn and repeated asseverations that no attempt would ever be made to bring these dangerous wires, or wires which many people believed to be dangerous, into the populated part of the city; but no sooner had the company organized and built its road and developed its lines and began to look out than human nature prevailed with them and they sought to penetrate the other portions of the city, and the Senate may go on and may grant this little encroachment, may give this inch, and it will find in the end the ell will be demanded. You can not let these companies into a single street where the population of the city is now thickly settled but that it will be made a precedent for another demand, and if you let them into North Capitol street along the line described by the Senator from Ohio, while he is sincere in what he says now that nothing more will be asked for, he will find himself confronted within one year from now with a demand that it be extended farther and brought into all the great avenues and streets of the city that we ought to keep sacred for ourselves and our children and the future generations that will come here to this great city.

The argument, as I have said, of the Senator from Tennessee does not blink this. He does not commit himself to the proposition that he will not come in here afterwards and ask that these roads be extended over all our streets, but he boldly takes the offensive and declares that these roads are not only practical, convenient, and profitable, but in their operation are to the benefit of the public generally; and if there is anything to be derived from this argument it is that horse-railways and cable-railways, and underground railways should give way to electric lines placed overhead.

Now, Mr. President, whether or not the Senator can demonstrate to his satisfaction that the percentage of death or destruction or injury is very small under this system, still, as the Senator from Missouri has said, it has been tried in New York, and there have been casualties, calamities, accidents occurring there which have aroused the press and the public, and to-day they are committed against these electric wires overhead; but the companies do not cease their struggle there and here and they will continue it, and the only way for the Senate to maintain its ground safely is to hold these parties to the original conditions and keep them in the suburban regions—that is bad enough—and let them take care of themselves there.

Mr. PADDOCK. At Omaha, Nebr., a remarkably flourishing and active business town, we have, during the last year and a half, put in over 40 miles of the overhead wire system of electric roads. Before the commencement of the construction of our system we had the same prejudices, the same apprehensions as to the dangers and uncertainties of electric roads that have been expressed here by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] and the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], but after a year or more of operation of our system there is no citizen of Omaha who would not be glad to have it on every street in the town. There has been no death, no accident of any kind or nature, that I remember. We were satisfied by the investigations which were made before the actual work of putting up the wires commenced that there could be no danger, and by the operation of all the roads in our extensive system since we have become satisfied entirely that the apprehensions at first entertained were not well grounded, and we shall be very glad indeed, so far as that city is concerned, to have the entire street-railway system of the town of that character.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, perhaps in Omaha there has not yet been an occasion or a time when the overhead wires broke and fell down where people were passing. That is the test. An overhead wire or any highly charged wire, either for telegraph or motive power, is perfectly safe so long as you keep it perfectly insulated and do not touch it, just as the lightning in the heavens is, and the argument that because in Omaha no evil has happened in the space of a year would be an argument against all lightning-rods because a particular house without a lightning-rod had not been struck within the last year. It does not prove anything at all; but all the human experience that we have had in this country and every other shows that these overhead and highly charged wires, whether for motive power or telegraph purposes or for any other purpose, when their insulation fails, either by fracture so that they fall in places where people and animals are passing, or where they fall in houses so that the current is diverted from its safe and protected channel, a sad disaster always happens. There is no use of anybody denying it, and I do not know that anybody does deny it; and that is the case we have.

Now, what is the great public necessity for granting these extraordinary privileges, that we condemned a year ago by a tremendous majority, to this particular corporation? Have we any petitions from the body of people residing between here and the Soldiers' Home crying out for an overhead electric railroad? By no means. Senators in favor of it say that nobody lives there. What is it, then? It is a land speculation, and a railroad in connection with it to make lands worth more and bring them into market in a city that is not half filled up nor quarter filled up within the boundaries of Boundary street at this minute. That is just what is the fact about it; and therefore there ought not to be any great public urgency to allow these parties to put up on North Capitol street or anywhere else such wires as are dangerous to human life. If it be only the human life (if there is any distinction in human lives in the minds of these corporations) of a poor market-woman who is driving out to go to her home beyond the Boundary, her life is just as sacred, I take it, in the eyes of everybody but corporations as the lives of Senators or anybody else. Of course the quantum of danger is diminished in a lonely rural road because the number of people exposed to the danger is less; but the danger is there just the same, and if the breakdown happens at the moment of time when there is a passer-by there or a passer-by afterwards until the current is cut off or the insulation is destroyed, there follow disaster and death.

Mr. President, I notice that overhead wires are very curiously authorized in some other places by this bill than a few hundred feet from New York avenue up North Capitol street, as has been stated—a good deal more than a few hundred feet. I am not on the question of distances just now, but we will call it 800 feet. I will never dispute with the Senator from Ohio as to quantities, however much we may differ otherwise. This provides, first, that they may begin—

At the intersection of New York avenue and Fifth street, northwest, south along Fifth street, northwest, to G street, northwest, and thence west along G street, northwest, to the east line of Fifteenth street, northwest; and also beginning at the present terminus of its cemetery branch on the east side of Lincoln avenue—

Which, I believe, is out east here in the city somewhere; I am not sure of its location—and thence northerly along Lincoln avenue to a point opposite the entrance to Glenwood Cemetery.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is the name of the avenue going to the cemetery.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not know that the name makes any great difference. If it be the present road that goes up to that cemetery, it is a great public thoroughfare, where perhaps more people go in the course of a year, up and down from New York avenue to Glenwood Cemetery and to the top of the hill on the side of the Soldiers' Home, than in almost any other thoroughfare out of this city; and if that is the place, it is infinitely improper to put up overhead electric wires, if it be improper to put them up in front of this Capitol.

Now, the bill authorizes that, for its limitation is:

That if electric wires or cables are used to propel its cars over said streets from New York avenue and Fifth to Fifteenth street, northwest, the same shall be placed under ground.

Leaving authority to run it on Lincoln avenue, wherever that may go, from end to end or from point to point, as well as on North Capitol street, and all the way on New York avenue from North Capitol street to the Soldiers' Home. I am decidedly opposed to it, Mr. President, and I shall offer in a minute, with the consent of my friend from Missouri [Mr. VEST], a substitute for his amendment, something to strike at the root of the whole matter, the order of which, I take it, nobody will question.

Now, I want to say a word about North Capitol street, that is represented to be a lonely rural place. Perhaps it is, but anybody who will go to the north end of this Capitol and look out of its windows will see that North Capitol street is, in its original design and in its present outlines, perhaps the noblest avenue that there is in the whole District of Columbia. It has failed to become populated by the people of this town and by the people of wealth and leisure who come here, as it otherwise would have been, because of the nuisance near us of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, which occupies it for a long distance as part of its yards, and which, of course, obstructs the passage of people up and down it, and makes it a nuisance to everybody that owns property in the vicinity, and a nuisance to the Capitol itself.

If that thing were got out of the way North Capitol street, from here to the Soldiers' Home, would be the grandest avenue in North America or anywhere else, starting at the great north front of this Capitol and going in a direct line to the highest ground in the neighborhood of Washington, to that magnificent park in which the Soldiers' Home is situated. I do not propose, for one, to vote under any circumstances at any time, whether the ground about it be vacant or filled up, to put up these confessedly dangerous and deadly and unsightly structures.

When there are people enough living along there or capable of living along there to make it a public necessity for the convenience of people going to and fro from this Capitol to the other end of this great and magnificent avenue, as it will be, then there will be profit enough in the transaction for the promoters of a railway line, who are not building for charity or patriotism, but for profit, to put in a railway line, either of cable or underground wires, that will subserve the public interests and give them profit besides. That is what I think about it. Therefore, Mr. President, I move to amend the proviso of my friend from Missouri by striking it all out and inserting this as a part of the House section:

That the authority of said company by this act or any other act—

Which will cut them out on New York avenue, and from here out to the boundary—conferred to erect or use overhead wires in its operations within the city of Washington shall absolutely cease and determine on the 1st day of July, 1893.

That gives them three years and over to get out of New York avenue, and they say, and this bill provides, that their time for erecting overhead wires in North Capitol street shall not begin or be obligatory until the street is opened and graded, which must depend upon a proper appropriation by Congress and the tax-payers of the District of Columbia. Therefore, there is no immediate danger about this North Capitol street business, except, perhaps, for a few blocks, as my friend has said, they might run up there where it is already graded and probably used, just as they set up these New York avenue overhead wires within the boundaries of the District against the spirit and against, I believe, the legal effect of the statute we had already passed, in order to get ahead of the provision for its taking effect on the 1st day of September, if that was the day.

There is another thing I should like to ask while we are dealing with railroad corporations, whether we have got any evidence anywhere that this company has paid into the Treasury the 4 per cent. that the act of incorporation required on its gross earnings during the time it has been running, as it is said in the newspapers, so profitably and with such great success? That is not material to the passage of this particular bill, but it is an inquiry that I feel interested in making at this time.

Mr. VEST. I am willing to accept that amendment in lieu of the amendment I offered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont will be read, the amendment of the Senator from Missouri being withdrawn.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That the authority of said company by this act or any other act conferred to erect or use overhead wires in its operations within the city of Washington shall absolutely cease and determine on the 1st day of July, A. D. 1893.

Mr. PADDOCK. Mr. President, referring to the description or the characterization of this enterprise given by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] I desire to say, so far as I am concerned, that I know nothing whatever of the enterprise, have no interest in it, and know nobody interested or connected with it directly or indirectly. I gave my testimony as to the experience in Omaha respecting the system there, because I felt it my duty to do so in defense of the system itself, and a year's experience ought to be pretty satisfactory evidence as to the fact whether it is a safe system or not. There has been no accident in that city and the roads there pass through streets where more business is done than in any street in this town, and that of itself, I think, ought to be very fair evidence that it is a safe and secure system.

Mr. HARRIS. I dislike very much to detain the Senate a moment longer, but I want to state two or three facts.

I know that quite a number of deaths have occurred from electric shocks in this country, but in respect to every one of them that I have had the ability to run down and ascertain how they occurred, they resulted from the arc-light wire. The arc light can not be produced and maintained with an energy less than from 1,500 to 2,500 volts, and in respect to every one of them that I have had the means of investigating, there is not one single death of a human being traceable to a railroad wire, because where the road is ordinarily smooth and level four or five hundred volts give a power quite equal to propelling a train of street-cars.

The road under consideration has used the maximum of 400 volts. It has been in operation for now about a year and a half. It carried over 500,000 passengers in the first year of its operation, and not a single accident to man or brute has occurred by the operations of that road.

All the electrical experts in the country, as I said awhile ago, will give assurance as to the result of their experiments and their investigations and their knowledge of the subject that there is no danger whatever to animal life in a current of 500 volts. The old city of Boston, where more electrical experiments have been made, perhaps, than in any other city of the United States, having experimented largely with electricity as a motive-power and in every other way, about a year ago authorized the erection of overhead wires and the propelling of all the street lines within the limits of that city, in the most crowded as well as in the suburban parts, by overhead wires and electricity.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask the Senator if he does not know that the city of Boston has been governed for some time, as a good many people in that city think, much as New York was some time ago, and that the getting of a right to put anything overhead or anywhere else does not demonstrate either its safety or its propriety?

Mr. HARRIS. I take it for granted, as there is no clamor or no seeking to repeal the order that authorized a year or more ago the erection of overhead wires in propelling street cars by electricity by means of these wires, that there is no very great amount of alarm, no very great sense of danger, no very urgent desire to have that order repealed, or we should have heard something of the kind. Wherever they have been tried, so far as my knowledge goes, no accidents have resulted from railroad wires. The electrical accidents which have proved fatal have been invariably those resulting from the arc light. I do not remember an instance where the incandescent light, with its slow current, has produced an accident to human or animal life.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask the Senator a question if I do not disturb him?

Mr. HARRIS. Certainly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We have, I believe, some electric-lighting apparatus in this Capitol. I understand that to be the incandescent system, and not the arc.

Mr. HARRIS. We have both.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We will take the incandescent, then. Do I understand the Senator to say that he believes one of the power wires, if the insulation were removed and an expert or anybody else would put his hand upon it, would not be destructive?

Mr. HARRIS. If there be a wire, as there doubtless is, so far as the arc light is concerned—

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am speaking of the incandescent now.

Mr. HARRIS. My information from the Architect of the Capitol is that a current of 50 volts will run an incandescent light, and that a current of 200 volts will be amply sufficient for the incandescent lights of the Capitol. The Committee on Rules, having been informed that there was both a high and a low tension system in use in the Capitol, has the matter under consideration, and I doubt not will report a resolution which will admit no system requiring a wire to the Capitol charged with a current of more than 300 or 500 volts; and in the light of all the experience and investigation by electrical experts a current of 500 volts is absolutely free from danger.

Mr. MANDERSON. Mr. President, the objection to bills of this character is to my mind not so much an objection to their details as to the general principle upon which they are enacted. Here is another bill which proposes to grant to a corporation composed of private individuals a valuable franchise in this city. The city of Washington, by reason of its plan as to streets and the character of its population and the industries in which that population are engaged, certainly does not need that net-work of street railways which is needed by such commercial cities as Philadelphia, New York, Boston, and others that I might mention. But that there should be a bettering of present conditions and an increase of railroads there can be no question; and I suggest, as I did the other day, that the proper method for their construction is not that persons who may be interested in outside real estate, having a speculative interest in property outside, should be permitted to dictate a line of road by which their real estate shall be brought into market, but that there should be some demand either from a suburban or a city population along the proposed route to the commissioneers or to Congress praying that such road might be constructed, and the inception of the railroad should come from that demand for it.

When the demand is made, I submit that the District authorities and the proper committees of the two Houses of Congress should consider the advisability of the road, and, if it is well that it should be constructed, then it seems to me that these valuable franchises—for we know from the profits made by the street-railway companies that these franchises are very valuable—should be granted to those who are ready to pay for them, and there should be some method devised, and I hope that it may be by the committees of Congress on the District, by which these charters shall be given to those who are ready to pay the most money into the public Treasury for them. As it is now, these rights to the use of the streets are obtained to the immense profit of a few individuals, and while it is true that they are for the public convenience so far as the running of the cars and their use are concerned, there is no profit to the general public, which is taxed to maintain the streets over which the cars are propelled.

Now, so far as this road is concerned, I know but little of its proposed route. I have been over the streets and avenues that are mentioned, but not often, so that I am not very familiar with them, but I wish to add a word to that which has been suggested by my colleague [Mr. PADDOCK] with reference to electric-motor railways.

There are three methods of propulsion for electric tramways: one the underground-wire system, another the overhead-wire system, and a third, which is known as the storage-battery system. The only successful system, as I understand, has been the overhead-wire system. Where wires are placed under ground for the propulsion of street cars, for some reason there seems to be a dissipation of the electric current, and it can not be conserved so as to answer the proper uses, although they are running some railways in the country by that method. The storage-battery system has been objectionable thus far (although I expect to see it ultimately the system by which these cars will be propelled) because of the expense incident to the placing of these batteries in the cars themselves and the weight that is an incident to them: but I have no question that the electrical experts, who are making such marvelous developments, will find some plan by which both the expense and the weight will be reduced.

Electricity is a most dangerous element, as the Senator from Vermont suggests. An attempt to "chain the lightning" is one that is attended with danger always; but no one conceives that the wires over which telegrams are sent are particularly dangerous to the communities through which they pass. The poles that support them and the wires themselves are unsightly, and so with the telephone wires and poles, they are unsightly, but they are not dangerous, and yet they carry currents of electricity, and, as suggested by the Senator from Tennessee, the later experience with reference to overhead wires for the conducting of cars has shown that with the number of volts of electricity they are required to carry there is no danger to human life in them even when they drop to the street and come in contact with either man or beast.

Two or three years ago when a subject akin to this was under consideration, I opposed the putting up of any overhead wires in the city of Washington. I did so because I then believed, as the Senator from Missouri and others believed, that there was an element of very great danger in placing overhead wires in the streets of this city. Since that time there has been constructed an electric tramway out New York avenue, with overhead wires. I understand that there has been no resulting damage from its use so far as human life is concerned.

I have seen, myself, in the electric tramways referred to by my colleague, in Omaha, the workmen handle the wires when the cars were running and when the wires were charged with the full amount of electricity necessary to do the work. My experience with reference to these roads has been this: I have no interest in them; I do not own a dollar of stock in any of them, and have simply been observant of them because I was somewhat interested in the subject. It was proposed about two years ago to run one of these overhead electric tramways along a street on which I happened to own a small piece of property. I objected to it very strongly, and, with other property-owners, did what I could to resist, through that much-traveled street, the building of this railway and the putting up of these wires. The matter went into court, and finally it was decided that the road should be built, and about three miles of road were constructed a little over two years ago. I watched it with a good deal of disgust, and yet at the same time, with a good deal of interest, and I became a convert to the electric-tramway system, and until there can become system of storage batteries devised by which the cars can be propelled I believe the best system is the overhead electric tramway system. There was such a revulsion of public sentiment in that city that, after these three or four miles were constructed, the people were clamorous for the change of the horse-car systems of that city to the electric-tramway system, and the result of it is that today there are over 40 miles of overhead electric tramways in the city of Omaha, as suggested by my colleague, and they are rapidly replacing the horse cars.

Mr. PADDOCK. I will say to my colleague that the horse-car roads in our system will be almost entirely replaced by the electric motors during the present season.

Mr. MANDERSON. I have no question of that. I have no question that that change will very speedily be made. I think that any one who will investigate this subject will be satisfied that there is not the element of danger in it that is dreaded. If there was I for one would be heartily in favor of this proposed amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Are your streets level?

Mr. MANDERSON. In the business part of the city there are level streets, but back of it there are quite steep hills, and these electric cars climb the hills with great ease.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But it takes more power to do that.

Mr. MANDERSON. With the amount of electricity mentioned, the maximum of 500 volts, there is no trouble about running up any hill that you find in the cities on the Missouri River, and the bluffs are quite steep.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the diameter of the wire?

Mr. MANDERSON. It is a very small wire; I do not know that I can give its exact diameter, but it is a very little larger, if larger at all, than the usual wire over which telegrams are sent by the Western Union Telegraph Company.

Now, Mr. President, I think that one of the evils of the railway system of this city is the present horse-car arrangement. No man or woman rides upon these cars, especially those on Pennsylvania avenue and on Seventh street, without being pained and shocked by the suffering of the poor horses who are compelled to draw the cars, and I think in the interest of a decent humanity we ought to compel the horse-car companies to change their method of propulsion as rapidly as it can be done.

Mr. SPOONER. Or else they should get better horses.

Mr. MANDERSON. I should hate to see them get better horses, as suggested by my friend from Wisconsin, for the better the horse the worse I should like to see him abused. I do not think that horses ought to be used for any such purpose. They do not need to be, under the present system.

This bill, I presume, is beyond the reach of any recall. I should be glad to see it recalled, and I should be glad to see no further legislation in the way of chartering these railway companies to individuals until some such course as I have suggested shall obtain. But I felt it no more than due, as, with others, I joined in the attack here two or three years ago on the electric-tramway system, that I should bear testimony to the fact that not only the theorizing of the electrical experts, but the actual and practical experience of the communities in which these roads have been built shows that the fears of the Senator from Missouri are very largely groundless.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President—

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from Missouri allow the report of the committee to be read and then proceed with his remarks?

Mr. VEST. I have no objection to that course.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask that the report of the committee may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read, if there be no objection.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. HARRIS, January 20, 1890:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred Senate bill 157, has considered the same, and submits the following report:

A bill for the same purpose, and substantially the same as the one under consideration, was reported by the unanimous vote of the committee in the second session of the Fiftyth Congress, and passed the Senate, and was favorably reported by the House committee, but was not considered by the House.

The bill under consideration was referred to the commissioners of the District for such information as they could give as to the operations of the road, and especially as to the safety to the public in the use of electricity as a motive power, and their opinion as to the propriety of granting the extensions asked.

The report of the commissioners is here inserted, as follows:

OFFICE OF THE COMMISSIONERS, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Washington, December 23, 1889.

SIR: In compliance with the request contained in your letter of the 13th instant and the verbal request of Hon. ISAAC C. HARRIS, of your committee, the commissioners of the District of Columbia have the honor to return herewith Senate bill 157, to amend the charter of the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company, with the following remarks:

This railway commenced the operations of its cars by electricity a little more than a year ago. At that time the application of electricity to such purposes was largely an experiment, and serious doubts were entertained regarding its safety and practicability. During the past year the commissioners have watched this experiment and studied this problem with great interest. The results of experience have been noted from all parts of this country and Europe, and personal examinations of existing systems have been made.

As the result of these studies the commissioners have arrived at the following conclusions:

- (1) Up to the present time no method of operating cars by electricity through conductors laid under ground has been satisfactorily established by experiment.
- (2) The method of operating cars through overhead conductors is the only system which actual practice has shown to be a success.
- (3) Of the overhead systems now employed the commissioners believe that the one used by the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company, in which the conductors are supported by poles situated in the middle of the street, is the most satisfactory where there is sufficient width of carriage way for its employment.

(4) The commissioners believe that the electrical system employed by this railway, the electro-motive force of which can never exceed 500 volts, is as safe as any motive system ever employed by any railway. The Eckington Railway has never had any accident whatever resulting from its employment of electric motive power, and the commissioners believe this to be also true of all other electric railways now in operation throughout the United States.

The Eckington Railway has been so admirably constructed and equipped, its operation has been so satisfactory to the public, and its success has been so much greater than its most sanguine friends could have anticipated that the commissioners say without hesitation that the extensions provided for in this bill are generally in the public interest. They doubt, however, the advisability of authorizing the use of overhead wires on the First street branch within the city limits, as they consider that street too narrow for this purpose. This objection will be removed if, as the commissioners suggest, North Capitol street should be substituted for First street in the company's charter, the former being considerably wider than the latter.

The correspondence with the president of the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company relative to this subject is herewith appended.

Very respectfully,

J. W. DOUGLASS, President.

Hon. J. J. INGALLS,

Chairman Committee on District of Columbia, United States Senate.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
OFFICE OF THE ENGINEER COMMISSIONER,
Washington, December 20, 1889.

DEAR SIR: The commissioners have received a letter from the Senate Committee on the District of Columbia, inclosing a copy of Senate bill 157, providing for the extension of the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway, requesting the commissioners to report to the committee "the result of the practical operations of the electric system used on the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway during the past year, especially as to its safety."

Will you kindly furnish me with any information that you may have in your possession bearing upon this point?

Respectfully, yours,

CHAS. W. RAYMOND,
Major of Engineers, U. S. Army,
Engineer Commissioner, District of Columbia.

Mr. GEO. TRUESDELL,

President Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company,
Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON, D. C., ROOM 29, ATLANTIC BUILDING,
December 27, 1889.

DEAR SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of the 20th instant, in which you request me to furnish for the use of the Senate Committee on the District of Columbia a report as to the result of the practical operations of the electric system used on the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway during the past year, especially as to its safety, and to make the following reply:

The Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company was chartered on the 19th of June, 1888, and the main line of the road was completed and opened for traffic on the 17th of October, 1888. The Cemetery branch was completed in June, 1889, and the Fourth street extension to the Catholic University was finished on the 20th of October, making altogether about 3 miles of double track and half a mile of single track.

The report of the operation of the road for the first year was submitted to the stockholders on the 17th of October, 1889, a copy of which is hereto appended for your information. The road, as will be seen from said report, has been a great success, the receipts for the first year having exceeded the operating expenses by over $3,300, it being the first instance in which the receipts of any street-car line in the District of Columbia have equaled its expenses during the first year of its existence. Considering that this is essentially a suburban road, with its city terminus at New York avenue and Seventh street, it affords conclusive evidence of the popularity of the system. If anything further were needed upon this point, it is found in the fact that property on New York avenue between Seventh street and Boundary has doubled in value since the road was opened, while beyond Boundary the advance has been even greater, in some cases being as much as 400 or 500 per cent.

As to the danger of the electric current, it affords me great pleasure to be able to state that not one of the 503,000 passengers carried by our company has been injured by it, nor have any of our employes, although the latter have received frequent shocks. That the current used on our railway and on the other electric roads in this country is not dangerous to human life is further shown by what I am assured is the fact, that although there are now 1,100 miles of electric tracks in use in the United States and over 800 electric cars, no passenger has been seriously injured by the current used to propel them. It may be proper to add that no passenger has been seriously injured by our cars in any manner whatsoever.

Yours, very respectfully,

GEO. TRUESDELL,

President Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company.

Maj. CHAS. W. RAYMOND,

Corps of Engineers, U. S. Army, Engineer Commissioner, D. C.

Report of the receipts and expenses of operating the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway for the year ending October 17, 1889:

Total number of passengers carried.....	503,860	Total receipts from passengers.....	$23,604.00
Daily average.....	1,505	Expenses of operating.....	20,256.72
Average daily earnings.....	$68.45	Excess of receipts over expenses.....	3,347.28

The committee is satisfied that the extension from the intersection of New York avenue and Fifth street, northwest, to Fifteenth street, northwest, will be a great convenience to the traveling public, as the present terminus of the road at the intersection of New York avenue and Seventh street, northwest, is an inconvenient point to reach, and generally involves an additional car-fare to the passengers who get on or off at that point, while this extension will reach the business part of the city and make connection with the various car and herd lines.

The committee adopts the recommendation of the commissioners, and recommends the repeal of so much of the original charter as authorized the construction of the Soldiers' Home branch along First street, and authorizes the construction of a branch from the intersection of New York avenue and North Capitol street along North Capitol to the Soldiers' Home. This point of beginning is only three blocks from the northern boundary of the city, and North Capitol being a broad street, the laying of these tracks will be little if any inconvenient.

ience to wagon and carriage traffic, but a great convenience to that portion of the people of the city who do not keep their own carriages, enabling them to reach the beautiful grounds of the Soldiers' Home quickly and cheaply.

Upon this point the committee submits the letter of the Rev. John J. Keane, rector of the Catholic University, and the letter of the Washington Board of Trade, recommending the passage of the bill:

THE CATHOLIC UNIVERSITY OF AMERICA.
Washington, D. C., December 11, 1889.

RESPECTED DEAR SIR: Permit me, in the name of the trustees of this university, to ask of your Committee on the District of Columbia favorable consideration for the petition of the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway to extend their line to the corner of Fifteenth street.

This electric line is an incalculable advantage to us and to the large numbers of the public at large who visit the university. The advantage to us and to the public would be very greatly increased if this excellent method of transit could bring us within immediate reach of so central a point as Fifteenth street. Twice a week we have lectures open to the public, at 4.30 p. m.; and the proposed extension of this railway would make it easy for persons in the Departments to reach the university before the hour of the lecture.

For these reasons I feel that it is not only permissible to me, but is even my duty, to urge upon yourself, dear sir, and upon your respected committee, the advisability of granting the liberty of extension petitioned for.

Most respectfully, yours,

JOHN J. KEANE, Rector.

Senator INGALLS.

OFFICE OF THE WASHINGTON BOARD OF TRADE.
Washington, D. C., January 17, 1890.

SIR: I am directed by the chairman of the executive committee of the Washington Board of Trade to inform you that the railroad committee has carefully considered the inclosed Senate bill 157, entitled "A bill to amend the charter of the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railroad Company," and believe its passage will be to the interest of the District.

Very respectfully,

ALEX. D. ANDERSON,
Secretary Board of Trade.

Hon. JOHN J. INGALLS,
Chairman Committee on District of Columbia, United States Senate.

This company was chartered by act approved June 19, 1888, and the main line of the road was promptly built upon the most approved plan and without regard to any expense necessary to its perfection and its safety. It has been in operation for more than a year, and during its first year's business it carried more than 500,000 passengers in safety and comfort.

In the opinion of the committee it is the best electric railway in the United States and vastly superior to any horse railway.

The committee reports the bill back with amendments, and recommends the adoption of the amendments and the passage of the bill.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, the reading of this report has obviated the necessity of my doing more than alluding to a single statement of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN]. He commenced his argument by stating that only one block of North Capitol street would be traversed by this proposed extension of the Eckington Railroad. The District commissioners state that it is three blocks, which I knew to be the fact at the time the Senator from Ohio made his statement.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is not over 800 feet, I am quite sure.

Mr. VEST. It is three blocks, and the commissioners so state, on the most magnificent avenue, as the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] said, in the city of Washington or anywhere else, and but for the impediment that the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad presents now it would be settled up more rapidly and with better residences than any other portion of the city except that part immediately around Scott Circle.

Now, I do not propose to thrash over old straw in regard to the danger of so many volts of electricity to animal life. All that has been discussed by the most eminent electricians in the world, and if Senators will refer to the article in the North American Review, I think, for last month, or certainly the month before, by Mr. Westinghouse, of Pittsburgh, who is as eminent an electrician as Edison, they will find a statement by Mr. Westinghouse that 200 volts of electricity from one battery or another is dangerous to human life, and Mr. Westinghouse states what every man of common sense, whether an expert or a layman, knows to be the truth, that no Procrustean rule can be laid down as to the result of so many volts of electricity to any human being or to any animal, because it depends upon the nervous organization, which differs in different animals and in the various members of the human family, as much as the color of the eye or the hair or any part of the human body. What would kill some men would be simply a pleasing titillation to others. Think of a delicate woman riding in a vehicle along the course of this Eckington railway and 300 volts of electricity striking her; think of it striking a child; think of it striking an old person whose vitality is diminished, and the effect would be very different from that produced by it striking one who was a young, robust, and entirely healthy man, and, as Mr. Westinghouse, in that article, in answer to Mr. Edison, discussing the question of overhead electric wires in the city of New York for any purpose, says, it is absolutely impossible to lay down a rule, and the question for a legislator is whether any human life is in danger. That is the question, because the lives of the old and the feeble ought to be peculiarly under the protection of the legislation of Congress and of every other legislative body.

I prefer to take the opinion of Mr. Westinghouse and actual experiment. Why, sir, when this debate was up before the incident was given here and read of the mayor of Montgomery, Ala., who in riding along in his buggy the morning after a storm encountered one of these electric wires from an overhead line—

Mr. HARRIS. An arc light.

Mr. VEST. Not an arc light.

Mr. HARRIS. It was an arc light.

Mr. VEST. I do not understand that it was an arc light, but an overhead electric wire. The animal was killed, the buggy overturned, and the mayor knocked senseless out of it.

The Senators from Nebraska say that this system has operated well in Omaha. If testimony of that sort is to be adduced, I say that it has not operated well in Kansas City, Mo., where I live. The money was subscribed there to construct an electric road, the cars were put upon it, and it was put in operation, and it has been abandoned and the cable system adopted in that city, and in that city to-day there are five cable roads in actual operation.

We were told when the bill granting this charter was originally passed that this road was to be constructed to Seventh street, to be put in communication with the cable road now built up to the boundary on that street, and yet now the proposition is to extend it down to the business parts of the city, putting the wires under ground, an admission that the overhead wire is considered dangerous.

I was in Des Moines, Iowa, last summer with the Committee on Meat Products—the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE] was with me—and we were told there that the operation of the overhead electric wires in that city was a nuisance and was about to be abandoned under the popular indignation that had been excited against them. So this thing of stating that this system is a success everywhere is a mistake.

Mr. PADDOCK. I wish to say to the Senator from Missouri that, if he will investigate the facts as to his own city, I think he will find that more injuries and more deaths have been caused by the cable and horse-car system than by the electric system in that city. That certainly is true of Omaha.

Mr. VEST. There are other things to be considered besides the accidents that occur. The cable system is far superior to any other system, and actual experience shows it to be the fact wherever it has been tested, and the cable road in this city on Seventh street will prove to be the best road in the city, and, if Congress does its duty, in my judgment, it will force all these corporations to adopt the cable system, as we have a right to do.

Why should there be any chances taken upon a question of this sort in order to put a little money in the pockets of some speculators? They have a perfect right to get this bill through Congress if they can; it is all legitimate on their part; but I am a criminal, with my convictions, if I do not oppose it. I do not believe that the accretion in the price of real estate, I do not believe that the dividends the corporations will receive upon their stock in these railroads, is any excuse for me if I consent to putting up the overhead electric wire and then a single human being is destroyed by it. If, with the testimony of Mr. Westinghouse, published in the North American Review, I should give this vote with my convictions in regard to it, I should be an accessory to homicide; and I can not understand, permit me to say to the Senator from Ohio, how he, after avowing here as he has done, that he considers these overhead wires dangerous—because he said he stands by his vote in favor of the provision which we put in the District appropriation bill prohibiting these wires after the 15th day of September last—I can not see how he can vote for putting up these overhead wires simply because they only traverse three blocks of the city and then a country road that runs out to Eckington and the Catholic University.

Human life is just as dear upon that road as in any three blocks in the city or anywhere else; and the Senator supplements his statement by saying that there will be a large amount of travel by the citizens of Washington making their way to the suburbs during the warm months, an argument directly re-enforcing my position in this case, that where there is the more travel there is the more danger, and, therefore, the necessity for more caution on the part of Congress.

I will not further detain the Senate, but I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senate ready for the question? The Senator from Missouri asks that upon this question the yeas and nays may be entered on the Journal.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment to the amendment will be read.

Mr. HARRIS. I understood the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] to accept the amendment of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] in lieu of his.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is correct.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed at the end of the amendment of the House of Representatives to add the following:

That the authority of said company by this act or any other act conferred to erect or use overhead wires in its operations within the city of Washington shall absolutely cease and determine on the first day of July, A. D. 1893.

Mr. PLATT. As the yeas and nays have been ordered, I shall vote against this amendment, and I want, in a word or two, to give the reasons why I shall do so.

I do not believe in all this cry of danger from these overhead wires, possibly because we have a system of that sort in my own city, which, like the Senators from Nebraska, I have had some experience with. I should like to vote against the bill, which seems to me to be not needed for railroads extending out in the country, and which seem to be merely speculative bills without any public necessity back of them; but as regards this amendment it seems to me that my vote for it would be construed into the expression of a belief that there was such a danger from these overhead wires that they ought not to be permitted, and that is the ground on which I shall vote against the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is the bill (S. 185) to aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask the Senator from New Hampshire to allow the unfinished business to be informally laid aside in order that we may finish this question. If it leads to any extended debate I shall not trespass upon the Senate, but if we are ready to take the vote I shall be glad to have the bill disposed of.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] was about to take the floor on the school bill.

Mr. HARRIS. If the railroad bill leads to any further debate I shall not press my request.

Mr. BLAIR. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The roll-call will be proceeded with. The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. EVARTS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. MITCHELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA]. I should vote "yea" if he were here.

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM], and therefore withhold my vote.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. PLATT. I am paired generally with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BARBOUR]. As he is not in the Chamber, I will not vote upon this amendment. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. CULLOM (after having voted in the affirmative). I voted a moment ago, but I notice the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], with whom I have a general pair, is not present, and I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. FARWELL. I inquire if the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He is not recorded.

Mr. FARWELL. Then I withhold my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 37, nays 13; as follows:

YEAS—37.

Aldrich,	Coke,	Hampton,	Reagan,
Allen,	Dawes,	Hawley,	Squire,
Allison,	Dixon,	Hearst,	Teller,
Bate,	Dolph,	Higgins,	Vest,
Berry,	Edmunds,	Hiscock,	Walthall,
Blackburn,	Eustis,	McPherson,	Washburn,
Blair,	Frye,	Morrill,	Wilson of Iowa.
Casey,	George,	Payne,
Chandler,	Gorman,	Pettigrew,
Cockrell,	Hale,	Pierce,

NAYS—13.

Blodgett,	Jones of Arkansas,	Sawyer,	Wilson of Md.
Call,	McMillan,	Sherman,
Harris,	Manderson,	Spooner,
Ingalls,	Paddock,	Stewart,

ABSENT—32.

Barbour,	Davis,	Kenna,	Quay,
Beck,	Evarts,	Mitchell,	Ransom,
Brown,	Farwell,	Moody,	Stanford,
Butler,	Faulkner,	Morgan,	Stockbridge,
Cameron,	Gibson,	Pasco,	Turpie,
Colquitt,	Gray,	Platt,	Vance,
Cullom,	Hoar,	Plumb,	Voorhees,
Daniel,	Jones of Nevada,	Pugh,	Wolcott.

So the amendment of Mr. EDMUNDS was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment of the House of Representatives as amended.

The amendment as amended was concurred in.

Mr. EDMUNDS subsequently said: I enter a motion to reconsider the vote of the Senate by which it agreed to the House amendment to the bill (S. 157) to amend the charter of the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company, with an amendment.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 140) to prevent the introduction of contagious diseases from one State to another, and for the punishment of certain offenses, with amendments in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (H. R. 5067) for the relief of Archibald Hunley; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. 1701) making an appropriation for the removal of a dangerous obstruction to the entrance of the harbor at Milwaukee, Wis.; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a communication from the Secretary of State, asking for an additional appropriation of $35,000 to meet the expenses of the International Marine Conference held in Washington; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a communication from the Sixth Auditor of the Treasury, calling attention to the inadequate accommodations provided for the use of his office; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 5067) for the relief of Archibald Hunley was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

INTRODUCTION OF CONTAGIOUS DISEASES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 140) to prevent the introduction of contagious diseases from one State to another, and for the punishment of certain offenses; which were referred to the Committee on Epidemic Diseases.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. I report, from the Committee on Appropriations, with amendments, the bill (H. R. 7496) to provide for certain of the most urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes. I give notice that on Monday next I shall ask the Senate to take up the bill and consider it until it is passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Meanwhile the bill will be placed on the Calendar.

AID TO COMMON SCHOOLS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 185) to aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, the educational bill, commonly called the Blair bill, has been before the Senate in some form at every session of Congress during the last ten years, or if at not every session at least in every Congress during that time. More than ten years ago a bill passed this body, but failed in the other House, with similar purposes and similar aims with the present bill. I have from time to time discussed the measure. I have committed myself as thoroughly as I could to its principle, both as a member of this body and as a member of the executive branch of the Government.

I admit that in the ten years which have intervened since we first commenced this discussion there have been great changes, and there is, perhaps, necessity for some change in the pending bill. The relation of the colored people in the South to the white people of that section of the country is somewhat different to-day from what it was ten years ago. I had intended to content myself with a silent vote in favor of the bill, but the very remarkable character of the discussion in the last few days has induced me to express my opinion upon the bill and upon some questions connected with this debate.

Mr. President, we all admitted in the days of reconstruction that there was a great problem to be solved. It was not my fortune at that time to be engaged in the legislative department of the Government. I had the voice only of an American citizen. I want to say now, for fear I may forget it, that I was one of those who advocated the extension of suffrage to the colored people, and that I have no apologies to make; nor am I willing to admit, on the contrary I deny, that it was a mistake or a blunder. You can not maintain the integrity of any country and insure prosperity to all classes unless all classes stand on one political plane. That is elementary; and he who does not admit it has yet much to learn.

We knew that those men were unfitted for the exercise in the highest and best manner of the rights of American citizens. We knew also that side by side with them would go to the ballot box men of our own color, no better fitted by education, by aspiration, to exercise the right of citizenship than they; but they were "to the manner born." They came here not by their will, but by ours. If they were ignorant and debased it was the ignorance that we had kept them in. If it had been a crime for a generation and more to teach them to read, it was our fault, and not theirs. If there was deep degradation amongst this great mass of men that we were putting into the body-politic, it was not their fault nor was it ours in the North. It was the fault of circumstances surrounding their condition, as to which I will not now complain of the people of the South.

What were we to do with them? Were they to be aliens in the land of their birth? Were they to be subjected to all the duties of citizenship without any of its rights? If they became the owners of property were they to be taxed? Nobody in this country would have submitted to that and agreed that if they became owners of property they should not be taxed. If they were to bear their portion of the burdens of society they had a right, as have all people who bear those burdens, who are here to be permanent and actual residents without their will or without their wish, to participate in all the advantages.

So when we were met with that problem I was one who did not wait to see how the people of the South were going to treat the colored race in that region, whether they were to deny to them or to give to them privileges, because with me it has ever been a fundamental principle that all men must stand on a political plane alike if you will have harmony and a homogeneous condition of affairs.

I admit to the fullest extent the difficulties that surround the question. I admit to the fullest extent the difficulty of two races inharmonious, two races non-homogeneous, living together on terms of perfect political equality; and I admit that with so much difference between these two races as there is it will be utterly impossible for them ever to remain together in social equality.

I do not admit that this problem is so great that it may not be solved, because if I did I should despair of the Republic. If the Southern people and the negroes can not live together in a state of political equality and political harmony, there is an end of republican government in one-third at least of the area of the United States.

When I say this I am not insensible to the great task that these people in the South have. I sympathize with them. I have thought much upon this subject, and I am not prepared to say now that I have any key to the solution of this great problem; but realizing ten years ago that this problem was as great as it is now, realizing that the problem was here to be solved in some way, and believing, as the Senator from Mississippi who sits nearest to me [Mr. GEORGE] said the other day that he did, that education might in some respects help to solve the problem, I have steadily, on all occasions, voted for this and every other measure that might help the people of that country to solve this question.

Mr. President, I do not think this is a political question. I am averse ordinarily to the discussion of political questions. I now speak of it as a political question as distinguished in the two great political parties. I do not think it is a political question in that sense of the term, and yet I do think it is the greatest political question that has been presented for our consideration. It seems to me that it is a problem so great that when we approach it we should approach it not in the temper, I am sorry to say, in which it has been approached by some Senators on the other side of the Chamber, as it seems to me, within the last two days.

I do not believe it is profitable to-day to discuss the questions that are past and gone in connection with the war. What profit would it be for us to spend a week here in discussing whether slavery was a divine institution or whether it was justified by proper economic principles? If we should attempt it we would find some men here and some men out of here who are in favor probably of that proposition, but we should find the great mass of men against it. What difference does it make? Slavery has passed away. As to who is responsible for it that has nothing to do with the present condition. Who were right in 1859 and 1860 previous to the war in the great questions that led up to the war is not now to be considered. We have enough to do in addressing ourselves to present difficulties, present troubles.

Believing as I did, as I say the Senator from Mississippi did, that the solution of this question could be, in a measure at least, aided by education, I introduced more than ten years ago a bill in this body. More than ten years ago from the seat where the Senator from Maine [Mr. FAYE] now sits, I stated that I was willing to pour out with unstinted hand the treasure of the United States to the Southern people to be used in solving this question, if it could be so done; and when I made that statement I uttered a sentiment that pervaded the entire North. It was not exclusively mine. It was not common to my section of the country alone; it was a sentiment that the people of the whole country entertained: "Show us how you can better your condition there by the use of money, and we, the richest part of the country, will pay it with willingness and gladness if it will do something towards bettering your condition." If the colored people are educated and if the white people are educated, there can be no question that the chances are at least that they will live together on better terms than if they are steeped in ignorance.

I have said here again and again, and it is a fact patent to all, that ignorance and vice go hand in hand, and when you have got a community steeped in ignorance you have got a community steeped in crime. The terms are correlative, and one means the same thing practically as the other. What a vicious colored man in ignorance would do, an intelligent colored man would scorn to be guilty of; and it is no less true of him than it is of the white man. Education does not simply consist in reading and writing and mathematical demonstrations; it is the elevation of the moral as well as the intellectual man.

When we attempt out of the great amount of money on hand to put forth this effort and pay some money, we are met by the men who are opposed to the bill with a charge that we are inimical and hostile to the best interests of the South. It is that which I want to deny more than to make an argument upon this bill.

Why should I want to vote for a bill that gives to Alabama $6,000,000 where it gives a few thousands to my State? Why should I want to vote for a bill that gives to Mississippi millions where it gives nominally a useless sum to my State? Does any Senator suppose that the beneficence we are offering on the part of the Government is with a design to take possession of the school fund and of the school system? If he does, why has not he or any other Senator on that side moved to make the bill so certain that that can not be done if that does not exist? But does not that exist in this bill? Does not every man know that one of the objections which have been made against this bill, and the only possible objection that has been made in the North, was that by it we surrendered the absolute control to the people of the South? That is a merit in the bill according to my view. I am in favor of surrendering the entire use of this money to the South; I am in favor of giving them an opportunity to use it as they see fit, and if they abuse the beneficence of the General Government it will be time enough for us then to complain. I shall not complain until that is done. I shall not for myself assert that there is any more danger of Mississippi, Alabama, and Georgia perverting the use of the fund than I would if it went to my own State. I do not believe that they can afford to do it or that they will do it.

Mr. President, there is nothing in the bill that indicates hostility on our part. There is everything in the bill that indicates generosity on our part; there is everything in the bill that indicates sympathy on our part; there is everything in the bill that indicates a desire on our part to assist these people in solving this problem.

If there is any solution of this problem at all, if it is possible for the negroes of the South and the white men of the South to live on terms of political equality, of fair neighborly friendship, it must come by the elevation of the colored race. If the South is willing and able to try that alone, we of the North ought not to complain; but if they lack either the desire or the ability, it is right and proper, as I have repeatedly said, that we should come to their aid.

I was surprised when I came into this Chamber day before yesterday to hear the Senator from Mississippi who sits nearest to me complain that he had stood here in the Senate day by day and listened to denunciations of the Southern people. Mr. President, I have been as careful an attendant upon the Senate as any member of this body for the last five years, and for more than five years before, when I was a member of this body; and while I was not a member, in the time between, I was so connected with the affairs of the Government that I had every opportunity to know what occurred here; and I say to the Senator that he must have drawn slightly upon his imagination—evidently that is suggested—when he says that day by day the Southern people have been denounced.

I began my public career in this body as a member of a committee of investigation into affairs in Mississippi. It would not please the Senator from Mississippi for me to detail what appeared before that committee. Subsequently I went with a committee to Louisiana and South Carolina. There were things produced before both committees that would not be pleasing to the Senators from Mississippi or any other section of that country to hear repeated now. Has the Senator heard me in the long time he has known me in this body bring forward these facts to disgrace his community?

Mr. GEORGE. I have not.

Mr. TELLER. Or to charge him?

Mr. GEORGE. I have not.

Mr. TELLER. Has he heard anybody who has done so from the reports we made?

Mr. President, I have no more disposition to denounce the people of Mississippi than I have the people of Massachusetts or Colorado. They are my fellow countrymen, and if they are degraded men I degrade myself when I charge it. My sympathies are strong enough and broad enough to get beyond the State's lines of the State in which I live, and I am not unlike, in that particular, the great body of the American people. If bad men in Mississippi, if bad men in South Carolina, if bad men in Georgia, and other sections of the country commit crimes and atrocities, it can be attributed in a great degree to the peculiar and remarkable condition of affairs in that country; and when I condemn those outrages it is not necessary that anybody should infer or suppose that I am condemning the great mass of men in those States.

Recently a citizen of Indiana went down into Mississippi. He was fearfully outraged. I have no idea myself that the mass of the people had anything to do with it. I heard one of the Senators from that State, if not both Senators, say on this floor that it was not defensible, and of course it was not defensible. When it was suggested that we wanted the facts before this body, the Senator from Mississippi who sits nearest to me took the floor, and I believe the resolution still lies on the table. What objection could there be to giving the truthful statement of the affair to the people of the United States? Would it not have shown, if the Senator was correct, that but a little portion of the community, and they not the best, had participated in it? The mistake the Senators from that section of the country make is that whenever this question has come up, whenever we stand for decent treatment of every man in this land, they assume that it is an attack upon the whole people of that part of the country.

A United States officer was killed in Florida. I should probably have to travel all over Florida to find a dozen men who would not condeman the act; yet when the question was brought here as to whether we would make an inquiry the Senators from Florida, at least one of them, took the floor and in a remarkable speech, remarkable delivered anywhere, more than remarkable delivered in this Chamber, held that resolution for days, and I do not know but that it is still held.

Mr. President, every citizen of the United States is entitled to the protection either of his State government or of the General Government. If Mississippi outrages a citizen of Ohio or Indiana, Indiana or Ohio can not call upon Mississippi to respond, but the United States may. Only in extreme cases, not in a sporadic case, not when, here and there, there was an occurrence of the kind that doubtless occurred at Aberdeen, would anybody pretend that the General Government should interfere to protect the citizen of one State any more than it should to have protected a citizen of Mississippi if a mob had outraged him. But if the State of Mississippi should by any system, public or private, adopt a policy that would outrage every citizen of Indiana and Ohio who went in to its borders, then it would be the duty of the General Government to interfere. Such a state of affairs, I am happy to say, is not charged upon any State in the Union.

The impression made by the speeches within two or three days was that the great Northern sentiment was hostile to the South. There never was a greater mistake in the world. We have been proud of the prosperity that has come since the war to the South. We have been proud of the energy with which the people there undertook to reconstitute their shattered fortunes. We were proud of their courage when they met our men on battle-fields. Why? Because they are blood of our blood, part and parcel of our country. They are our brethren and our fellow-citizens. There is no hostility anywhere to you. We are willing you should work out this problem yourselves, if you can do it, and we stand ready with our money, with our advice, and with our assistance, to help you on every possible occasion; but we do not like to have you tell us when we offer you a beneficent measure like this that there is lurking back of it a design to destroy your institutions or to precipitate a condition of affairs that might be precipitated where the races are so diverse and antagonistic as there.

Mr. President, I have said, and I repeat it here, that if any statesman in the South, if anybody in the South will bring here an intelligent measure to solve this question he will get my vote for it every time, though it should put upon this nation a debt as great as we had at the close of the war. Money would be no consideration with the people of the North. Money would not be counted in the scale. We did not count money when the South undertook to establish a government of its own; we did not count blood and we did not count treasure, because we believed, as the Southern people now believe, that it would be a great mistake to allow another government to be established within our border. We believed that the Southern people and we could live in harmony. We believed that the future good of the Republic demanded that there should be a unity of this people, that they should be under one flag, with one aspiration, and with the same hopes and with the same rights.

That is the sentiment of the great North; that is the sentiment of the people who have made this country rich and great. I speak now of what Mr. Lincoln called "the plain people." That is their sentiment everywhere. The plain people, the common people, if you choose so to term them, the poor people, have filled up the South with their missionaries and with money. They have built and maintained schools in all sections of the South among the colored people. Men who are little able to give have given with freedom and with gladness, because they felt that they were taking part in solving this great problem. Do they do it with malice? Do they do it in anger?

There has never been an exhibition in the history of the country of equal generosity. "When the war was over," said the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] yesterday, "we were willing to accept anything—execution, expatriation, anything that you said." So you were. When General Grant said, "Take your horses; you will need them to put in your spring crops," he voiced the general sentiment of the American Army and the American people, and ever since we have met these people with that sentiment.

We did give to the colored people the franchise. We gave it to them because we believed it to be necessary for their protection. We believed it to be necessary for the welfare of the negro and the welfare of the white man alike, and in my judgment to-day we did not make any mistake. What else could we have done? Would it have been decent for us to do anything else? It was the inevitable consequence of the condition that you yourselves had brought upon yourselves; and I thank God that you did bring it on; and so ought you; for as much as the war cost in blood and in treasure it was cheap, and a consolidated and a united people with common aspirations and common hopes and common interests are worth a thousand times all it cost.

When questions relating to your material interests have come before this body you have found our votes with you. We have loved your great river in the interest, as we have said, of commerce, but in the interest in fact of the planters who live on its banks. Every dollar that we put in in the interest of commerce has been $5 in the interest of the men who own the land and the material prosperity of the States bordering on that river. We are not deceived. We seized the constitutional power that we have to do you a benefit, and we voted it with unstinted hands. You have had from the Chief Executive of this nation more than one message to this body and the other in your special interest with reference to that great river. You have no other interest that has ever come here that has not met a ready response on our part.

When you said you wanted half a million dollars for the Charleston Harbor, a city where rebellion first started, a city of all cities in the Union against which there was likely to be prejudice, we gave it with a liberal hand. The people of the North have ever stood by and regarded these benefactions extended to you as the proper thing for us to do. If you came here to-day in a body and said you wanted $20,000,000 a year for education, you would get it by the united vote of the representatives of the Northern people.

The reason why you did not get this bill years and years ago was because you have been divided yourselves on this question and because there has been a reluctance on the part of the Northern people to insist upon giving to you that which some of you stated you did not need and did not want. Some, at least, have allowed their judgment to be guided by you on this subject.

Mr. President, I never meant to speak upon this question, simply because I could not offer any solution. I do not know what can be done. I know what you can try. You can try to lift up and elevate those who have been down-trodden, to put them on a higher intellectual and moral plane; and when you do that you will have our aid. I do not want for myself drastic laws to compel you to treat them properly; I want you to do it without. I want you to do it because it is right that it should be done, and I am willing, so far as I am concerned, to trust you, to trust the people of that section, if they will but show a disposition on their part to take hold and try to solve this great question; and if we can aid you we are ready and willing so to do.

We are not insensible to your difficulties. We know what they are. We know the dominant character of our race as depicted here from the seat in front of me by the President pro tempore of the Senate. He did not say any too much. We know how careless they are of the rights of other men if those rights come in conflict with theirs. We make due allowance for that. We have got it, and we put the question to ourselves and say, "If met face to face with this great question, what would we do?" and the answer in our hearts is, "We do not know." We do not propose to be bitter or severe upon you if you do not come up to the full standard that we would set up to in the plane on which we live, where no difficulties come; but we do not want you to charge us with hostility, with enmity, when the whole history everywhere in detail and in full shows that it is not true. Ask us in the spirit of brotherhood to meet you in solving this question and you will find us there, whether it means our advice, whether it means that we shall carry in our minds the difficulties that surround you, or whether it means that we should pour out the wealth of the country. Show us how we can help you and we are ready to do it, but do not taunt us with despising or hating. We have forgotten the war. We could afford to forget it. Much as it cost, we could afford to forget it, and we have forgotten it; and we simply ask on your part that you too shall forget it.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I rise with a good deal of pleasure to acknowledge the good temper and the good feeling exhibited in the speech of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER]. If all of us on both sides of the Chamber in dealing with this question, this great problem to which he has alluded, would bring to its solution, if solution is possible, the temper, the charity, the kindness, the good feeling, and the statesmanship exhibited by the Senator from Colorado, I think a good deal of the trouble would be removed.

I wanted merely to say that. I thought I ought to say that. I can say that without committing myself to an admission of the correctness of several of the positions which the Senator's judgment dictated to him to take.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President—

Mr. CALL. I ask the Senator from Illinois if he will allow me to offer a notice in writing in conformity with the rules?

Mr. CULLOM. Does the Senator desire to have it read?

Mr. CALL. I only wish to submit a resolution and this notice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DAWES in the chair). Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. CULLOM. If it takes no time I have no objection.

Mr. CALL. It will take no further time than to submit a resolution and a notice, and have them read and ordered to be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield?

Mr. CULLOM. I yield to allow the notice to be read.

PROPOSED CHANGE OF RULE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chief Clerk will read as requested. The Chief Clerk read as follows:

I give notice that I shall move on to-morrow to amend and modify clause 2 of Rule XXXVIII, as follows:

"All information communicated or remarks made by a Senator when acting on nominations concerning the character or qualifications of the person nominated, also all votes upon any nomination, shall be kept secret."

Also so much of Rule XXVI, clause 2, as follows: "When acting upon confidential or executive business, unless the same shall be considered in open executive session, the Senate Chamber shall be cleared of all persons, except the Secretary, the Chief Clerk, the Principal Legislative Clerk, the Executive Clerk, and such officers as the Presiding Officer shall think necessary shall be sworn to secrecy.

The object of this motion for change of rule is to allow the consideration of the nomination of Charles Swayne and Joseph N. Stirling in open executive session.

WILKINSON CALL.

Mr. CALL. I submit a resolution in accordance with the notice, and I ask that it be read and printed in order that I may bring it up at the next meeting of the Senate for consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield?

Mr. CULLOM. I yield for the purpose of allowing it to be read simply, if it is not a very long resolution.

Mr. CALL. I shall be satisfied with having it printed.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator says he will be satisfied to have it printed as a resolution without reading. It seems to be a long document, and I hope he will be content with that. I desire to call up the House resolutions relating to the death of the late Mr. Townshend.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the pleasure of the Senator from Florida in regard to the notice and resolution submitted by him?

Mr. CULLOM. I understand the Senator from Florida simply desires the resolution to be printed and laid on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. CHANDLER. I call for the reading of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will again read the notice.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the notice submitted by Mr. CALL. Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from New Hampshire, I understand, withdraws his request for the reading.

Mr. MORRILL. There is no permission to print except what has been read.

Mr. CALL. That is a notice merely in accordance with the rule, which requires it to be submitted in writing. I submit also a resolution, and ask that it be printed and laid on the table, to come up for consideration at the next meeting of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida has sent to the Chair a resolution—

Mr. CULLOM. I hope the Senator will withhold that for the present.

Mr. CALL. It is the resolution referred to in the notice.

Mr. FRYE. That is the resolution the Senator from Florida desires to have printed and laid on the table?

Mr. CALL. I wish to have it printed and laid on the table.

Mr. CULLOM. I have no objection to its being printed and laid on the table simply.

Mr. CHANDLER. If it is the same resolution to which I objected yesterday, which the Chair ruled out of order, I desire seasonably to raise the point of order on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is not informed whether it is the same resolution which was offered yesterday or not.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope the Senator from Florida will withhold the resolution.

Mr. CALL. I will allow it to lie on the table until resolutions are called for on Monday morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois has the floor.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE TOWNSHEND.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to call up the resolutions of the House of Representatives in relation to the death of the late Mr. Townshend, of my State.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chief Clerk will read the resolutions of the House of Representatives.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, February 15, 1890.

Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended that appropriate honors may be paid to the memory of Hon. Richard Wellington Townshend, late a Representative in Congress from the State of Illinois.

That in the death of Mr. Townshend his district and State lost an able and faithful public servant and the country a legislator and statesman who stood high in its councils.

That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the House, at the conclusion of these ceremonies, shall adjourn.

That the Clerk transmit a copy of these resolutions to the Senate.

Mr. CULLOM. I offer the resolutions I send to the desk for consideration and adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolutions will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate shares with the House of Representatives in its expressions of sorrow at the death of the Honorable Richard W. Townshend, late a Representative in that body from the State of Illinois.

Resolved, That as a mark of sympathy toward the family of the deceased the Secretary of the Senate be directed to transmit to them a copy of these proceedings.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I ask the attention of the Senate while I submit some remarks appropriate to the occasion suggested by the resolution just read. We are again called upon to pay our tribute of respect to the memory of a deceased member of Congress, Richard Wellington Townshend, a Representative from the State of Illinois. It is fitting that the Senate shall pause from its ordinary labors and express its appreciation of the life and character of the deceased.

Mr. President, the death-roll of the present Congress has been unusually large, and, in language not to be misunderstood, reminds us "that in the midst of life we are in death."

Richard W. Townshend, whose death we mourn to-day, was born in Prince George's County, Maryland, April 30, 1840, and died in this city March 9, 1889, being nearly forty-nine years old, having scarcely reached the zenith of his manhood.

In early youth, while yet a boy, an orphan boy, he came to this city, where he attended the schools, and for a time was a page-boy in the House of Representatives, of which body he subsequently became, and continued for many years, a distinguished member. While young Townshend was a page in the House, S. S. Marshall, then an honored member from Illinois and now an honored citizen of that great Commonwealth, became attached to him and advised him to go to Illinois, which he did in 1853. There he taught school for a time, and finally studied law in the judge's law office. He was subsequently licensed to practice law, was soon elected clerk of the circuit court, afterwards elected prosecuting attorney for the judicial circuit in which he lived, and became known as an able lawyer and prosecutor.

In those days, when the State was less densely populated, a judicial circuit comprised many more counties than now, and the ability and valuable services of Mr. Townshend in protecting the peace and good order of the people made him a tower of strength in his section.

He was always an uncompromising Democrat, and was ready to defend his party and its principles and policies on any proper occasion. He was a man of courage, was honest in what he avowed, and was therefore aggressive in dealing with his political enemies. He held various positions at the hands of his political friends before he was elected to Congress. As I have said, he was circuit clerk, prosecuting attorney, and was also long a member of the Democratic State committee, and once or more a delegate to the Democratic national convention. He was prominent in the councils of his party because he was recognized as wise and sagacious as a leader. In 1876 his career as a member of Congress began by his election in his district, in which he was elected six successive times, the last time in 1888. In all this period of service he grew more and more in public favor, and stronger as a legislator and in the esteem of his colleagues and all who knew him.

Mr. President, there have been few public men so devoted to the interests of the people of their districts as was he; never tiring, always on the alert, ever watchful, ever toiling, to work for his constituents was to him absolutely a labor of love. He was an honest, generous, able man, sincere in his convictions and strong in his adherence to what he believed. Under our constitutional Government the Senators and Representatives bring from their several States and districts the sentiments, views, and expressed desires of the people they most directly represent touching national affairs and national legislation, and by so doing a consensus of public opinion of every section is voiced in our legislative action as nearly as may be, and it is true more exactly, perhaps, in the House of Representatives than in the Senate. Townshend always sought to reflect in his legislative action what he believed was the voice of a majority of his people at home, and such a course made him strong. In a government by the people the duty of their representatives, either in this body or the other branch of Congress, is to represent and carry out the wishes of the people, so far as the Constitution will permit.

Mr. Townshend acted upon that idea, that it was his duty as a Representative elected by the people of his district to come here and faithfully, honestly, and devotedly carry out their wishes so far as he was able to do.

It was my good fortune to be somewhat intimately acquainted with Mr. Townshend for many years, as a citizen, as a lawyer, and as a public servant; he was faithful in all the relations of life.

It is a solemn duty to pay the last tribute to our departed friends who have been identified with us in the performance of any public trust. I think that the bond of friendship becomes stronger between men who share the responsibility of public duty together than it does between men in the common walks of life. The attachment that grows and strengthens with years between men who have been in the Army and stood shoulder to shoulder in battle becomes strong and undying as life itself; so, perhaps, in a less degree do the friendships become strong between men thrown together in the discharge of public duty in civil affairs.

Mr. Townshend's services as a member of Congress were valuable, and were more and more appreciated from year to year. A reference to the record of the Congresses in which he was a member shows that at each succeeding Congress greater responsibilities and more onerous duties were placed upon him by the body to which he belonged. He was a member of many important committees at different times, such as the Judiciary and Appropriations, and during the last Congress, if not in more than one Congress, was chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs. He took great pride in the latter position, and was liberal in his consideration of the needs of the Army, and appreciated its important relation to the Government. He was greatly interested in the National Military School at West Point, where, as members of the Board of Visitors, we met with others but a few years ago to investigate its condition and needs.

He was greatly interested in and strongly advocated the congress of the American States which is now in session in this city and which I trust and believe will result in binding together socially, commercially, and politically the people of the United States, the Republic of Mexico, and all the states of Central and South America.

I can not undertake, on an occasion like this, Mr. President, to make even a passing reference to the many measures of public utility with which Mr. Townshend was closely identified. On the 9th of March last, now a few days more than one year ago, his labors, struggles, and conflicts ended, and he passed forever from sight. His work was done, he finished his course, and he has gone, I trust, where suffering and conflict are no more.

Mr. President, these sad occasions seem to occur so often in Congress that we are apt to pass over them lightly. The Senate will be called upon to pause several times before this session closes to pay tribute to those who were elected to the present Congress and who have passed away: Cox, that brilliant leader of the Democratic side of the House and friend to humanity in the broadest sense, is gone; Kelley, that great advocate of protection to American labor and industry, has gone; Newton W. Nutting, of New York, James Laird, of Nebraska, and Edward J. Gay, of Louisiana, have passed away, making six in number thus early in the present Congress who were elected to it and are now no more.

Such occasions are solemn, Mr. President, and to me the more often they occur the more startling and solemn they seem. Mr. Townshend was a man of great social qualities. He was fond of his friends and to have them around him. He was kindly and friendly in his nature and sought to make all his friends. He was a devoted husband, and loved his children as the apple of his eye. He left behind a heart-broken wife, a grown son, and a beautiful, loving daughter.

Mr. President, I have sometimes thought that death would have comparatively few terrors, so far as this world is concerned, if we were not so dependent upon each other. The happiness of one depends upon others; so the life of this stricken family household—widow, son, and daughter—seems enveloped in gloom and darkness since the husband and father died. He was their head, their pride, their life. He is gone; peace to his ashes!

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, the insoluble mystery of death again confronts us. In its presence rhetoric loses its charm and logic reaches no conclusion.

It has been said that the greatest terror in death is the dread of annihilation; but more terrible than this is the absolute isolation of the grave. Every man must die alone. When we pass through that shadowy portal no human voice can cheer us upon the dark pathway, no caressing hand can lead or assist; we must make that journey alone.

Sir, in the presence of the profound mystery and the tragedy that ends a human life, with all its passions and temptations and sorrows and joys, in the presence of the fact that we know so little why that life began and know so little why that life has ended, exaggerated encomium is as futile and as out of place as criticism or censure.

My acquaintance with Richard W. Townshend began eleven years years ago, when I entered the Senate. We were from the same section of the country. I afterwards came to know him well, and he impressed me as a strong, earnest, brave man, with large heart and large brain. He was devoted to the district he represented, and understood fully all the wants of its people. He was a typical Western Representative, aggressive in debate, but kindly and generous in word and deed. The constituents he represented were composed of those sturdy, self-reliant, and independent men of the prairies before whom no public official either timid or dishonest could survive. The proudest epithet that I could announce for him to-day is that for six consecutive terms he possessed the absolute confidence of such a constituency.

In every home in Southern Illinois the name of Dick Townshend, as they loved to call him, is to-day a household word. He was a perfectly natural man. Children came to him at sight and nestled in his arms as if he were an old and familiar friend. To the poor, the oppressed, the unfortunate, he was tender and patient. If all those to whom he spoke kindly words and for whom he did kindly acts were gathered together it would be a vast multitude, and if each of those who were happier by reason of his life could cast one leaf upon his grave he would sleep now beneath a wilderness of foliage.

Sir, compared with this, how poor a monument of granite or a shaft of spotless marble! His place in the councils of the nation is worthily filled, but his place in the hearts of the thousands who loved him will be vacant until they, too, shall have passed through the ever-open gates of the silent city.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, my acquaintance with Mr. Townshend began with the Forty-fifth Congress, in the House of Representatives, of which he and I were then members.

He was new in service and young in years for the House; but he soon attracted my attention, as he did that of other old members, and he immediately made friends there, who afterwards watched with satisfaction his constant increase in power and influence in the body.

His mental and physical organization was such that, while he was unusually clear and direct and persistent in his course upon subjects where he took special interest in legislation, his nature was so affectionate and his ways were so pleasant that all who were associated with him felt an interest in his success.

He had both boldness and ambition, and these pushed him on, but he constantly increased in mental stature, and whenever I met him I was impressed with the growth in the reach of his mind.

His industry was so patent that all who have spoken of him have made mention of it; and in the great work which the House of Representatives performs he bore a more and more conspicuous part. His service upon important committees there shows the estimation in which he was held, and the people whom he served attested their confidence in him by giving him what few men have ever had in this country, seven successive elections.

I can well believe that sadness pervaded his district, Mr. President, when the people heard of their great loss and knew that the man who had so faithfully and ably represented them had been cut down in his prime.

To all appearance one month before his death Mr. Townshend might count upon a most enviable future public life. He had an admiring, unquestioning constituency. He had laid broad and deep the foundations for wide influence in Congress. He was a man of the people and trusted by the people. He had filled his mind with special knowledge derived from close study into social, economic, and financial questions and had broadened it by wide general reading.

To the ordinary view, few men had better promise of a far-reaching political career, crowned with the Republic's higher honors; but no man, Mr. President, with whatever "eagle eyes" he may "stare" at the ocean of the future can tell when his voyage there may be interrupted. He of whom we speak to-day was suddenly snatched from his high vantage ground and, in what we call his untimely eclipse, went out whatever there might have been for him otherwise of honor or glory to come. "He only heard Fame's thunders wake."

His friends love to think of him and his genial ways and kindly deeds. Those nearest and dearest to him will never lose the sad pleasure which comes from the recollection of scenes brightened by love.

All of us who met him here in public or private life, especially the members of that great body where he took so active a part, will miss him long, and long regret him. During the fourteen years over which my acquaintance with Mr. Townshend extended, every incident of our intercourse has left with me nothing but pleasant memories, and my brief tribute to his merit is most sincerely given.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Mr. President, upon occasions like this, when the usual course of public business is suspended, and for a time the important public interests and the political demands of a great nation are laid aside, and the representatives of people and of States assemble to pay the last sad tribute of respect to one who was of us, but who is not, and to solemnly bear public testimony to his worth and merit to the end that those who come after us may know that we were not unmindful of his public services and private virtues, we are forcibly reminded that

To our graves we walk
In the thick foot-prints of departed men.

To one to whom life offers nothing, for whom disappointment has blasted hope, in whose bosom ambition is dead, or to one who is compelled to drag out an existence rendered miserable by misfortune or disease, for whom no loving hands smooth the rough places of life, for whom there is no rest, no peace, the grave is doubtless welcome, and that is a merciful release, a happy dispensation for him, and a calamity to no one. But to one in the prime and vigor of mature manhood; in the full enjoyment of his matured but scarcely ripened powers; just in the summer and approaching the autumn of his life, when the ripening fruits of his years of toil are about to be garnered; blessed by Providence with a happy family, the pride of his life and the solace of his heart; full of hope and ambition for his country, his family, and himself, to be suddenly cut off is terrible and makes those who witness it to shudder. Such was the life and death of Mr. Townshend.

Sinless, stirless rest,
That change which never changes—

Few men had more to live for or a better right to expect many years of success, prosperity, and happiness. No thought of his early departure from the walks of life entered the minds of those who knew him, and the sad announcement that he had "gone from the earth forever" was a shock to every one of his hosts of friends.

Such things bring home to us all with crushing force the vanity of all human calculations, but

Men drop so fast ere life's mid stage we tread
Few know so many friends alive as dead.

Even in this world, however,

We live in deeds, not years; in thoughts, not breaths;
In feelings, not in figures on a dial.
We should count time by heart-throbs. He most lives
Who thinks most, feels the noblest, acts the best.

Measured by this standard, the life of Mr. Townshend filled a larger space than that allotted to most men.

The very first day of my experience in Congress, amid the bustle and confusion incident to the organization of the House of Representatives, in the wilderness of strange faces and the stirring scenes of such an occasion, my attention was attracted to him, and though I at the time had no idea who he was, I never lost sight of him afterward.

Fearless and aggressive in the advocacy of the right as he saw it, he never occupied a doubtful position, but boldly and effectively presented his views whenever occasion required. Keenly attentive to the current of public affairs here and abroad, he was a valuable and conspicuous representative of the people, and the esteem in which his qualities and endowments were held by his associates in the House is indicated by the fact that while Hon. SAMUEL J. RANDALL was chairman of the Committee on Appropriations he always had Mr. Townsend associated with him upon that most important and responsible committee. A ready debater, a hard worker, familiar with the whole current of public affairs, he was trusted and relied upon by his committee in all their contests upon the floor. He left his impress upon public affairs, a record of his work as a public man which is an honor to him, to his State, and his constituents, and which is a rich heritage to his family; but the distinction which he would himself have prized most, of which he would himself have felt the proudest, is the sincere love and affection for him and his memory which warms the hearts of those amongst whom he lived, to whom he was best known, and to whose service he devoted his life. In the long years to come his name and his memory will be remembered and cherished by thousands of loving friends and admirers in his far-away prairie home.

Few men have had so deep and firm a hold on the confidence of their constituents as he. Coupled with the qualities which distinguished him as a public man he had personal qualities which bound him as with "hooks of steel" to those who knew him best. I often had occasion to notice his courteous and kindly demeanor towards those occupying the more lowly walks of life, and no man was freer than he from that characteristic of ignoble men, servility to place and power and arrogance towards the humble and lowly, but, being a thorough man of the people, he saw and respected the man, in utter disregard of the trappings of position or the drawbacks of a humble station. I happen to know how upon an occasion he won the admiration and sincere esteem of an old lady traveling a long distance alone, by his constant, delicate, and courteous attentions. She never forgot him or his thoughtful kindness to her, and she never will.

His accurate knowledge of what Mr. Lincoln called "our plain, common people," his familiarity with their domestic life, with their hopes and fears, his intimate knowledge of their struggles and their hardships, and his deep and sincere sympathy with them in all these won for him the place in their love and confidence which he enjoyed through life and which will "keep his memory green" after death.

To one whose life was thus devoted to the good of his fellow-men in every public duty and whose private life and daily walk were marked by words of good cheer to the faint-hearted and deeds of unselfishness to all, one who, in a word, devoted himself to the good of his fellow-men—

There is no death. What seems so is transition;
This life of mortal breath
Is but a suburb of the life elysian
Whose portal we call death.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolutions submitted by the Senator from Illinois.

The resolutions were agreed to unanimously.

Mr. CULLOM. I move as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to unanimously; and (at 3 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, March 17, 1890, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, March 14, 1890.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

HARBOR-LINES, PORTAGE LAKE, MICHIGAN.

Mr. HERMANN. On behalf of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7345) authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to establish new harbor-lines in Portage Lake, Houghton County, Michigan.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed, as speedily as the same can be done, to establish new harbor-lines in Portage Lake, Houghton County, Michigan. And that on each side of said Portage Lake between the shore and its corresponding harbor-line, established as aforesaid, riparian owners may place and discharge the refuse, debris, tailings, or products of stamp mills: Provided, That a depth of water of not less than 20 feet at said harbor-lines, and of not less than 30 feet between said harbor-lines, shall at all times be maintained and preserved.

SEC. 2. That all laws and parts of laws in conflict with this act are repealed. This act shall be in force from its passage.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HERMANN] will state the purpose of this bill. It does not appear from the reading.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendments proposed by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, so that the House may be in possession—

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. As Friday is set apart for private business and as the session continues only till 5 o'clock, I think we had better have the regular order.

Mr. HERMANN. If the gentleman will listen to a brief statement in regard to this matter, I think he will not object.

Mr. BLANCHARD. The gentleman from Kentucky will not object if he understands the proposition.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I am willing to withhold my objections temporarily—

Mr. HERMANN. This is a matter of public importance, in which the commerce of the entire Portage Lake is interested; and there is an emergency.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I will withdraw the objection temporarily, if I have that right, in order to hear a statement; but I do not wish to waive the right to object.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I wish to state to the gentleman from Kentucky and to the House that this is nothing more nor less than a proposition authorizing the Secretary of War to adjust the harbor-lines at Portage Lake. The necessity for this is brought about by reason of the fact that the copper mills there have been dumping refuse, slag, and other things into the harbor; and this bill proposes to authorize the Secretary of War to make such rules and regulations as will protect the interests dependent upon the navigation of that harbor. That is all the bill proposes. It carries no appropriation whatever and is a matter demanded by the public necessity. After this statement I trust the gentleman from Kentucky will not object.

Mr. HERMANN. And it might be further remarked that the public works there are practically suspended by reason of the necessity of this very much needed improvement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I ask for the regular order.

ALBERT H. EMERY.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is called for. The first business in order is the bill (H. R. 3538) for the relief of Albert H. Emery. This bill was reported from the Committee of the Whole House last Friday with the recommendation that the enacting clause be struck out. The question now is, Will the House concur in that recommendation?

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, under the practice in former Congresses bills in this position come up after the House has gone into Committee of the Whole and the committee has made its report of other bills. I submit that this bill should come up after the sitting of the Committee of the Whole to-day, to be disposed of with such other bills as may be reported from the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. But the rule has been changed since then.

Mr. SPRINGER. Is there anything new in the new rule on that subject?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks so.

Mr. SPRINGER. Because I would like to have it pointed out.

The SPEAKER. It says "after the unfinished business." The Chair regards this as unfinished business.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is the old rule. That would be the case if the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the rules have been so changed as to alter the status of unfinished business on Friday, and that such business coming over from the preceding private-bill day must be disposed of by the House before the motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House can be entertained. The question is on concurring in the recommendation of the committee to strike out the enacting clause.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the yeas seemed to have it.

Several members demanded a division.

The House divided; and there were—yeas 37, yeas 77.

Mr. KILGORE. I make the point of order that no quorum has voted.

Mr. DOCKERY and Mr. SPRINGER demanded the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 66, nays 143, not voting 120; as follows:

Mr. WILSON, of Kentucky, with Mr. PAYNTER.

Mr. FRANK with Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi.

Mr. RANDALL, of Massachusetts, with Mr. ANDREW.

Mr. BROWNE, of Virginia, with Mr. EDMUNDS.

Mr. SCULL with Mr. JASON B. BROWN.

Mr. HARMER with Mr. HOLMAN, on all political questions, for the rest of this day.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR with Mr. STAHLNECKER, for this day.

Mr. KNAPP with Mr. MUTCHLER, on all political questions, until Monday, March 17.

Mr. MORSE with Mr. GOODNIGHT, until further notice, saving the right to vote to make a quorum.

Mr. LEHLBACH with Mr. DIBBLE, on political questions, until Wednesday.

Mr. STEWART, of Vermont, with Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia, until Tuesday morning.

Mr. BECKWITH with Mr. GEISSENHAINER, until further notice.

Mr. LANSING with Mr. MAGNER, for one week.

Mr. CARTER with Mr. CLUNIE, on this vote.

Mr. BINGHAM with Mr. COMPTON, on this vote.

Mr. MOREY with Mr. CRAIN, on this vote.

Mr. SPINOLA. Mr. Speaker, I desire, if possible, to have my vote recorded.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman paying attention when his name was called and failed to hear it?

Mr. SPINOLA. I was sitting in my seat engaged in conversation at the moment, and did not hear my name called.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not entertain a request for unanimous consent to record the gentleman's vote under the circumstances.

Mr. SPINOLA. I wanted to vote in the negative if permitted to do so.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The House refuses to agree to the recommendation of the committee and the bill stands recommitted to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to call attention to clause 7 of the rule to which the Speaker referred a few moments ago.

This bill is now recommitted to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar. I wish to ask, first, if that bill in the Committee of the Whole House will take its place on the Calendar as other bills which are committed to that Calendar to-day?

The SPEAKER. This bill goes to the Committee of the Whole House and takes its position on the Calendar as if it had never been sent back to the House. It becomes the first bill on the Calendar, as the unfinished business, to be considered when the House again resumes consideration of the Private Calendar.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire, Mr. Speaker, to have this question settled now and before going into Committee of the Whole, because it is a very important question. I was of opinion and think the rule requires that when a bill is recommitted in this manner it goes back, as any other bill which would be committed at this time, and takes its place at the foot of the Calendar. I desire to ask the attention of the Chair to the language of the rule:

Whenever a bill is reported from the committee with an adverse recommendation and such recommendation is disagreed to by the House, the bill shall stand recommitted to said committee without further action of the House.

The SPEAKER. Precisely, and resumes its former place upon the Calendar.

Mr. SPRINGER. If there is a bill before the House, however, and recommitted under the circumstances named, it stands in its order on the Calendar as of that day.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman must see that this is a different case.

Mr. SPRINGER. I think not.

Mr. FARQUHAR. That is simply a supposition of the gentleman. This case stands on a different footing by the action of the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. I am only seeking a correct interpretation of the rule, which, as I have said, is one of importance.

The SPEAKER. This is unfinished business now in the committee.

Mr. SPRINGER. But it has been acted upon once in the committee and reported to the House, and the action of the committee was adverse to the bill.

The SPEAKER. But the House has refused to concur in that action of the committee, and that reverses it.

Mr. SPRINGER. Now, if there was in fact a rule on that subject the motion would be necessary, in order to save this bill, to reconsider the vote by which the House had stricken out the enacting clause, and after it was reconsidered it would have to be considered in committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think so.

Mr. SPRINGER. Without any rule it would require a motion to take it back to the committee. The rule would avoid it, and would prevent the committee from getting the bill into the House and getting action of the House upon it. I think the Chair is in error, but I will not appeal from the decision of the Chair.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. HOLMAN, for to-day, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. BUNN, on account of sickness.

To Mr. T. M. BROWNE, indefinitely, on account of illness.

On motion, to Mr. PETERS.

To Mr. TURNER, of Kansas, on account of sickness.

To Mr. LIND.

CHEROKEE OUTLET.

Mr. PERKINS. I desire to make a personal statement, which, if not a matter of personal privilege, is a matter of importance. In the the Associated Press dispatch of last evening, giving an account of proceedings of Congress, a synopsis is given of the Oklahoma bill, and in that report it is stated—

The Cherokee Outlet is declared open to settlement under the homestead law to bona fide settlers, and occupants are given a preference of right.

That dispatch has gone to all sections of the country. I have already two telegrams asking me whether the information is correct. I think Mr. SPRINGER also has one. The public are necessarily deceived by it, and the result, unless it be corrected, will be that this land will be taken possession of at once by settlers, which will work greatly to their prejudice as well as to the prejudice of the Cherokees.

I desire to state that under the provisions of the bill the Cherokee Outlet is not opened to settlement. No provision is made in the bill for the opening of the Cherokee Outlet to settlement. The statement should have been that the Public Land Strip, what is known as No Man's Land, is declared to be public lands and open to settlement under the provisions of the bill, and not the Cherokee Outlet.

The Cherokee Outlet is embraced within the boundaries of the proposed Territory of Oklahoma, but as yet is not open to settlement.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LAIDLAW. I move, Mr. Speaker, that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

FINDINGS OF COURT OF CLAIMS.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Before action is taken on that motion I desire to inquire of the Chair whether there has been any ruling by the Chair on the parliamentary question I submitted on Wednesday in regard to the findings of the Court of Claims.

The SPEAKER. If the House will give attention, the Chair will make a ruling upon that subject. Upon examination the Chair is unable to find that the provisions of the Bowman act or any rule of the House requires that the bills in question should be placed first upon the Private Calendar. Whether the House ought to make a rule to that effect or not the Chair can express no opinion. It has not made a rule, nor does the law in terms require it.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The motion of Mr. LAIDLAW was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan, in the chair.

ALBERT H. EMERY.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the Clerk will report the first bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 3538) for the relief of Albert H. Emery.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CUTCHEON. When this bill was last in Committee of the Whole, as I remember it, the amendment recommended by the Committee on Claims was amended by striking out "one hundred and seventy-five" and inserting "one hundred." After that motion was carried a motion was made to strike out the enacting clause. That has been rejected by the House, and we now come back to the amendment of $100,000, which the committee had adopted. Is not that the regular order?

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. It seems to me that it can not be construed that the House nullified a part of the action of the Committee of the Whole House that was referred to it and did not nullify the balance. The report was as a whole to the House. The House failed to adopt the recommendation of the Committee of the Whole.

The CHAIRMAN. The recommendation of the Committee of the Whole House was to strike out the enacting clause.

Mr. McMILLIN. Now, the recommendation of the committee was that the bill be amended by striking out "one hundred and seventy-five," thereby limiting it to a hundred thousand.

Mr. FARQUHAR. That is right.

Mr. McMILLIN. The amendment in the committee will stand, I say, as if there were no action taken upon that by the House, nor can the House take it away by refusing to agree to the action of the committee in striking out the enacting clause.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Then, Mr. Chairman, what is the effect, if it stands in that way upon the amendment made in the Committee of the Whole to strike out the word "seventy-five," and leave the amount at a hundred thousand dollars? I move that the bill be now laid aside with a favorable recommendation to the House.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the pending motion.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. This bill is not at the head of the Calendar. The first bill on the Calendar was the bill to retire Maj. Gen. John C. Frémont. When the House struck out the enacting clause of this bill for the relief of Mr. Emery, consideration of the bill for the retirement of Major-General Frémont was taken up, and this bill would take its original place on the Calendar. If the Chairman will look at the original Calendar of March 5 last he will see which was the first bill.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I make the point of order that it is now too late to make that point, because the committee has considered this bill, and the question before the committee is, shall this bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation?

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker. I rise to a question of order. The Speaker held in the House that the first business before the House was the consideration of unfinished business coming over from last week. A part of that unfinished business was the bill in regard to General Frémont, and the House should have disposed of that bill before it went into the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CUTCHEON. But there was no recommendation of the committee in regard to that bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes.

Mr. CUTCHEON. No; it was simply read. There was no recommendation.

Mr. McMILLIN. The bill was not reported to the House. It was simply read, and after its reading the committee rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is: Shall this bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass?

Mr. SPINOLA. Question.

Mr. McMILLIN. This bill is open to discussion, Mr. Chairman, is it not?

The CHAIRMAN. The record will be read, which will show the present status of the bill.

Mr. McMILLIN. The status of the bill was fixed by its recommitment this morning.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the record of the previous proceedings on this bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to state to the gentleman from Illinois that he recognized the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAIDLAW] in charge of the bill to make the motion which he submitted, and did not recognize the gentleman from Illinois.

The question being taken on the amendment of the committee as amended, the committee divided, and there were—ayes 71, noes 39; so the amendment as amended was adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying the bill aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. SPRINGER. Now I move to strike out the enacting clause of the bill.

Mr. BURROWS. That motion can not be made in Committee of the Whole. The committee can report the bill back to the House with the recommendation only.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is the motion I desired to make, that the bill be reported to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. SPRINGER, the committee divided; and there were—ayes 76, noes 61.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, I rose for the purpose of taking the floor to discuss this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] understands that the committee is now dividing upon this question.

Mr. McMILLIN. I do not so understand.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee is dividing upon the question of reporting this bill.

Mr. McMILLIN. No, sir; I rose when the gentleman [Mr. CUTCHEON] made his motion. The parliamentary question was raised as to the status of the bill and I rose to discuss the bill. It is here for the action of the committee. It is here, not under any instructions from the House. Debate upon it has not been limited.

The CHAIRMAN. The condition of the bill at the time the gentleman [Mr. McMILLIN] made his inquiry was that the Committee of the Whole was dividing, and any motion that he may have made would not change that order. The committee is dividing now.

Mr. McMILLIN. Does the Chair hold that the bill is not subject to debate after it is referred back to the House? Addressing myself to that point, Mr. Chairman, it can not be that the House can refuse to assent to the recommendations of the committee and can send the bill back here, and yet that after its return to the committee our hands are tied and we are unable to do anything. The bill comes back here for consideration, for deliberation, for such recommendation as the committee may see fit to make.

The CHAIRMAN. The rules provide that a bill in the condition of the present one comes back to the Committee of the Whole from the House without any further action on the part of the House than that provided in the rule, but the last action of the committee was in reference to reporting the bill to the House with a favorable recommendation. That motion was voted down, but debate had been closed upon the bill by the action of the committee—

Mr. McMILLIN. But does the Chair hold that when the House sends a bill back to the Committee of the Whole for consideration and deliberation no amendment to it is in order, no debate is in order? If so, why was the bill sent back here at all? What is the use of returning it to the Committee of the Whole if the committee has its hands tied? We might as well abolish the committee, and be subject to the order of the House, and let the bill be disposed of in the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill is now before the Committee of the Whole, and the question is: Shall it be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation?

Mr. McMILLIN. And upon that question I wish to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. If that question, when put to the committee, is carried, it ends all discussion of the bill. If not, then the bill will be open to discussion and amendment.

Mr. McMILLIN. I wish to know if an amendment to the bill will be in order?

The CHAIRMAN. It will not at this stage. The question is, Shall the bill be reported back to the House with a favorable recommendation? And if the committee so order, that ends it. If, on the contrary, the committee refuses to make that recommendation, the bill will then be open for debate or amendment and will be in exactly the position it was on Friday last when ordered reported to the House.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia is recognized.

Mr. CRISP. I understood the Chair to say that the question was a question which was pending before the Committee of the Whole when it last had this bill under consideration. I beg to suggest to the Chair that that is a mistake. This bill was in Committee of the Whole. When it was considered by that committee there was a rule limiting the debate upon the bill. The Committee of the Whole exhausted its powers as to this bill by reporting it back to the House. All action in the committee goes with that report to the House. Then the House, in the exercise of its power, referred the bill back to the committee, and it stands in the committee now exactly as it did when it was originally referred there. The House simply refused to conform to the recommendation of the committee and sent the bill back here for a de novo investigation by the committee. That, I suggest, is the parliamentary status of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state—

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the Chair allow me a remark in regard to the parliamentary status—

The CHAIRMAN. In one moment.

Mr. SPRINGER. What I desired was to speak before the Chair made a decision, not afterward.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to state the condition of the bill. The motion in Committee of the Whole last Friday was to lay aside the bill, to be reported with a favorable recommendation, pending which the gentleman from Illinois interposed a privileged motion to strike out the enacting clause of the bill, which motion was carried. The House this morning refused to concur in that recommendation of the Committee of the Whole; the bill therefore comes back to the Committee and resumes the exact position it then occupied, and the question is, Shall the bill be laid aside to be reported with a favorable recommendation?

Mr. CRISP. I do not wish to argue against the deliberate judgment of the Chair, but I trust I may be permitted before a final decision to give an illustration of my position.

This is a committee of the House; that is all it is; and it may be assimilated to any other committee of the House. Suppose, Mr. Chairman, that a bill is reported to the House from the Committee on Ways and Means and after consideration is recommitted. How does the committee consider the bill? According to the position in which it stood when last in the committee? Not at all. If the bill is recommitted without instruction it is before the committee for all purposes as it was originally. There has been no intimation on the part of the House in recommitting this bill to the Committee of the Whole that the committee shall conform to its previous action; on the contrary, the House says to the committee, "Your recommendation is not approved; and we send the bill back to you to make such other recommendation as you shall see proper to make." If the question is now simply whether the bill shall be reported back to the House, we render the action of the House in recommitting the bill nugatory; we proceed upon the assumption that the recommitment has been practically coupled with instructions that the bill be reported back without any change or alteration.

Mr. McMILLIN. Not only with such instructions, but with a coercive effect upon the committee; for, according to the ruling of the Chair, the Committee of the Whole can now do nothing in the way of amending or improving the bill.

Mr. HOOKER. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that, while this bill will go back to the Committee of the Whole House for consideration, after the House has refused to sanction the action of the Committee of the Whole in striking out the enacting clause, it can not interfere with the action of the committee previously adopting an amendment to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not hear the gentleman from Mississippi or any other gentleman on the floor. Gentlemen will cease conversation.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, consider for one moment the status of the bill. It was referred by the Committee of the Whole, under the rule, to the committee and reported to the House with a recommendation. The House disagrees to the recommendation of the committee and sends the bill back to the committee; not simply to consider the question of disagreement, but to consider the bill. It is here as it was originally, and it is not proper to conclude that it was the intention of the House to instruct the committee simply to vote whether the bill, as it stands, shall be reported back to the House favorably or unfavorably. I submit it has the same right under the rule which existed under the original reference, the right of general debate, the right of debate under the five-minute rule, and when that is exhausted for report to the House.

I thank my friend from South Carolina [Mr. DIBBLE] for calling my attention to this clause of Jefferson's Manual:

If a report be recommitted before agreed to in the House, what is passed in committee is of no validity; the whole question is again before the committee, and a new resolution must be again moved as if nothing had passed.

That is what we sought, and that is the status of this bill when re-committed to the Committee of the Whole.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to state, if the gentleman from Georgia will give his attention, that of course where the Jefferson's Manual conflicts with the rules of the House and the joint rules of the House and Senate the latter prevail.

Secondly, the Chair desires to state in reply to what has been stated by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] that this question is entirely within the control of the committee. If the committee refuses to adopt the pending motion—that is, to report the bill back favorably to the House with amendment—if they refuse to adopt that, then the bill will be open to discussion and amendment; but if, on the contrary, the committee shall report it favorably to the House, that ends the discussion, because the House was dividing on this question when it last sat and was interfered with by the specially privileged motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] to strike out the enacting clause. If the committee refuse to lay it aside to be reported favorably to the House, then it will be open to discussion and amendment; but if the committee shall lay it aside to be reported to the House, of course that is the end of it in the committee.

Mr. CRISP. Is there any rule of the House under which the Chair can make any such decision?

The CHAIRMAN. The rule is that the bill, on the refusal of the House to strike out the enacting clause, comes back to the Committee of the Whole House, and under the practice resumes its former position. That action has been taken. There is no special rule governing the Committee of the Whole House in this respect.

Mr. CRISP. I have read the general rule from Jefferson's Manual.

The CHAIRMAN. The practice of the House has been the other way. It is analogous to the case when a quorum does not vote, when, as stated in Jefferson's Manual (page 170), "the matter continues exactly in the state in which it was before the division and must be resumed at that point on any future day."

Mr. CRISP. I think it is a mistake that such has been the practice of the House. If not, the Clerk can turn the Chair to such a decision.

Mr. SPRINGER and Mr. McMILLIN took the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize each gentleman in turn. He now recognizes the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCADOO], who wishes to ask a question.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have been standing on the floor and thought I would be recognized.

Mr. CANNON addressed the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey has the floor.

Mr. MCADOO. I wish to ask the Chair a question. I think there is some misunderstanding in the minds of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN]. If I understand the Chair right he holds that the motion is not debatable.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair agrees with the gentleman from Georgia that when the bill comes back from the House and is within the control of the committee the motion to report it back to the House favorably is debatable. It is otherwise, however, when the committee is dividing. If the committee, on the contrary, does not order it reported back, then it will be open to discussion and amendment.

Mr. SPRINGER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope the Chair will insist on gentlemen taking their seats. I can hardly hear myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be compelled to suspend business of the committee unless order is preserved on the floor.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, the rules of the House so far as applicable are to control in Committee of the Whole. In a Committee of the Whole House we have no previous question, but a motion simply to close debate, which is equivalent and analogous to the motion for the previous question in the House. When this bill was pending in committee, and before debate was closed by order of the committee, it was of course subject to amendment and debate as if in the House before the operation of the previous question.

The bill, after debate was closed in committee, went to the House by the action of the committee, on the motion to report it to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out, and the action of the committee on the bill was reconsidered by the House and the bill sent back to the committee. Now, the question is as to whether the order closing debate heretofore still exists? I hold that it does not. If it had been in the House and a demand for the previous question had carried, it would have exhausted itself when the vote was taken, and the bill would be again open to amendment and debate if there had been adverse action. This is pointed out in the Digest on page 417, under the rules of the House, where it is said:

When a vote, taken under the operation of the previous question, is recorsidered, the question is then divested of the previous question and is open to debate and amendment.

Now, I hold that, this motion to rise and report this bill to the House having been reconsidered and the action of the House being to again recommit the bill to the committee, the bill comes back divested of the order closing debate, and it is again upon our Calendar subject to all debate and amendment, as if no previous action had been taken upon it. Otherwise you could never perfect a bill sent back to the committee under those circumstances, and our mouths would be closed to debate. All we could do under the circumstances, if the opinion of the Chair is to prevail, would be to report it back again to the House adversely or otherwise.

Now, suppose we want to amend the bill, what must we do? We must vote against reporting it to the House with favorable recommendation. The converse of that is that we report it back to the House with an adverse recommendation; and so it is manifest you compel us to report it one way or the other, just as it stood before the House took action on the former report of the committee, namely, to strike out the enacting clause.

Now, why not allow the question to be open to amendment and debate, so that we may reach a conclusion which will be satisfactory?

Mr. CUTCHEON. When the House went into Committee of the Whole, I raised the parliamentary inquiry as to the status of the bill.

Mr. OATES. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment, as I can not secure recognition of the Chair. I wish to state that while I am in favor of the bill, I have to vote against it if it be held that what was done in committee before was conclusive against amendment or discussion, for I am not in favor of the gag rule.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I immediately made the motion that the bill be laid aside with favorable recommendation as amended, leaving the amount at $100,000, and unless the ruling of the Chair is correct, that that is the pending motion, then my motion is in order and is the pending motion, and is the only one that the vote is to be taken upon.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has held that the motion of the gentleman from Michigan was the motion really pending when the bill came back.

In order that there may be no misapprehension in regard to the matter the Chair will state that the pending question to be put now is, Shall the bill as amended be laid aside with favorable recommendation? If the majority so decides, that ends the question; if they decide otherwise, the bill is open for further amendment and debate.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I move to amend the motion to strike out the words "favorably recommended" and recommend that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Claims. I suppose that motion is in order as an amendment to the pending motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will suspend for a moment. The committee will rise to receive a message from the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message was received from the Senate by Mr. McCook, its Secretary, announcing the passage of bills of the following titles in which concurrence was requested, namely:

A bill (S. 78) to provide for the construction of a public building at Salem, Oregon;

A bill (S. 166) for the erection of a public building at Virginia City, Nev.;

A bill (S. 167) for the erection of a public building at Reno, State of Nevada;

A bill (S. 225) providing for the erection of a public building at the city of Hastings, Nebr.;

A bill (S. 301) for the erection of a public building at Stillwater, Minn.;

A bill (S. 466) for the erection of a public building for a post-office and United States land office at the city of The Dalles, Oregon;

A bill (S. 488) to provide for the erection of a public building for the use and accommodation of the post-office at Mammoth Hot Springs, in the Yellowstone National Park;

A bill (S. 1230) for the erection of a public building in the city of Pawtucket, R. I.;

A bill (S. 1231) for the erection of a public building in the city of Woonsocket, R. I.;

A bill (S. 1306) for the erection of a public building at Hudson, N. Y.;

A bill (S. 1590) to provide for the construction of a public building at the city of Stockton, Cal.; and

A bill (S. 2644) for the recognition of F. A. Patterson as a captain of the Third West Virginia Cavalry.

It also announced the passage of concurrent resolutions authorizing the printing of 2,500 extra copies of the report of the health officer of the District of Columbia.

Also, that the Senate agreed to the amendments of the House to bills of the following titles, namely:

The bill (S. 296) vesting in the vestry of Christ Church, Washington Parish, District of Columbia, all of the right, title, and interest of the United States of America in and to square south of square 1092, in the city of Washington, District aforesaid; and

The bill (S. 1083) to amend the act giving the approval and sanction of Congress to the route and termini of the Anacostia and Potomac River Railroad of the District of Columbia.

It also announced that the Senate insisted on its amendments disagreed to by the House to House bills of the following titles, and asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes thereon, and had appointed Messrs. VEST, DOLPH, and CULLOM as conferees on the part of the Senate, namely:

The bill (H. R. 4130) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at the city of Pierre, in South Dakota; and

The bill (H. R. 7617) to authorize the Oregon and Washington Bridge Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Columbia River between the State of Oregon and the State of Washington, and to establish it as a post-route.

It also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which concurrence was requested, the bill (H. R. 5179) to fix the rate of interest to be charged on arrearages of general and special taxes now due to the District of Columbia if paid within a time specified.

And, also, that the Senate had passed the bill (H. R. 5825) prescribing the times for sales and for notice of sales of property in the District of Columbia for overdue taxes.

ALBERT H. EMERY.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I want to say, if I understand the ruling of the Chair, it is as follows and on the following state of facts: This bill was committed to the Calendar. The committee proceeded to have general debate upon the bill. By and by general debate was closed. It was then read under the five-minute rule. By and by debate under the five-minute rule was closed. Then the gentleman from Michigan obtained the floor and in the absence of all other motions moved that the bill be reported with a favorable recommendation to the House. Upon that motion the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] moved that the enacting clause be stricken out, which motion took precedence of the motion of the gentleman from Michigan. The committee so recommended, the bill went to the House, and the House was asked to vote whether it would concur in the recommendation, namely, to strike out the enacting clause.

The House refused to so concur. Under the rule, this bill came back to the committee for further consideration, and being back to the committee, the House having refused to recognize that recommendation, the committee has to pick up the bill at the exact point of time and procedure when the motion of the gentleman from Illinois was made, namely, upon the motion of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CUTCHEON] to report it favorably.

Now, then, the House or committee may or may not adopt that motion. It may or may not be antagonized by parliamentary motions; but if the committee does not adopt the motion, as the Chair well says, it seems to me that, if the committee votes the motion down, then it is open to amendment, but not debate, as I understand. In other words, the only thing that the House reversed the committee upon was the motion to strike out the enacting clause; and the House having refused to concur, we pick it up at that exact point for action.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is proceeding by consent of the Chair.

Mr. WALKER, of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. Are these motions open for debate?

The CHAIRMAN. They are not, under the rule. It is simply a matter of courtesy on the part of the Chair.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Under what rule does the House hold that a motion to lay aside a bill can not be debated? I am not familiar with parliamentary law, and I would like to inquire.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no rule on the subject.

Mr. WALKER, of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a word or two upon this question. It seems to me that the whole question is involved in this: whether the House has the right to recommit to the Committee of the Whole a report that has been made from the Committee of the Whole to the House; secondly, the further question is involved in it whether when the Committee of the Whole makes a report to the House its report is completed and closed on that question that it has reported to the House.

Now, it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, entirely clear that, when any bill is before the committee, or has been considered by the committee, and has been reported to the House, the report of that committee upon that bill is closed, and that, when a motion is made to recommit that bill to the committee, it is clearly for the reconsideration of that bill by the committee, and it must be reconsidered without any reference to the records of the committee upon that bill, precisely the same as though it was a new bill.

Now, I find the action of the House in recommitting the bill to the committee is defeated by the records of the committee. Now, it seems to me there is no dodging that conclusion, and, furthermore, I believe that all parliamentary law aside from the rules justifies that view of the case as well as the rules.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, let us have the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall this bill as amended be laid aside with a favorable recommendation?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I offered an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the motion is out of order because the committee was dividing upon the motion at that point.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I beg the pardon of the Chair. The motion I made is precisely in the same attitude as the motion made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER], that the enacting clause be stricken out. That was voted upon, and therefore it could not be that the committee was dividing. The Chairman held that that motion was in order, and this motion is made in precisely the same way, and as the committee voted on it a similar motion would certainly be in order under the rule exactly as if that motion had not been carried and the House had disapproved of it, so that an amendment to the recommendation is clearly in order. I submit that to the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not understand all that the gentleman from Kentucky said, because of the confusion, but there has been no motion entertained by the Chair whatever this morning. The only question the Chair holds before this committee is, Shall this bill as amended be laid aside with a favorable recommendation?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. That motion I moved to amend, and it is clearly an amendable motion. It is an amendable motion because it is not a motion to rise only, but a motion to recommend, and that recommendation is amendable.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has held that when the motion was made and stated the committee was really, as a parliamentary fact, in the act of dividing, and the motion would not be in order.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. When was it dividing?

Mr. CUTCHEON. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Can the Committee of the Whole commit a bill to the Committee on Claims?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I do not ask that this committee commit it to the Committee on Claims. I ask that the recommendation of this committee to the House be that the House recommit it to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CUTCHEON. That will be competent as an instruction or recommendation.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. And that has been decided to be in order over and over again.

Mr. DOCKERY. I hope the Chair will not rule out the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky. I think that the Chair was right in the original ruling; and I think that every reason that made the original ruling sound and correct makes it in order now to offer the amendment presented by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the Chair the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky would do indirectly what can not be done directly, which has been uniformly decided by the House as not in order, and, as the Chair has stated, the whole matter is entirely in the hands of the committee. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. SPRINGER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SPRINGER. If this committee should negative the pending motion, would it be in order to move to reduce the amount carried by the bill as it stands?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair holds that if the committee refuses to report the bill as amended back to the House with a favorable recommendation, any motion or amendment that would otherwise be in order will be in order thereafter.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then we will vote down the motion to report it back favorably.

The CHAIRMAN. That is for the committee to decide, not for the Chair.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I submit that in a case of this kind, where the House has referred the matter back to the Committee of the Whole, it is not in order for us to have it sent back again without having a word of discussion upon it, and I submit that there is no rule requiring that that course shall be taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair answers the gentleman from Iowa that that is a matter entirely for the committee to settle, and it is not for the Chair to assume to settle it. The Chair will put the question.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Chairman, what is the decision of the Chair? I have not been able to learn. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state it again. The decision of the Chair is that the only question before the committee now is the question upon which it was dividing last Friday when the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] interposed his privileged motion.

Mr. OATES. And the Chair decides that debate is not admissible? Does that decision cut off debate?

The CHAIRMAN. Debate has proceeded by unanimous consent, and the Chair is happy to know that almost every member of the committee has had something to say on the subject, either in his seat or standing and addressing the Chair. [Laughter.]

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. OATES. Will the gentleman from Tennessee wait until I get through? [Laughter.]

Mr. McMILLIN. Certainly.

Mr. OATES. I want to know if the decision of the Chair is that the proceedings had upon this bill heretofore are such that the only question now is upon the motion of the gentleman from Michigan, which cuts off all debate. Is that the decision of the Chair?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not recognize the motion of the gentleman from Michigan. The Chair holds that by virtue of parliamentary law and practice this bill, coming from the House in the shape in which it has come, is sent to the committee for the settlement of one question, to wit, Shall the bill be favorably reported to the House? pending when the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] to strike out the enacting clause was adopted. Now, the committee have entire control of that question, and if they desire either to amend or to further discuss the bill, they will simply vote down the motion to report it favorably. Therefore the Chair will put the question upon that motion. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. OATES. I am in favor of the bill, but I think it is unfair to cut off those who want to discuss it, and therefore I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the committee itself cut off discussion at its last session by its own action.

Mr. McMILLIN. On the appeal of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] I want to be heard long enough to have read that portion of the RECORD of last Friday's proceedings which shows that the Chair is in error in the assumption that at the time the motion of the gentleman from Illinois was made the committee was dividing. As matter of fact the motion had merely been made, and the gentleman from Illinois made his motion before the committee began to divide; and I think it is well for us to act upon this matter advisedly. I ask the Clerk to read from the RECORD the portion of last Friday's proceedings which I have marked, which will show that from the time the motion was made by the gentleman who moved to lay the bill aside with a favorable recommendation until the committee proceeded to the consideration of the Frémont bill there was no division had that would cut off the amendment offered this morning by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE].

The Clerk read as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying the bill aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. SPRINGER. Now I move to strike out the enacting clause of the bill.

Mr. BURROWS. That motion can not be made in Committee of the Whole. The committee can report the bill back to the House with the recommendation only.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is the motion I desire to make, that the bill be reported to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. SPRINGER, the committee divided; and there were—ayes 76, noes 61.

Mr. LAIDLAW. I call for tellers.

Mr. SPINOLA. Oh, no.

Mr. SPRINGER. It will require a vote of the committee to tell whether tellers shall be ordered.

Tellers were ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAIDLAW] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN].

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 80, noes 76.

So the motion to strike out the enacting clause was adopted.

Mr. McMILLIN. Thereupon, as the record shows, the committee proceeded to the consideration of the Frémont bill, called up by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SPINOLA], and it will be seen that at no time was there a division pending before the motion of the gentleman from New York. Hence, with all due deference, I insist that the Chair is in error in holding that when the motion of the gentleman from Illinois was adopted the committee was dividing.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama appeals from the decision of the Chair. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The question having been put,

The CHAIRMAN said: The noes appear to have it.

Mr. REILLY. I call for a division.

The question was again taken; and there were—ayes 56, noes 46.

Mr. OATES. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. OATES and Mr. LAIDLAW were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 70, noes 61.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is, Shall this bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation?

Mr. LAIDLAW. Before the vote is taken on that question I would like the Chair to announce that, if the motion be agreed to, the recommendation will be only for $100,000.

Mr. McMILLIN. Debate is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair declines to state anything about that matter.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 48, noes 70.

So the motion to lay the bill aside to be reported favorably to the House was rejected.

Mr. LAIDLAW. I demand tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state the status of the bill. It is now open for debate and amendment.

Mr. LAIDLAW. I demand tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the Chair the demand comes too late.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I move to amend the bill by striking out "$100,000" and inserting "$75,000."

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "$75,000" and inserting "$50,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman from Iowa, as I understand, makes this motion for the purpose of having the House now finally conclude this question by agreeing to fix $50,000 as the amount to be paid.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I want to bring the bill to the amount I am willing to vote for. I will never vote for it unless the amount be cut down to $50,000.

Mr. SPRINGER. Is that satisfactory to the friends of the bill?

Mr. FARQUHAR. It is not satisfactory to anybody but himself.

Mr. MCCREARY. At the last session of Congress, when this bill was under consideration, an amendment was adopted fixing $65,000 as the amount to be paid Mr. Emery. I suggest that the gentleman from Iowa modify his amendment so as to name $65,000 instead of $50,000.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I have very carefully followed the debate on this question for several Congresses. During the discussions in previous Congresses a great many questions were asked which were not satisfactorily answered. I am satisfied that $50,000 would be a liberal compensation in this case; and I do not like to accept the proposition of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MCCREARY]. If my amendment be voted down, the sense of the committee can then be tested upon $65,000, the amount proposed by the gentleman from Kentucky. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa, to the amendment of Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky, it was agreed to, there being—ayes 83, noes 50.

The amendment as amended was then agreed to.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move to amend the bill by inserting "which amount shall be in full of all demands against the Government."

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. That is already in the bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. All right then.

Mr. MANSUR. I want to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have withdrawn my amendment.

Mr. MANSUR. I simply want to add the words "This amount is given as full payment by the stingiest government on God's green earth to private individuals."

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. I would like to substitute the declaration that "this is $50,000 paid for nothing."

Mr. LAIDLAW. I demand tellers on the vote last taken.

Tellers were not ordered.

Mr. MANSUR. Mr. Chairman, was the question taken on my amendment which I offered as an amendment to that of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER]?

Mr. SPRINGER. I withdrew my amendment, as it was stated the bill already contained substantially the same provision which I proposed to insert.

Mr. MANSUR. If the gentleman withdraws his amendment I withdraw mine.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now on laying aside the bill as amended to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation. The motion was agreed to.

JOHN C. FRÉMONT.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the title of the bill next in order.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 2849) authorizing the President to appoint and retire John C. Frémont as a major-general in the United States Army.

Mr. SPINOLA. This bill has already been read through on a former day, and there appears to be no opposition to it. I move that it be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. KILGORE. I make the point of order that this bill is before the Committee of the Whole for consideration; and the motion just made by the gentleman from New York would cut off all amendments and discussion, and therefore can not be entertained.

The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of any proposition to amend or debate, the only thing the Chair can do is to state the motion of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. KILGORE. I move to amend by striking out in lines 9 and 12 of the bill the word "major" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "brigadier."

As I understand, Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this bill is to restore General Frémont to the rank of major-general and put him on the retired-list with the rank and pay of a major-general retired. Now, General Frémont has been out of the service twenty-five years or more. If he is entitled to a pension for valuable services rendered by him heretofore

(and I concede that he has rendered valuable service to the country), I think Congress ought to meet the question squarely and give him a pension such as he may be entitled to, if any he should have. This is nothing more nor less than a proposition to pension him at the rate of $10,000 or $12,000 a year. I am not certain as to the amount which a major-general on the retired-list would be entitled to receive; but I understand it is about $11,000 a year.

Mr. CUTCHEON. The salary of a major-general serving in the regular Army is $7,500 a year; upon the retired-list he would get 75 per cent. of that amount.

Mr. CHEADLE. Five thousand six hundred and twenty-five dollars. A MEMBER. Are there not extra allowances?

Mr. CUTCHEON. There are no allowances for quarters, rations, or anything else.

Mr. PICKLER. What is the age of General Frémont?

Mr. CUTCHEON. Seventy-six years.

Mr. KILGORE. I do not know of any instance where Congress has retired an officer with the same rank that he had in the volunteer army.

Mr. CUTCHEON. But General Frémont was a major-general in the regular Army.

Mr. KILGORE. But it is not the rule, as I understand it, to retire officers with the same rank they have held in the regular Army.

Mr. CUTCHEON. If the gentleman were conversant with the history of this matter he would know that such officers have been retired with full rank in a number of instances, especially when they have had war service.

Mr. KILGORE. But it is not the rule to place a man back on the roll with the rank of major-general after he has been out of the service for twenty-five years or any other considerable length of time and then retire him with the rank of major-general. I say that is not the rule; and we ought not to establish a precedent of that kind unless the rule is made to apply to all alike. General Frémont's services to the country—his greatest services—were rendered as a civilian, and not as a soldier. He was liberally rewarded for such services by the Government; he was honored and promoted by the people, and has been accorded a high place in the esteem of the people of the nation.

Mr. CUTCHEON. One year ago we retired our old friend, General Rosecrans, with his full rank of brigadier-general, and I think the gentleman participated in that action. General Rosecrans is now drawing his salary, not only as a brigadier-general on the retired-list, but also his salary as Register of the Treasury in addition.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. That is a statement, Mr. Chairman, that ought not to go unchallenged. He is not drawing both salaries and he can not do so under the law.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I understood he was.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. The gentleman's understanding is incorrect. He can not draw both salaries under the law.

Mr. CUTCHEON. There is a bill now pending to prevent the drawing of two salaries.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I should like to inquire of the gentleman from Michigan whether we have retired any officer who went out of the Army at as high a grade as major-general?

Mr. CUTCHEON. I believe there are such instances, but I can not recall them at this moment.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I know there are numbers of officers who have been retired with the rank which they held in the volunteers, but I believe there has been no instance where an officer of the regular Army has been retired with the rank of major-general on the retired-list. Has there been any retired at a higher grade than that of brigadier-general?

Mr. CUTCHEON. I believe there has been quite a number of cases where the retirement has been in the highest grade held in the regular Army.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. If the gentleman can remember any instance where such an officer has been retired as major-general in the regular Army I should like to have him state it.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I believe there are a number of instances. Of course where an officer is retired as a major-general there is no question of regular Army or volunteers. All retired officers are recognized as a part of the military establishment.

Mr. SPINOLA rose.

Mr. KILGORE. I believe I have the floor, and I should like to ask the gentleman from Michigan what would be the pay of General Frémont if he were placed upon the retired-list as brigadier-general?

Mr. CUTCHEON. The full pay of brigadier-general is $5,500 a year, and on the retired-list he would get three-quarters of that full pay. As a major-general he would get three-quarters of $7,500 a year.

Mr. KILGORE. Figure it out for me.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I will in a moment.

Mr. KILGORE. The purpose of my amendment is to strike out "major-general" and make it read "brigadier-general."

Mr. SPINOLA. Mr. Chairman, it would be an insult to reduce the grade in the case of General Frémont from that of major-general to that of brigadier-general, when we reflect upon the immense renown which he has conferred upon his country. The services this great man has rendered can not be adequately described by any speech delivered upon this floor. His name stands upon the pages of his country's history almost unsurpassed for the value and glory of the acts which he has done and which have increased the extent and power and the glory of the Republic. In his declining years, in his old age, should we not do everything we can to smooth his way during the few years that still remain to him? Shall I appeal in vain to the patriotism of this House in his behalf?

Think of what he has done, Mr. Chairman. He saved to this country the Pacific Slope without the cost of a drop of blood. And had it not been for his presence, decision, and skill the red flag of England to-day would have waved over the whole of that vast extent of country, and its millions of gold and silver would have been lost to the United States besides; it would not have been secured by us without a costly and bloody war. He gave it to us without price, and because of his services to the country we should now take care of him. Coming from Northern California all the way down to Monterey he took Mexican fort after Mexican fort until at last the American flag floated along the whole coast.

When he met Commodore Sloat the question was settled and the Pacific Slope was in our possession, with its now untold wealth in agriculture and commerce, which, added to the products of its mountains and valleys, has done much towards making us the great nation we are to-day, which should justify us in conferring upon this intrepid man the very highest honors within our gift. We should not in his declining years permit him to suffer, but, on the contrary, should save him from every discomfort and make pleasant his few remaining years. I trust, therefore, the amendment will not prevail. Three-fourths of the pay of $7,500 is not more than we ought to give to him when we consider the great services he has rendered to the country.

I hope, therefore, my friend from Texas will withdraw the amendment and let this bill go through just as it is.

Mr. STEWART, of Georgia. Do you know this gentleman's pecuniary condition?

Mr. SPINOLA. My friend asks me as to his pecuniary condition. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to picture before the House and the country the pecuniary condition of any citizen. But I will say, God forbid that I shall ever be placed in the financial position he occupies to-day or that any member of this House shall be placed in that condition. Yes, I could describe his condition financially if I chose to do so, but I do not believe it necessary.

Frémont blazed his way across the continent with no guide but the starry banner of his country as westward the march of empire took its way. The name of General Frémont is identified forever with some of the proudest and most grateful passages in American history. His 20,000 miles of wilderness explorations in the midst of the inclemencies of nature and the ferocities of jealous and merciless tribes, his powers of endurance in a slender form, his intrepid coolness in the most appalling dangers, his majestic sway over enlightened and savage men, his vast contributions to science, his controlling energy in the extension of our empire, his lofty and unsullied ambition, his magnanimity, humanity, genius, sufferings, and heroism, should make all lovers of progress, learning, and virtue rejoice when Frémont's services have been rewarded by the admiration and the gratitude of the nation.

The feet of three men have pressed the slopes of the Rocky Mountains whose names are associated forever with these vast ranges. Humboldt, the Nestor of scientific travelers; Audubon, the interpreter of nature; and Frémont, the pathfinder of empire. Each has done much to illustrate the natural history of North America and to develop its illimitable resources.

The youngest of all is likely to become as illustrious as either, for fortune has linked his name with a scene in the history of the Republic as startling to the world as the announcement of its existence. To him was committed the magnificent task of opening the golden gates of our Pacific empire. His early association with Nicollet, as his assistant for four years in the survey of the basin of the Upper Mississippi, and his association with that learned man in his field labors and in drawing up the great map which unfolded to science the vast tract they had explored gave him a thirst for adventure. He now planned the first of those distant and perilous expeditions which have given luster to his name.

Having received a lieutenant's commission in the Corps of Topographical Engineers, he proposed to the Secretary of War to penetrate the Rocky Mountains. His plan was approved, and in 1842, with a handful of men gathered on the Missouri frontier, he reached and explored the South Pass; he achieved more than his instructions required. His report was printed by the Senate, translated into foreign languages, and the scientific world looked on Frémont as one of its benefactors. Impatient, however, for broader and more hazardous fields, he planned a new expedition. His first had carried him to the summit of the Rocky Mountains, and in November, 1843, he stood on Fort Vancouver, with the calm waters of the Pacific at his feet. On his return he was lost to the world nine months traversing 3,500 miles in sight of eternal snows, in which he explored and revealed the grand features of Alta California, the Sierra Nevada, the Valley of San Joaquin and Sacramento, and established the physical geography and natural history on the western part of our continent.

He was again in Washington in August, 1844; his report put the seal to the fame of the young explorer.

In 1845 he was again on his way to the Pacific with his mountain comrades, to examine in detail the Pacific slope of the continent, which resulted in giving a volume of new science to the world and California to the United States.

His achievements, military and civil, and services during the war with Mexico, in the occupation by our naval and military forces, resulting in its acquisition, were rewarded by the people of California, when it became an independent and sovereign State, by making him the first Senator to represent them in the Congress of the United States.

Mr. MANSUR. Mr. Chairman, Jessie Benton married John C. Frémont.

Mr. SPINOLA. Yes.

Mr. MANSUR. It was Benton, the great Missourian, who pointed the way to the west, and said: "There lies India, there lies the East."

Speaking, then, as a Missourian, with Missouri's admiration for Benton, the only man to this day, whether Republican, Whig, or Democrat, who has served the American people for thirty years in the Senate of the United States, I hope that this bill may pass. And I would say to my Democratic friends, passing by the other side for the time being, that John C. Frémont, when he led his force past the Rocky Mountains, when he went to California, when as military governor he ruled there, when he led the way to the treaties that gave us all that Mexican region, fellow-Democrats, he added to this country nearly one-half its area. This he did in connection with the valor of our American soldiers, of whom he was one. Thus Frémont's action and conduct eventually led to our acquisition of half the area of this country that you gentlemen on the other side are so fond of telling us every day you saved.

Mr. CUTCHEON rose.

Mr. MANSUR. I hope I will not be interrupted, Mr. Chairman. If that be the case, if he doubled the magnitude of the country, of which to-day each and every man on this floor I hope and believe is justly proud, if his actions and management gave us a region that has more than doubled our power, as well as the wealth and the glory that attach to us as a nation among all the other nations of the earth, then this man, who is known in Missouri as the great Pathfinder of the West, deserves this recognition at the hands of the American Congress as well as any other man whose name has in recent years been before the Congress of the United States for similar action.

Mr. Chairman, I am speaking for myself, without consultation with any one on this side of the Chamber, but I do not believe that a man from Missouri could well oppose this bill. I hope not, at least. We have seen, day in and day out, other men thus retired, this one and the other compensated in some manner for gallant services. And when it comes to the glory of my own State I feel, although I do not believe I can quote exactly the language uttered by the immortal Webster when he rose in his place in the Senate of the United States and, speaking for the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, as I hope I am voicing to-day the sentiment of Missouri, said:

There stands Massachusetts; she needs no eulogium.

[Laughter.]

That may not be exactly correct. I know I have got the idea, though possibly my language is not exact. So say I for Missouri.

There Missouri stands, and needs no eulogium. And as Webster spoke for Massachusetts in the olden days, so spoke Benton for Missouri, in the same years and in the same place; and each statesman was and is the crowning glory of his State to this day. So, as the name of Frémont is by the ties of marriage indissolubly linked with that of Benton and the blood of the great commoner of Missouri is perpetuated in the line of Frémont, I have, as all Missourians have, the double incentive to honor both in aiding by my voice and my vote this bill, which, if it becomes a law, will give comfort to the closing hours of a gallant man and his family, whose services have been distinguished in civil as well as in military times. So, I appeal earnestly in behalf of a man so eminent all his life as General Frémont was and is; a man whose work aided so largely in securing for us such a magnificent area of territory; one so related to the family of the foremost Missourian of any age; I may safely appeal to this side of this Chamber, surely to every colleague from my State, in view of all precedents adopted in these latter years and of the real merit of General Frémont, to rally to the support of this bill.

Mr. SPINOLA. I yield now to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIAMS] for a few minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I hope the committee will not support the amendment. In my judgment it is a wise provision of law that provides that the officer grown old in the service of his country may be placed on the retired-list with ample provision to render the evening of his life happy and pleasant; and whenever and wherever I meet one of those gray-headed veterans, standing by reason of age in the twilight of two worlds, I cheerfully render to him the reverence that is due to age and valor.

I also approve of those special acts of Congress that have singled out officers who, after serving with credit to themselves and country in the camp and field, return to the duties of civil life, and then in time of war, when the nation has need of the brain and brawn of her bravest sons, again took up the profession of arms and rendered brilliant and distinguished services to their country. Therefore, I am in favor of authorizing the President, by a special act of Congress, to appoint and retire John C. Frémont as a major-general of the United States Army. Time will not permit, nor is it necessary in this presence, to recount the services of General Frémont. They are written on the pages of our country's history, brilliant in character and beneficial in results.

His name will be identified forever with the history of adding one of the brightest stars that glitter in our constellation of sovereign States to the American Union. California, with the "sky of Italy and the soil of Egypt" and a mineral wealth that challenges the admiration and wonder of the world, was won and saved to the nation by the bravery, fortitude, and sagacity of John C. Frémont. Yea, I go farther; his history will be forever identified with that vast empire that lies between the Mississippi River on the east and the Golden Gate on the west. Over treeless and waterless plains he led his gallant explorers; up the rugged mountains, above the line of perpetual snow, he led his brave men and unfurled the stars and stripes higher towards the blue dome of the sky than mortal man had ever waved our country's flag before.

Foreign nations recognized his eminent services. The King of Prussia, afterwards the Emperor of the German Empire, delegated to the illustrious Humboldt the duty of presenting Frémont with the "Grand golden medal destined to those who have labored at scientific progress."

The Royal Geographical Society of England awarded him the "Founders' medal" for distinguished services rendered geographical science.

But the recognition of the distinguished services of John C. Frémont is not the heritage of any party. The author of this bill is the able gentleman from New York, the hero of a hundred Democratic battles and victories and the idol of Tammany Hall [applause on the Democratic side], where he leads the way in rendering homage and justice to the Old Pathfinder of the nation. May not Republicans gladly follow his lead?

The life-work of Frémont is almost done; when the weight of seventy-six years rest upon the head, life has but few duties and no ambitions. Frémont is poor; the nation is rich; and to me it is a grateful duty to cast my vote in favor of a measure that I regard as one of simple justice to a distinguished citizen of the Republic.

I hope, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman will withdraw his motion to strike out the word "major-general" and insert "brigadier-general." It is due to General Frémont, in view of his past services and in view of his past history and the services he has rendered to this nation, that he be placed upon the retired-list in his old age and in his poverty.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to detain the committee, but I wish to call attention for a moment to the question that was asked by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE] and also by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] in regard to the retirement of officers with the full rank held in the Army. I hold in my hand the Army Register for 1889, and on page 186, where the retired-list is found, I find that Daniel E. Sickles was retired as major-general in April, 1869. The highest rank he ever held in the military establishment was colonel of the Forty-second Infantry. Directly following his name is that of John C. Robinson, whose highest rank in the military establishment was that of colonel of the Forty-third Infantry. He was retired with the rank of major-general May 6, 1869. The next name is that of Samuel C. Carroll. His highest rank was that of lieutenant-colonel of the Twenty-first Infantry. He was retired with the rank of major-general on the 9th of June, 1869.

Then follows the name of Maj. Gen. John Pope, who was retired with his proper rank. The next is Maj. Gen. Alfred H. Terry, retired with his proper rank, and General Harney, who was also retired with his proper rank. Next comes the case of Francis Fessenden, whose highest rank in the regular Army was that of lieutenant-colonel of the Forty-fifth Infantry, and who was transferred in the same rank to the Twenty-eighth Infantry, and retired with the rank of brigadier-general September 1, 1866. The next case is that of Eli Long, who was retired with the rank of brigadier-general, his highest full rank in the military establishment being captain. The next name is that of General Richard W. Johnson, whose highest rank in the military establishment was major of the Fourth Cavalry. He was retired with the rank of major-general on the 12th of October, 1867, and with the rank of brigadier-general on the 3d of March, 1875. The next on the list is Thomas J. Wood, whose highest rank was colonel of the Second Cavalry. He was retired with the rank of major-general on the 9th of June, 1868, and as a brigadier-general by the act of March, 1875; and I might go on with other names contained in that list, but I think this is a sufficient illustration.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Were these generals retired by special act?

Mr. CUTCHEON. Some of them were and others under a general act applicable to all officers of their class, retiring them upon the highest rank held by them in the volunteer service.

Mr. HOOKER. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee a question if he will permit me.

Mr. CUTCHEON. With pleasure.

Mr. HOOKER. Were all these officers retired with the rank they had in the Army which is proposed by this bill?

Mr. CUTCHEON. Certainly, upon their full rank.

Mr. HOOKER. Were they not in the Army at the time?

Mr. CUTCHEON. Not all at the time of retirement, but they had all been distinguished generals.

Mr. HOOKER. Were they not in the Army?

Mr. CUTCHEON. They were volunteer officers during the war, and, as a rule, appointed to the military establishment at the close of the war, and they were retired generally from 1866 to 1869—

Mr. HOOKER. They were still in the service at the time?

Mr. CUTCHEON. No, not as generals; they were generally mustered out at the close of the war as volunteers, and then appointed to the military establishment in lower grades, and afterwards retired under a general act, and placed upon the retired-list. [Cries of "Vote!"] But, Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to detain the House from coming to a vote upon this bill. General Frémont is 76 years of age, and can live but a few years longer. His services were pre-eminent both in peace and in war; and it seems to me that a grateful nation can not do less than place his name among those of other distinguished men whose high services illustrate our history. His service in the exploration of the path of empire from the Atlantic to the Pacific would entitle him to this consideration. His later services in securing to our country the results of the Mexican war in the conquest of California would entitle him to this consideration. His services, very great during the war of the rebellion, would abundantly entitle him to this consideration; and it seems to me, without taking more time, the amendment ought not to prevail; but for the few months, or for the few years at most, that General Frémont will remain among us, we should signify to him the thanks of a grateful nation by putting his name on the list with those whose names I have just read, who have already been retired.

Mr. HOOKER. Do I understand the gentleman to state that he is to be retired with the rank which he held in the Army, and that he was a major-general in the regular Army?

Mr. CUTCHEON. Yes; he was a most distinguished major-general. One of the senior major-generals.

Mr. HOOKER. I ask leave to suggest to the House that certainly it would not want to inflict an indignity upon General Frémont by retiring him at a grade in the Army lower than the actual grade he had in the regular Army of the United States.

Mr. CUTCHEON. He held it from 1861 to 1864.

Mr. LANE. Mr. Chairman, the proposition before the House now is to retire John C. Frémont with the rank of major-general of the United States Army.

I wish to be heard briefly on this question. John C. Frémont has been in private life now for twenty years or more and it is now proposed to retire him from the Army, where he has not been for nearly a quarter of a century, and the Government to pay him a pension or salary at the rate of $5,000 per annum for and during his natural life; and I suppose it will then be asked to put his widow on the pension-roll at a like sum. Why should this be done? I know I am not wanting in admiration for the gallantry of the American soldiery, and if John C. Frémont was now in the Army he might be placed on the retired-list under the general law and draw two-thirds of a full salary, as other officers do. But there is no reason offered to the House why this case should be made exceptional and a special act passed for his benefit.

Sir, there is somebody else to be remembered in this House and country besides the generals and the other army officers. There is somebody else in this country besides that class of men. There is another class, the men who pay the taxes and bear these burdens, but are very seldom mentioned in this House. There is the great mass of tax-paying, tax-ridden people in this country who are expected to pay all this money, and I insist that once in a while their voice ought to be heard in this House, especially when we are asked to put everybody upon the pension-roll or upon the retired-list. I hold in my hand a paper which is indorsed by all the farmers' organizations in the West, several thousand in number, and I send it to the Clerk's desk to be read as a part of my remarks, an extract which expresses my views on this question.

The Clerk read as follows:

While we favor a liberal system of pensions to the soldiers and sailors who in the line of duty became disabled from earning a livelihood, we are unalterably opposed to creating or retaining a list of retired office-holders, either civil or military, as pensioners, to be supported at the public charge, and that largely by the hard earnings of farmers and laborers who can hardly support themselves and families. It is unrepugnant and smacks strongly of aristocracy and royalty.

Mr. LANE. This, Mr. Chairman, is a part of a series of resolutions adopted by the farmers' organizations throughout the West and Northwest, and I fully indorse every word of it. It was sent to me from a farmers' lodge at Vera, in my district. I am informed that there are a great number of these lodges in Illinois and other Western States, amounting now to many thousand voters, and the organization is still going on. They have spoken in no uncertain terms on this question, and they are entitled to some recognition in this country and upon the floor of this House. They are expected to pay the burden created by this bill, and for that matter all other bills passed by this House, and it is unjust to them to burden them with unnecessary hardships and deplete the Treasury with unjust legislation. As they say in the resolution, this character of legislation is unrepugnant and smacks strongly of aristocracy and royalty. The farmers this year are unable to pay the taxes on their farms and homes, much less to meet the burdens of placing men on the retired-list with princely salaries, to live in luxury and ease. This is what is done in the old countries and royalty is the result.

I am unable to say just at this moment how many are on the retired-list in this country. I did not know the question would come up this afternoon, and therefore I am not prepared to state the exact number or the amount paid, but it amounts to thousands of dollars annually and is still increasing. The principle is wrong of retiring these men and putting them on the pension-roll, for it is nothing else.

The friends of this measure say that General Frémont was a distinguished man. So are the governors of the various States and lieutenant-governors, the judges of our courts, State and national, the generals and colonels in the late war, as well as many distinguished private soldiers. The list can be swelled to several thousand who might be placed on the retired pension-roll, and the same reasons would exist for this as do for placing John C. Frémont on the retired-list and paying him $5,000 a year.

Mr. Chairman, this act is un-American, un-republican, and in the name of the great labor and farm organizations and tax-payers of the country I protest against its passage.

Mr. SWENEY. Mr. Chairman, if there is one citizen of the United States that objects to the retirement of General John C. Frémont I have yet to hear of it. If there is one citizen of this country who desires him to be degraded from the highest rank which he held in the regular Army of this country, then I regret it, and especially, Mr. Chairman, should I regret it if this action were taken after Congress has placed the name of a Fitz-John Porter upon the retired-list at the highest rank which he ever held in the regular Army. I am not generally in favor of placing people on the pension-list or on the retired-list, but I represent a farming community, fully as much so as that which is represented by my friend from Illinois [Mr. LANE], and I believe that the patriotic people of this country of all classes desire to remember and to reward the services of such patriots as John C. Frémont has proved himself to be. Therefore, sir, I stand here to protest in the name of the patriotic citizens of this country and of the soldiers of this country against degrading him from the rank which he held in the regular Army of the country.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I am not one of those who think that a man is "degraded" when he is given $4,000 a year. [Laughter.] I think that is an abundant allowance for any man in order to secure him comfort in his old age. No man in this country has been a more thorough admirer and defender than I have been of General John C. Frémont. In my youth I read of his travels in the far West from the beginning to the end, and I am one of those who have never been able to get over the unfortunate conviction that he is one of the greatest men in our country and has done as much for our institutions and for our Government as any living man.

But while I say that, Mr. Chairman, I do not think that we are doing justice to the great tax-paying community of this country in allowing any man to have, by way of pension or allowance, more than is proposed by the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE]. I was surprised to see gentlemen on the other side of the House bring forward the great civil services of a man as a reason why he should be placed on the pension-roll. It has never been conceded in this country as any reason for pensioning any man that he had performed distinguished civil services, and it ought not to be allowed to be a reason now.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIAMS] spoke of what other governments in other countries have done for men who have rendered distinguished service to the state. We are not in the business in this country of imitating those nations that are looking out for their leading minds. In this country we have the proud boast that in our legislation we are looking out for the masses of the people, trying to secure to our men an equal chance in the race of life, and to see to it that no great man's children or no great man himself shall be given the privilege of having a tax levied upon the people in order that he may be maintained in a superior position to the masses of his fellow-countrymen. It is un-republican, it is un-American; and for one I think it is a very great concession on the part of the gentleman from Texas to move that John C. Frémont—and, I repeat, there is no man in this House who honors General Frémont more than I do—should receive in his old age $4,000 a year.

Mr. VANDEVER. Mr. Chairman, the name of John C. Frémont has been a household word in this country for half a century. He blazed a pathway across this continent from sea to sea before the American flag first floated in sovereignty upon the shores of the Pacific. He has a world-wide reputation. John C. Frémont has a name that lives in history and is respected by the people of all civilized nations. He has made for himself a history which under any other government on this globe would have entitled him to the very highest consideration; he would have been covered with decorations; he would have been loaded with wealth. That is no reason, however, why we, in our capacity of representatives of the people, should pile honors upon John C. Frémont or load him with wealth, simply because this recognition might have been extended to him by some foreign government.

But he is an American; he belongs to no particular section of this country; he is a constituent of mine, residing in the Congressional district that I represent. He rescued that Pacific shore from a foreign jurisdiction; he took possession of it in the name of the United States, planting the flag which waves there to-day; he has gone to that shore to find an asylum and a home in his declining years. This country owes him a debt of gratitude, and I undertake to say there is no hard-handed son of toil in the length and breadth of this land—no tiller of the soil—but cherishes the name of John C. Frémont in his heart with gratitude and associates it with the greatest glory and renown of this country.

John C. Frémont made a history for himself in this country before the war of the rebellion—he made a history for himself from 1831 to 1865; he has made a history for himself since. There is not a blemish upon his name. He is a kind, noble, self-reliant American citizen; and now, in the declining years of his life, when he has sought a home upon the Pacific shore, if you refuse him for the short remnant of his days this small pittance of comfort you allow him to go down to his grave in poverty, but not in disgrace. His name will still live. It is a part of the heritage of this country. The name, the example, the exploits, and the history of John C. Frémont will be referred to by coming generations, inspiring them to emulate his virtues and his greatness.

This bill should pass without an amendment; and General Frémont should be put upon the retired-list as a major-general of the United States Army, in vindication of ourselves as much as in justice to him. [Applause.]

Mr. ENLOE. Mr. Chairman, I have been very much interested in the information which has been given to us about the "debt of gratitude" resting upon the American people to General John C. Frémont, and I have listened with especial interest to the speech of my friend from Ohio [Mr. WILLIAMS] describing the difficulties and the hardships which General Frémont had to encounter and overcome in acquiring possession of the great territory which was added to our country by the war with Mexico. And I have thought it strange—I have often thought it strange in this House—that when we commence to remember our "debt of gratitude," it generally begins with remembering the "debt of gratitude" to the officer; but I have not heard any man here to-day who seems to remember the "debt of gratitude" that is due to the soldier, the private soldier who made the victories of that war possible.

Mr. PICKLER. We are going to give you a chance to vote on that. Mr. ENLOE. Go back and attend to Oklahoma. I thought you had run dry on that. [Laughter.] This is not Oklahoma.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to offer an amendment to this bill, if it were in order—an amendment providing that the Secretary of the Interior place upon the pension-roll the name of every soldier of the Mexican war who is to-day on the pension-roll, at the rate of $12 per month. I do not know but we might spread our gratitude over a wider territory and benefit a much larger class of people, a class of people who are equally deserving and whose necessities are as great, if we should adopt that proposition as a substitute for this bill.

I have been opposed and am opposed to-day to the policy of taking up any man, I care not what his record may be, what his history may be, what the "debt of gratitude" that the country owes to him may be, to taking him up after he has retired from the military service of the country and putting him back in the Army for the purpose of saddling him as a pensioner upon the tax-payers. I voted against the Rosecrans bill. If I had been here, I would have voted against the Grant bill. I will vote against this bill to-day; and I will vote against every bill of similar character that comes up in Congress so long as I am a member, because I am opposed to such measures on principle.

Mr. OATES. As I understand, the gentleman by that statement means to say, not that he is opposed to giving pensions to such persons as may deserve them on account of military service, but that he is opposed to taking a man after he has retired from the military service and putting him back into the Army for the purpose of placing him on the retired-list.

Mr. ENLOE. That is the proposition I intended to state; I thought I had made myself clear. I am obliged to the gentleman from Alabama for calling my attention to the matter. I do not believe in taking a man after he has retired from the military service, after he has gone into private pursuits and perhaps been unfortunate, and putting him again into the military service for the express purpose of placing him on the retired-list and paying him a pension. I have often wondered who was going to take care of the unfortunate members of this Congress after they have retired from active service. There are a great many gentlemen here to-day who feel that they are rendering distinguished service to the country; they are piling up "a debt of gratitude." I have no doubt a great many of them will go away from here poorer than they came. Some of them will probably go away bankrupt. Who is going to have them placed upon a retired-list and saddle them upon the tax-payers? There is just as much justice and right in the one proposition as in the other.

But I feel, Mr. Chairman, that I am unnecessarily occupying the time of this House. I have observed that we go about this sort of thing with a great deal of consideration, with a great deal of formality and ceremony, with a great deal of care and caution; but we generally wind up with passing any sort of a proposition that comes here to pension anybody at the expense of the tax-payers of this country, especially any one of that class who ought to be able to take care of themselves, and would be if they had lived frugally, as the tax-payers of this country are compelled to live, or starve.

Mr. SPINOLA. That is what members of Congress ought to do.

Mr. ENLOE. That is what they ought to do; and if they were not trying to be re-elected probably more of them would be doing it. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

[Mr. BANKS withholds his remarks for revision. See Appendix.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Ohio. I hope the House will vote it down. We ought not to place upon General Frémont that indignity. He ought to be retired with the rank he had in the Army.

The question was put; and the Chairman announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. KILGORE. Division.

Pending the count,

Mr. KILGORE said: Mr. Chairman, I submit that the committee does not probably understand the proposition. I think it might be submitted again.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Chair will again state the proposition.

Mr. KILGORE. Let the amendment be reported.

The amendment was again reported.

The question was again taken; and the Chairman announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. KILGORE. I demand a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 7, noes 116.

So the amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

RELIEF OF OWNERS OF BRITISH BARK CHANCE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2234) for the relief of the owners, officers, and crew of the British bark Chance.

Mr. RAY. By direction of the Committee on Claims, I ask consideration of the Senate bill 1296, in lieu of the bill H. R. 2234, on the same subject.

Mr. SPRINGER. Has it been reported by the committee?

Mr. RAY. It is on the Calendar.

Mr. ROGERS. What is the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. It is a bill substantially the same as the House bill. The gentleman from Pennsylvania having charge of this bill asks that the Senate bill be substituted for the House bill on the same subject.

Mr. ROGERS. What is the title of the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the title again.

The title was again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania desires to substitute consideration of the Senate bill for the House bill.

Mr. ROGERS. Let it be read, subject to objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of State be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to draw his requisition upon the Secretary of the Treasury for the payment, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, of the sum of $16,000 to the duly accredited representative of the Government of Great Britain at Washington, to enable said Government to pay the same to the owners of the British bark Chance, of the port of Sydney, New South Wales, to indemnify them, and the officers and crew of said bark, for abandoning their whaling voyage in the Arctic Ocean, in the month of September, in the year 1871, and rescuing from shipwreck ninety-six American seamen and transporting them to Honolulu.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on substituting the Senate for the House bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Senate bill is before the House.

Mr. RAY. Mr. Chairman, this bill has been several times reported upon favorably by committees of both the House and the Senate, but has never been reached on the Private Calendar of the House. The facts being pretty clearly and thoroughly stated, as I think, in the report made by the Committee on Claims, I will ask to have the report read at the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation?

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, there is so much disorder in the House that no gentleman has heard a single word that the gentleman from Pennsylvania has stated, and if there is a report accompanying the bill I will take the floor and have it read in my time.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2234) for the relief of the owners, officers, and crew of the British bark Chance, having had the same under consideration, respectfully report:

Bills similar to this were favorably reported from the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the Forty-sixth and Forty-seventh Congresses, and also from the Committee on Claims of the Forty-ninth and Fiftieth Congresses, but failed of action in the House.

The bark Chance, owned at Sydney, New South Wales, had been fitted out in March, 1871, at an expense of £3,200 ($16,000), for a whaling voyage in the Arctic. She had a captain, chief officer, four mates, and a crew of twenty-eight men.

She arrived on the whaling grounds early in September, 1871, and had a fine prospect of taking whales. The season is short, extending from about September 1 to the middle of October, and in 1871 whales were unusually plenty.

Our American whaling fleet of some thirty vessels had gone 60 miles farther north and were caught in the ice. Four ships were wrecked, and the whole fleet was imprisoned, with no hope of escape.

The ship-masters sent a letter addressed to "any ship-master south of Icy Cape," in eloquent terms asking instant aid to save them from the danger that stared them in the face.

The letter closed as follows:

"We realize your peculiar situation as to duty and the bright prospects you have for a good catch in oil and bone before the season expires, and now call on you in the voice of humanity to abandon your whaling, sacrifice your personal interests as well as that of your owners, and put yourselves in condition to receive on board ourselves and crew for transit to some civilized port, feeling assured that our Government, so jealous of its philanthropy, will make any compensation for your losses."

The moment this news came the master of the Chance gave up his voyage and got his ship ready to take on board all he had room for. With crowded decks the Chance sailed, September 15, for Honolulu, and arrived safely on the 29th of October. She had rescued from almost certain death ninety-six American seamen.

The ship happened to have an agent at Honolulu, who took the responsibility of drawing up an account, charging the United States at the rate of $35 a man for the officers and crew thus brought to port as passengers. This was forwarded to Washington, without the sanction or special authority of the owners. However, upon learning of the fact, they ratified his action, and the sum of $3,360 was paid to the agent of the owners July 27, 1872.

This was done under the act February 24, 1811, for the relief of destitute seamen (2 Stat., 651), which reads:

"In all cases where distressed mariners and seamen of the United States have been transported from foreign ports where there was no consul, vice-consul, commercial agent, or vice-commercial agent of the United States to ports of the United States, and in all cases where they shall hereafter be so transported, there shall be allowed to the master or owner of each vessel in which they shall or may have been transported such reasonable compensation, in addition to the allowance now fixed by law, as shall be deemed equitable by the Comptroller of the Treasury."

Our statute for the relief of seamen in foreign ports was framed to meet the constantly recurring emergencies of sailors being where an American ship happens to be lying. She is bound sooner or later to return home, and can take one or two extra men on board with no trouble and without deviating from her intended voyage. That is not this case.

Here a voyage sure of success was abandoned and the ship forced to go back the route she had come, the whole season's labor going for naught. In the ordinary case contemplated by the statute $35 per man for transportation and provisions may be regarded as sufficient. Here that sum could give only partial relief. The money went towards paying for the use of the vessel and for provisions consumed. It did not represent the proceeds of the voyage, to be divided among owners, officers, and sailors, according to the "lay."

All parties in a whaling voyage are paid by "lays," or shares in the oil and bone taken. The officers and crew get no monthly wages; and of course they had everything to lose by giving up their certainty of taking whales.

These British owners and sailors incurred a heavy loss in order to save the lives of our American seamen. No Government would have hesitated to dispatch public ships to the rescue or to charter private vessels, if need had been, as witness the Greely expedition.

The Chance, owned by foreigners and subject to no power of seizure by our Government, may be considered in some sense as having been impressed into the service of the Government of the United States.

Your committee are of opinion that the case presents urgent reasons for Congressional action. The owners of the Chance could get no indemnity for their loss from the insurers. In abandoning their voyage those in control of the Chance acted no doubt under the belief engendered by the suggestion of the letter that eventually this Government would recognize the character of the relief and see to it that the loss was in whole or in part made up to them.

The master of the Chance indeed acted for humanity's sake, and this is not susceptible of being reduced to a matter of dollars and cents. Whatever indemnity may be tendered should not be considered, therefore, as forming a precedent, so far as the amount is concerned.

The affidavit of one of the owners shows that all that the bark had of oil and bone was valued at $6,500. She had every prospect of taking 380 barrels of oil, worth $15,120, and 1,200 pounds of bone, worth $15,000. Allowing for what was on board and for passage money received, it is evident that the breaking up the voyage entailed upon the owners, officers, and sailors a net loss, at a moderate computation, of from $15,000 to $20,000.

The owners, as well as officers and sailors (and their families), sustained this loss more than eighteen years ago. The claim was first presented to the Department of State in 1872, and the Department in January, 1878, recommended the claim to the favorable action of Congress.

In view of the services rendered and of the international features of the case, your committee are of opinion that the sum of $6,000, to be appropriated as the bill provides, is just and reasonable, and therefore recommend that the bill do pass.

During the reading of the report,

Mr. ROGERS said: Mr. Chairman, I have looked over this report while the Clerk has been reading, and have no desire to have it read further.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with the recommendation that it do pass.

J. F. BAILEY & CO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3913) granting jurisdiction to the Court of Claims, notwithstanding any statutory bar, of the claims of J. F. Bailey & Co., and others.

Mr. LAIDLAW. I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill should be read, unless dispensed with by unanimous consent.

Several members objected.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction be, and is hereby, given to the Court of Claims, notwithstanding any statutory bar, of the claims of J. F. Bailey & Co.; Oliver L. Garrison; William Chisholm, president Cleveland Rolling Mill Co.; A. E. Godefroy & Co.; Downing, Sheldon & Co.; Herbert Brainard, as manager of the St. Albans Steel Works; H. C. Arbuckle; Brown Bros. & Co.; C. W. Matthews, E. Samuel & Co.; A. H. Childs, agent for H. W. Oliver, jr.; Diamond

State Iron Company; P. Wright & Sons; Baltimore and Ohio Railroad; Schrader & Ellery; H. W. Oliver, Jr.; and Lewis, Oliver & Phillips; C. H. & E. Odell; Drexel, Morgan & Co.; A. H. Barney; H. E. Collins & Co.; Edgar Thomson Steel Company (Limited); Carnegie Bros. & Co. (Limited); James Lee & Co.; Interstate Improvement Construction Company; James Johnston; Clarice, Post & Martin, agents for Springfield Iron Company; Post, Martin & Co., agents for the Springfield Iron Company; Springfield Iron Company, of Springfield, Ill.; Joliet Steel Company; Edge Moor Iron Company; E. S. Wheeler & Co.; Isaac Jeanes & Co.; Seiser & Bro.; S. S. Scattergood & Co.; and N. Hellings & Bro., for excessive import duties paid by them, with the same right of appeal as in other cases: Provided, That the adjudication shall be for such sums only as were paid in excess of the legal duty: And provided further, That their petitions in said court shall be filed within six months after the passage of this bill.

Mr. LAIDLAW. I call for the reading of the report.

The report was read, as follows:

The claimants imported in the years 1879, 1880, 1881, and 1882 steel blooms, upon which steel blooms the customs officials and the Treasury Department exacted and compelled the payment of a duty at the rate of 45 per cent. ad valorem.

The claimants objected to this rate of duty, but the collector of customs decided that that was the correct rate, and refused to allow the steel blooms to be taken by or delivered to the owners until that rate, viz, 45 per cent. ad valorem, had been paid. The Treasury Department sustained the collector of customs in this decision, and the claimants were compelled to pay a duty of 45 per cent. on the steel blooms that they imported, when the correct and legal duty was only 30 per cent. ad valorem.

In 1882 a suit was brought in the United States circuit court for the southern district of New York by R. F. Downing et al. against William H. Robertson, collector of the port of New York, for the return of the excessive rate of duty exacted by the collector of customs at that port on certain steel blooms imported by them, namely, a duty of 45 per cent. ad valorem, instead of 30 per cent. The case was tried and a verdict obtained against the Government for the excessive rate of duty exacted, and it was then judicially determined that the correct rate of duty on steel blooms was 30 per cent. ad valorem, and not 45 per cent. This case was appealed by the Government to the United States Supreme Court, October term, 1884, No. 853, and on the 19th of January, 1885, the appeal of the Government was dismissed by the Supreme Court.

The Treasury Department after this, in February, 1885, instructed the collector of the port to collect, in conformity with this decision, only 30 per cent. ad valorem, instead of what the collector had been exacting, namely, 45 per cent.

In the act of March 3, 1885, steel blooms are specifically named and a rate of 45 per cent. is stated as the rate of duty, but prior thereto the correct rate of duty was as the claimants claimed, namely, 30 per cent., and as the courts determined, and not at the rate exacted by the collector of customs and enforced by the Treasury Department.

The bill gives the Court of Claims jurisdiction of these claims, provided that the petitions are filed within six months and that the adjudication shall only be for such sums as were paid in excess of the legal duty.

In a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury to the chairman of this committee, dated February 27, 1888, he states that the Treasury Department refunded to certain importers who had brought suit against the Government the difference between the rate of 45 per cent. and the rate of 30 per cent., in pursuance of the decision in the case of Downing vs. Robertson.

The bill now reported by this committee allows the claimants who had not been refunded the duty illegally exacted from them an opportunity to present their claims for excessive duties paid by them to the Court of Claims.

Your committee recommend the passage of the accompanying bill, with the following amendment: In line 15, after the word "Collins," insert "and Company."

Mr. CULBERTSON, of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I think this bill ought not to become law. It provides that thirty-five or thirty-six persons, or firms, shall have the right to institute suit or suits in the Court of Claims in their respective interests to recover excesses of duties paid by them upon steel blooms about eleven years ago. The allegation is that this excess of duty was paid in 1879, 1880, 1881, 1882, and 1883. They claim that the duty upon these products was 30 per cent. and that they were required by the Secretary of the Treasury to pay 45 per cent.

In 1882 the Supreme Court decided this question, and decided adversely to the ruling of the Treasury Department, and fixed the legal rate at 30 per cent. Now, these people claim that they were required to pay 45 per cent; after sleeping upon their rights for five years, because there was no bar or limitation until after the expiration of six years, they now crave the right to bring suit, each for himself, for each of these corporations in the Court of Claims to recover these excesses, which, I understand, will amount to about $1,000,000.

There is no statement in the papers as to how much it will amount to whatever. I do not believe it ought to pass for another reason, and that is, this excess of duty was charged to the consumer who paid it. They sold these products in the market at a price covering the 45 per cent. which they paid to the Treasury Department, and they taxed that in the price at which they sold them to the consumers of this country. Therefore, if Congress allows them to bring these suits, there is no doubt that they will recover judgment, because under a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in 1882 the law is fixed on that subject, and you will refund to these gentlemen from $500,000 to $1,000,000 in money which the consumers of this product have already paid to them.

Now, if there could be any way by which this money could be diverted and paid back to those unfortunate consumers who had to pay these importers this amount of money in the first instance, I would be willing to co-operate with the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. LAIDLAW] to pass this bill. As it is they get the money twice and the consumers pay it twice. [Laughter.]

Mr. LAIDLAW. Mr. Chairman, a simple statement with reference to the bill that is under consideration would seem to be all that is necessary. This is a question of taxes. Now, I take it to be a very plain proposition that if the citizen pays all the taxes the law requires that is about all the Government can ask of him. It appears that in this case 45 per cent. ad valorem was exacted of these claimants, when the legal duty, as determined by the circuit court, and, on appeal, by the Supreme Court, was only 30 per cent. Another principle of taxation would seem to me to be fair, and that is that taxes ought to be uniform. It appears that the Secretary of the Treasury actually refunded to other importers an excess of duty paid in like cases amounting to over $700,000, as his letter to the chairman of the Committee on Claims shows. Now, why should not the same be done in this case?

Mr. McMILLIN. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. LAIDLAW. Yes, sir.

Mr. McMILLIN. Why was it that these claimants did not bring their suit against the Government within the time required by law and take the necessary steps to resist payment?

Mr. LAIDLAW. I never supposed that the statute of limitations could be pleaded in such a case by the Government. I did not imagine that the United States was standing up and pleading the baby act.

Mr. McMILLIN. I am not asking about the United States acting the baby. What I ask the gentleman is why these parties did not act the man in the transaction of their own business.

Mr. LAIDLAW. Not having been one of them, I can not answer the gentleman.

Mr. McMILLIN. The gentleman can not answer that question. Well, before he calls upon the people to pay this amount of money out of the Treasury, I suggest, with all due deference, that he ought to be able to answer the question.

Mr. LAIDLAW. Oh, not at all. In perhaps two-thirds of all the claims that come before the committee it is found that some technical statutory bar has to be waived, some bar that stands between the citizen and justice. It is a common thing for the committee to recommend the waiving of a statute of limitation, and there is a multitude of short statutory bars which the committee often recommend shall be waived. There is hardly a claim that comes before the committee that some bar is not found which the committee is called upon to waive. These men are asking the Government to refund money that has been illegally exacted from them. There is no question about its having been illegally exacted, because the court has so determined. They are simply asking for their own.

Mr. CULBERTSON, of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman answer me a question?

Mr. LAIDLAW. Yes, sir.

Mr. CULBERTSON, of Pennsylvania. Did not these merchants or jobbers charge their customers to whom they sold those goods the amount of the tax they had paid?

Mr. LAIDLAW. Now, as to whether they did or did not, the gentleman must see upon a moment's reflection that I can not answer. But I do not care whether they did or did not; I do not care whether they put the stuff in the Potomac or whether they sold it at a profit or sold it at a loss. The simple question in the case is, did the Secretary of the Treasury and the collector of the port take money from these men without authority of law? That is the question that we have to face. It makes no difference whether they sold these goods at a profit or at a loss. How could they compete with these other importers of the same kind of goods to whom the Secretary refunded this $700,000? Is it not the gentleman's opinion that taxes ought to be uniform, and that if one man gets his goods into this country for 30 per cent. duty others should get theirs in at the same rate?

Mr. OATES. Yes, sir.

Mr. LAIDLAW. Well, that is my doctrine. Now, other parties did go to work to secure their rights, and by a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury to the chairman of the committee it appears that he did refund these duties to the amount of $700,000. I will read a portion of the letter:

THE TREASURY DEPARTMENT, February 27, 1888.

Hon. S. W. T. LANHAM, etc.:

DEAR SIR: I am in receipt of your letter of the 24th instant, in which you inquire whether any of the duties collected on steel blooms have been refunded by the Government, and, if so, at what time, to what amount, and at what rate of duty such repayments were estimated. In reply I have to inform you that refunds amounting in the aggregate to $797,027.25 were made by this Department from February 20, 1885, to March 25, 1887, this amount being the difference between the rate of 45 per cent. ad valorem and the rate of 30 per cent. ad valorem, including interest and costs.

These refunds were made in pursuance of the decision of the United States circuit court of New York in the case of Downing vs. Robertson, a copy of which was transmitted to you on the 17th instant.

Mr. CULBERTSON, of Pennsylvania. Those gentlemen were very lucky. They sold the goods and got the money from the customers, and now they have got it from the Treasury again.

Mr. LAIDLAW. Now, it would seem as if this House ought to be able to do a plain piece of very common justice. It would seem so. The first proposition is that this Government exacted duties illegally from these parties and required them to pay a duty of 45 per cent. ad valorem when the proper legal duty was only 30 per cent. That question has been decided by the court. The court decided that they had no business to charge more than 30 per cent. ad valorem, but they did, in fact, charge 45 and collect 45 per cent. Other importers, of whom the same exaction had been made, had the excess of duty refunded. Now, to try to ascertain whether these importers sold these goods at a profit or at a loss seems to me to be the poorest piece of speculation, and to be entirely outside of the real question at issue here. The question is, was the tax illegally imposed and illegally collected, and a moment's reflection will show any one that, as the court decided that the proper duty was 30 per cent. ad valorem, while the amount collected was 45 per cent. ad valorem, the difference between the two is the property of these claimants and ought to be refunded to them.

It is not the money of the Government; it never was the money of the Government. Suppose the Secretary of the Treasury has another man's overcoat, and, when it is proposed he shall return it, some one says, 'You are going to furnish the man with an overcoat,' when the only thing asked is that the man shall have his own coat. These claimants are simply asking for their own money.

Mr. HILL. Was application made to the Treasury Department to have this money refunded?

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. No; it was not.

Mr. LAIDLAW (to Mr. KERR, of Iowa). Now, you do not know whether it was or not.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. I examined this case at the last session, and I know there never was any application.

Mr. LAIDLAW. Wait a moment; I will answer the question of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HILL]. I do not know whether such an application was made or not; and I am very certain the gentleman from Iowa has not one particle of information on the subject.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. The matter was before our committee in the last Congress.

Mr. LAIDLAW. The committee do not appear to have thought it necessary to go into the question raised by the gentleman from Illinois. The committee considered simply the question, was this money illegally taken from the citizen? If it was, it is proper that he should be permitted to go into the Court of Claims, prove the amount that was taken from him improperly, and get it back, as other importers did. The Treasury Department paid back over $700,000 of these illegally collected duties. Can any reason be suggested why one citizen should pay duty at the rate of 45 per cent. and another citizen at the rate of 30 per cent.; and, if there should happen to be a little statutory bar in the one case and not in the other, should that be insisted upon to the prejudice of one party, when equitably they both stand on exactly the same footing?

Mr. HILL. I am not suggesting anything of that kind; but it struck me as somewhat singular if so large an amount of money had been paid back on application at the Treasury Department.

Mr. LAIDLAW. There was a very large quantity of these goods imported; there was a sharp controversy as to the rate of duty that should be imposed. It now turns out that these importers were right in their contention as to the rate which should be paid; the court said so; and the court having said so, I had supposed that would be the end of the business; that after a case had been contested in the nisi prius court and gone to the Supreme Court of the United States for the determination of a single question, and that question has been determined in favor of the citizen, I supposed that would end the debate on that proposition.

Mr. HILL. If the parties could get their money by going to the Treasury Department why should they come here?

Mr. LAIDLAW. Because, I suppose, there was some little statute providing that there should be a protest and appeal within a certain length of time; that otherwise the door would be closed. I suppose that, as a matter of fact, these parties did not comply with the precise terms of that statute, or they would not be here. I suppose the decision of this case of Downing threw some light upon the subject which they might not have had before. But I do not care how long they waited. I say that when a tax has been imposed illegally on a citizen every dollar of that money belongs, not to the Government, but to the citizen; and we ought to make haste to pay it back, instead of haggling over the manner of doing it.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. Will the gentleman permit a suggestion?

Mr. LAIDLAW. Certainly.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. I understand that many of the claims embraced in this bill accrued while the case referred to was pending in the circuit and the Supreme Court; and the delay there was the occasion of the laches or apparent laches in these cases.

Mr. LAIDLAW. Very likely. That part of the business never annoyed me. I looked only to see whether money belonging to the citizen had gone improperly into the Treasury. I supposed that we were sent here to do justice occasionally—a little bit of justice once in a great while—to pay an honest claim sometimes; not often, but occasionally.

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman know of any instance in which Congress in cases like this has permitted the parties, after they have slept upon their rights, to go into the Court of Claims?

Mr. LAIDLAW. If I could get away from this debate I have no doubt that in an hour I could find the gentleman fifty such cases.

Mr. CANNON. I understand—I do not myself know how the fact is—that that policy has not been pursued by the Government. I understand that if a party sleeps upon his rights and does not make claim for a refund by prosecuting his case under the general provisions of the law his remedy is gone. The policy of the Government has not been to allow a party eight or ten years after duties have been paid to go to the Court of Claims under a special act and recover the money. If such a policy should be entered upon, can the gentleman state or approximate the amount that the Government, following out that principle, would have to pay, whether it would be $10,000,000, or $100,000,000, or $200,000,000?

Mr. LAIDLAW. I would like to ask the gentleman a question in turn. Suppose that the statutory bar of eighteen months had intervened before the application to the Treasury, would the gentleman as an honest man be in favor of standing on the statute?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. LAIDLAW. You would?

Mr. CANNON. I would.

Mr. LAIDLAW. Then the defense would be, not that you did not owe the man the money, but that his remedy was gone.

Mr. CANNON. What I might do in a matter individual to myself is one thing. But when I speak for 60,000,000 of people, when these importations have been made and the duties paid in fact, if not paid here, paid by the manufacturer on the other side, in either event I do not see the equity of permitting these parties to be relieved from the consequences of their own laches in failing to prosecute their claim under the general provisions of law.

Mr. LAIDLAW. Then what would be bad morality for the individual becomes very respectable where it is practiced in the interests of 60,000,000 of people! Now, if I comprehend the gentleman's proposition I say there is no constituency behind any of us who wants any one to stand here and do an unmanly thing, an unjust thing. This idea that the people in the aggregate want some kind of a service from us that they would not ask individually as honorable men is to me absolutely absurd; it is something I do not believe in.

Mr. CANNON. I heartily indorse, even when the interests of private individuals are involved, statutes of limitation. They are statutes of repose. The law favors the vigilant, and I think such statutes are wise in policy, and I have nothing to urge against any man or any government which avails itself of the statute.

Mr. LAIDLAW. Every nisi prius lawyer on the floor knows you have to plead the statute of limitations or to insist on it before you can avail yourself of it.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. And that is just what we are doing.

Mr. LAIDLAW. I did not know whether you knew it or not. [Laughter.]

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. That is what we are doing.

Mr. LAIDLAW. That is what the position of the gentleman amounts to. He is pleading here the statute of limitations in behalf of 60,000,000 of people against the payment of a just claim which has been fully proved to the satisfaction of the committee. Is that the statesmanship we are to have in this House? There is not a man on this floor who as an individual would do such thing. If there were one who would do it, I would not hang my coat up in the same room with him. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman had imported certain articles from abroad at a 45 per cent. duty and sold them and afterwards learned the duty was not 45 per cent., but only 35 per cent., and the goods had gone into consumption and he allowed the statute of limitations to run out before he made any claim for the 10 per cent. difference of duty, I say to the gentleman from New York I would plead the statute of limitations, just as I believe everybody else would.

Mr. LAIDLAW. This is the worst piece of logic I ever heard. The simple proposition here is that the citizen was compelled to pay excessive duty, and when that excessive duty was wrongfully exacted from him it makes no difference what became of the property. It was sold at great loss or great profit does not matter. What the Government ought to do is to refund the amount of excessive duty. Are we to be told that the Government is going into speculation and is to profit by such matters as this? I hope not. I hope the excessive duty which was charged in this case will be refunded without objection and without resorting to the statute of limitations. It should at once be paid back to the parties from whom it was unjustly exacted.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I hope the committee will give us a chance to pass just one private bill during this session of Congress. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. I wish to oppose the bill and make a few statements of fact in regard to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York has been recognized.

Mr. COVERT. Mr. Chairman, I challenge any gentleman on this floor to examine the report which has been made in this case and to doubt the justice and propriety of refunding to these parties the excessive duty which was paid by them. The proof is so plain and so clear that he who runs can read it, whether he comes from Texas or from Illinois.

Now, this is not any old claim on the part of the people who are in the habit of coming here to the doors of Congress. They allege, and prove beyond question, that they did pay on these articles which were imported more than they should have paid under the law and more than the officers of the Government should have exacted from them. Their claim rests not only upon their own statements, but upon the testimony of the officers of the United States having jurisdiction of the matter. They present also the decision of the highest tribunal of the country, a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in favor of refunding to them the amount of excessive duty.

They are met here now by the statement or by the supposition that the consumer paid the excessive taxation which was exacted from the parties, and that, therefore, we ought not to refund it to the importer. I do not know what profit the importer may have made; I do not know how much he got from those to whom he sold the articles, whether he estimated the wrongful tax as part of the price, and I do not believe the gentleman from Texas or the gentleman from Illinois knows. I do not believe either one of them can substantiate the supposition he makes in that regard.

The statute of limitations has been referred to. Now, every State in the Union has adopted statutes of limitations. It has become necessary in the ordinary transactions of business to fix some limit within which suits shall be brought. It arises from the necessity of getting testimony by the presence of witnesses and for other reasons which are obvious to everybody. In my own State in some instances suit can be brought at any time within twenty years. It is in order that no wrong may be done, no harm inure to anybody.

Now, since the enunciation of the decision of the Supreme Court has come in reference to this wrongful exaction of duty from these parties, why should an effort be made to prevent the refunding of this money to those parties from whom it was taken? Should not Congress settle it without hesitation in the way here recommended by the committee? The highest tribunal has passed upon the question, and the proper method should be provided to carry out that determination of the court.

Mr. COBB was recognized.

Mr. CULBERSON, of Texas. Will the gentleman from Alabama allow me to occupy the floor for a few moments in response to the gentleman from New York before he begins his argument?

Mr. COBB. I will yield to the gentleman from Texas, retaining the right to the floor, if permitted.

Mr. CULBERSON, of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to restate my position briefly in reply to the remarks of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COVERT].

I am not in favor at all times of the Government insisting on the statute of limitations; but whenever a person comes before Congress and insists that the bar of the statute of limitations should be removed he ought to present an equitable case; he ought to show to Congress that he has sustained some loss or that he will sustain a loss if Congress refuses to remove the bar.

In 1879 these parties, or most of them, paid this tax; that is, they paid 45 per cent. when the legal rate was 30 per cent., as determined by the Supreme Court in 1882. Now, they had the right for six years to go into the Court of Claims and bring these suits for the repayment of this money. In 1879 (when the Supreme Court had made this decision in 1882) the statute of limitations did not affect these parties, so far as the bar of limitations is concerned, in any case at all. But they have remained from four to five years sleeping on their rights until the statute made the bar effectual against them.

The proposition here presented is to remove the bar. Well, if it is inequitable to close the bar against these parties, I would be willing and in favor of removing it; but the onus of proof is on them to show that they have sustained loss. I do not know whether they have sold the goods or not. I suppose that they have. It has been eleven years since the main party in the transaction paid the duties. If they have sold them (and it devolves upon them to show that they have not, or, if they have sold them, that they sustained a loss) they collected the full amount of the tax from the consumer. That is the presumption. And therefore if the Government insists on its rights, whose right is affected by it? Not theirs, for they have suffered no loss. But the Government imposes its bar to keep its citizens—the people—from having to pay for these goods twice. That is the position I take.

Mr. COBB. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAIDLAW] in charge of this measure narrows the proposition submitted to the House. He says that the only question before us now is whether the Government of the United States did on a certain occasion recover from certain importers a sum of money greater than they ought to have paid as import duties, and there he rests the case. Upon that issue he would have the judgment of this House to decide.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as I remarked, that is narrowing the issue before us and is not putting it properly before the House at all.

As stated by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], several years elapsed after the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States touching the matter herein involved, during which time these men had ample opportunity to go to the Court of Claims and settle their rights. Why did they not avail themselves of that opportunity? We do not know. And here let me say that these gentlemen, both of them, who have advocated the pending proposition, when they are asked certain questions which bear directly upon this point, reply, "I do not know."

Now, I wish to say, Mr. Chairman, that these things that they do not know are the very things that ought to be known and clearly explained to this committee before it adopts the bill presented. The policy of every government is to have statutes of limitation, statutes of repose. Through all the histories of governments it has been found to be a wise policy and results in good. And so it happens that whenever a party comes before a legislative body and asks that the bar of the existing statute of limitations be removed he is coming simply to ask the grace and favor of the legislative department of the Government to grant something which he has no right to demand and which could not be enforced by the courts.

Mr. REILLY. An extraordinary privilege.

Mr. COBB. It is an extraordinary privilege, as suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and only to be granted on extraordinary occasions. Now, gentlemen do not deal with this question at all in the light of surrounding circumstances. They avoid it. They say the man paid the money, ergo the Government ought to pay it back. They assume that this man paid the money and under circumstances which render it necessary that the Government should pay it back in order to act in good faith. That is a mere assumption. I will repeat what I said before, that it is a favor on the part of the Government, but before such favors should be granted, before a case of this sort should pass the House, good reasons should be shown why the demand is made. Where are these reasons?

The gentleman from New York waives the consideration of the fact presented to him by the gentleman from Texas as to whether or not these men did not, as importers of goods, turn immediately around, notwithstanding the excessive duty, and recover the amount paid by them from the consumer; and the gentleman from Texas well puts it when he says that is the presumption. These men are importing merchants. They import their goods for sale. They expose them for sale. Have they sold them? We do not know. The presumption is that they have or we would know. Now, if they have sold the goods, at what price did they sell? Less than cost to import and put upon the market? Did they lose? Was the American market in such a condition that they could not command the price which would remunerate them for the trouble and expense of importing? If so, that is a fact we ought to know, and if it is not disclosed to us the presumption again is that they sold the goods on profit, for that is the way merchants do according to my experience.

Now, where is the equity? It might exist, but if it does why is it not disclosed? Where is the equity existing in favor of the importing merchants to authorize us, as the lawmakers of the Government, to reverse the policy in reference to this tax? Why, Mr. Chairman, it is flippantly urged that the policy which interposed this bar should be put aside for the reason that injustice will be done to certain parties who are urging claims before Congress unless they can go into the courts. That is usually the case, and I believe I have remarked before, and I will now repeat, that whenever the statute of limitation is removed and the court is acting upon a stale claim the defendant in the case is always taken at a disadvantage, always.

Hence the wisdom and the policy of having these statutes. Now, I do not say that there are no occasions when these statutes ought not to be removed; but I press here upon the House the fact that the party asking the removal must show that this is an occasion in which the equities demand this action at our hands. That is the point. Now, we have nothing of that sort, absolutely nothing. No fact, no circumstance is placed before us except the simple one that these men were import merchants in the first place, and in the second place that the Treasury Department collected from them an excessive amount of duty. But along with that fact we have the fact that ought not to be overlooked, that for three or four years opportunity was offered to them to correct the error, and they did not. May I not indulge in the presumption here that this delay was had by reason of the fact that they might thereby gain some advantage of the Government? I do not say that is true; but we are indulging in presumptions along here, and these gentlemen hold the burden of the proof, and it will not do to shove it off in this sort of way.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this whole proposition. Before it is passed I want to offer an amendment which I think ought to pass in the bill if it be adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the bill the following:

"Provided, That no person or firm named shall recover judgment for a greater amount than he or they lost on the goods imported by reason of the excessive duty collected by the Government."

Mr. COBB. Now, Mr. Chairman, I think this amendment ought to be adopted to this bill before it is passed, as I have urged; but, if it is not met here and if this House sees proper to let this matter go to the court, let us give the Court of Claims the power to say whether or not this money belongs of right to these men.

Mr. MILLS. Make your amendment so that it will read that these men have not reimbursed themselves by adding it to the price of the goods.

Mr. COBB. Gentlemen around me suggest that the amendment does not reach the point, and if, while I have the floor, they will suggest such amendment as will meet the occasion I will offer it. What I want to do is to confer upon the Court of Claims, not only the power, but the duty of ascertaining on these trials whether these importers have reimbursed themselves for this excessive charge made upon them by the Government. That is what I am asking, and I say that ought to be shown here; at least a prima facie case ought to be made out.

Mr. REILLY. That they should recover judgment for only such amount as they lost.

Mr. COBB. What I want is that they shall only be paid the loss on the goods that were sold. If the Clerk will let me have my amendment again I will amend it.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman has concluded his remarks he can withdraw his amendment and resubmit it.

Mr. COBB. Just a moment, Mr. Chairman. Just let me read this right here. I simply add this to my amendment: "That he or they have not reimbursed himself or themselves for the excessive duty in the sale of the goods."

Mr. SAYERS. That is the very fact that is controverted.

Mr. COBB. The very fact that that is to be controverted, as suggested by the gentleman from Texas, is the highest reason that we should put this amendment in here. Why, this bill ought not to pass at all.

Mr. SAYERS. That is right; I agree with you there.

Mr. COBB. I would not be understood as favoring this measure simply because I introduce this amendment. I am opposed to it, and I think it ought to be voted down in toto; but if the judgment of the House is inclined the other way, then I insist upon the amendment I have offered.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me a plain question of right that these men who paid money to the Government, that the Government had no right to exact from them, should receive it back. Now, when for a moment we stop to consider the course of legal proceeding, resulting in the decision which required the refunding of these duties to other gentlemen who had paid them, we can easily see how importers bringing a cargo of goods into the port of New York would be thrown off their guard by reason of the pending suit. The construction of the Treasury Department first was—

Mr. COBB. But, if the gentleman will allow me, after that suit in the Supreme Court the bar had not run.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. But, if the gentleman will take the trouble to read this report, he will see that these importations took place in 1879, 1880, 1881, and 1882. The decision was not rendered by the Supreme Court of the United States until the year 1885, and pending the proceeding in the court these collections were made that are now complained of. The limitation upon the right to recover back had already run; so that the citizen who had brought in his goods to the port of New York and desired to sell them in market had to do so with the chance of recovering back from the Government, and not a single man ever refused to sell them and take his chance of eventually recovering. He paid the duties and took his chance to recover it back. He had delivered the goods; the case was already pending, and was decided in the Supreme Court of the United States upon the question as to his right.

Mr. COBB. Did they not know it at that time—before they had sold their goods?

Mr. BOOTHMAN. Whether they did or not makes no difference for the point that the gentleman urges in his amendment. This is a claim for money to be refunded after the statute of limitations has run. Is there not the same right in the one case as there is in the other? For instance, an importer brings steel blooms into New York from England and there pays more duty than he is required by law to pay, but he pays it. Now, then, if he sues for that within a certain time he can recover that back, and the Government pays it back, does it not? And does it stop to ask whether he put a profit on his goods after paying it in selling the goods, and before he sold the goods? It allows them to run for eighteen months and never asks such a question.

Mr. COBB. That is a right that he can demand. The repayment is a matter of right.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. Yes—

Mr. COBB. Here he is asking to recover it from the Government after the bar.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. If demanded within five months; but if not demanded within eighteen months he does not have that right. But the point the gentleman urges is more than that. So far as correct principle is concerned, it is only a question on the part of the Government whether suits shall be brought within a certain limited time; that it will not interfere with its revenue operations. It is not intended that the revenue laws shall be enforced so as to collect money from a citizen unjustly and wrongfully, and give an advantage to one competitor which is not given to another, simply because one placed his goods in a warehouse until suit could be determined and the other paid his duty and sold the goods. It is not the policy of the Government to have a number of suits pending at the same time, and it is the custom, and it has been for years in all of the Treasury operations, when one test case is pending to let that settle the question, and then, when the proper time comes, to refund the duty if a refund is required. This is a simple question of honesty, and it seems to me that it ought to be decided as men would decide such a question between each other in any personal transaction.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, it will be observed from this report that it mentions the return of the duties upon goods imported in 1879, 1880, 1881, and 1882. Now it is quite evident from this that all of these goods, except perhaps one cargo, were imported into this country, not only with a knowledge of the law, but also with a knowledge of the decision of the customs officers upon the law, namely, that 45 per cent. ad valorem would be exacted upon imported steel blooms. It appears that these parties knew they would have to pay that rate of duty, and of course they would not have imported these goods unless they knew that they could reimburse themselves out of the pockets of the people that bought the goods after they came here. If this were the case of the importation of a single cargo, without a knowledge on the part of the importers of the decision of the customs officers upon the law, there might be some force in the position of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BOOTHMAN], but that is not the case here.

And now with regard to another point. Why is this matter to be sent to the Court of Claims? It is simply a question of public policy, a question whether the Secretary of the Treasury shall be directed to refund to these parties a certain sum of money which they have paid as duties. Why, then, refer it to the Court of Claims? There is nothing involved except the question of the policy of refunding this money; yet it is proposed to send the matter to the Court of Claims, and it is proposed to send it there perhaps with the knowledge of what the decision will be, or, at all events, with the knowledge that there is no other question involved than the question of policy. Now, I undertake to say that there is no State and no municipality in this country that ever pursues the policy of refunding taxes under such circumstances. It has never been heard of anywhere.

Mr. BOWDEN. Where they are improperly collected?

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Where they are improperly collected and where the person has a knowledge of his legal remedy and fails to avail himself of it. These parties had a remedy by appeal. They could have taken their cases to the courts and had them pending, but the fact is they themselves, at the time they imported these goods, believed that they were paying the legal duty; otherwise they would have gone into the courts.

Again, Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention to the amount involved here. This is to be a refund of 15 per cent. of the duty paid upon all the steel blooms imported into this country during four years, and it involves, directly and indirectly, millions of dollars, and, upon the theory of the bill, that question is to be determined by a court rather than by Congress. I do not think we ought to adopt any such legislation.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. Will the gentleman answer a question, as he is on the Committee on Claims and undoubtedly familiar with the facts?

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Before I sit down I wish to state that I was a member of the Committee on Claims in the last Congress, and that I understood it to be the opinion of that committee that this bill should not be reported favorably.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. Now, I will ask the gentleman whether it is true or not that in any of these cases there was any protest entered or appeal taken.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. There was no appeal taken in any of these cases.

Mr. BINGHAM. But there was a protest.

Mr. BOWDEN. Was there not a protest at the time the duties were paid?

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. I know of no protests; but a protest would not amount to anything. The parties knew they could have their remedy by an appeal, and they could have had every one of these cases pending in the courts if they had desired.

This question was submitted to the Committee on Claims in the last Congress, and I believe a majority of that committee were opposed to reporting the bill because they believed such legislation would be in violation of the public policy that had been pursued by the Government, and because they saw no good reason for it. If the law was as is proposed to-day by some gentlemen, giving no right of appeal and no right of trial by jury, there would be much more reason why the party should be allowed to come to Congress and seek a remedy here. But in this case there is nothing of that kind, because the party had a legal remedy which he could have resorted to, and I think the point has been well made, in view of the fact that these parties continued to import these articles during four successive years, that they were very probably reimbursed by the consumers for every dollar of duty that they paid.

Mr. BOWDEN. Mr. Chairman, with the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KERR] I also served upon the Committee on Claims in the last Congress, and my recollection of the determination of that committee in respect to the pending claims is entirely different from his. My recollection is that after a full hearing there was a unanimous report ordered by that committee in favor of the payment of these claims.

Mr. LANHAM. In the last Congress?

Mr. BOWDEN. In the last Congress.

Mr. LANHAM. I think my friend is mistaken about that.

Mr. BOWDEN. There was a favorable report.

Mr. LANHAM. I do not remember that there was any report upon the bill, but I do remember distinctly that I was opposed to this bill.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. And I.

Mr. BOWDEN. I think I am right about it.

Mr. LAIDLAW. I will tell gentlemen about this claim in the last Congress. This bill was referred to a subcommittee, consisting of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] and myself. Amongst other bills that I took up was this one, and I drew a report upon it and got ready to report the bill by leave of the committee, but I was called home, and I gave the report to Mr. Campbell, of New York, who presented it to the House, so that it appears on the files as coming from him. The fact is, however, that I drew the report, and it did pass the committee. Mr. Campbell reported the bill to the House, and it is on the files as coming from him; but I drew the report, and it did pass the committee.

Mr. LANHAM. I do not say it was never reported from the committee; I simply state that I was opposed to the bill, as was also, I believe, the gentleman from Iowa. I did not remember the bill having been reported.

Mr. BOWDEN. I suppose the record will disclose what were the facts. According to my recollection it was a unanimous report.

Mr. LANHAM. I do not think so.

Mr. BOWDEN. I am not very familiar with the facts now. I remember that the matter was very diligently looked into by the committee in the last Congress; and it was certainly my impression that there had been a unanimous report, the only question being what weight should be given to the protest filed by these importers at the time they paid the duties; whether, having failed to make application for a refund pending the test suit to decide whether the duty should be 45 or 30 per cent., that protest should be regarded by Congress as taking the place of an application to the Secretary of the Treasury for a refund of the duties improperly paid. My recollection is that there was no question in the minds of the committee as to the propriety of the payment of this claim; and it was merely to correct the statement of the gentleman from Iowa that I rose.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. I have no recollection of any such report.

Mr. BROSIUS. Mr. Chairman, I discover in the report a circumstance which, if it be a fact, seems to me to supply the equity needed to justify the waiver on the part of the Government of the statute. In 1882 a suit was brought in the Federal court for the purpose of determining the question as to the proper construction of the law. Parties to the number of twenty-five or thirty had at that time a valid claim against the Government. It seems to me they were justified in "resting upon their oars" until the Federal court had determined that question; and this delay, it will be perceived, redounded to the advantage of the Federal Government.

Mr. COBB. Is it not true that that suit was decided in the Federal court before the bar of the statute took effect against these parties?

Mr. BROSIUS. That suit was brought in 1882, and was not determined by the Supreme Court of the United States until January, 1885.

Mr. COBB. That was not six years.

Mr. BROSIUS. But the bar is not six years, as the gentleman will remember. I am told it is only eighteen months; I have not verified that statement. Now, I want to direct the gentleman's attention to the fact I have already suggested, that the delay in this case—

Mr. COBB. Are there not two statutes, one providing that within eighteen months an appeal shall be taken from the decision of the Secretary of the Treasury and the other providing that, as in all other cases against the United States, there shall be no bar against going into the courts until the expiration of six years?

Mr. BROSIUS. I very frankly state to the gentleman that I have not examined the statutes. I take it for granted that the statement made by the chairman of the committee on the floor was correct. I am now only desiring to direct my friend's attention to the fact that the delay on the part of these twenty-five or thirty claimants redounded to the advantage of the Government by saving the costs that would have ensued upon twenty-five or thirty suits which would have gone against the Government. Can the Government justly now, after having saved those costs—

Mr. COBB. Does the Government pay costs?

Mr. BROSIUS. I suppose so. I suppose the Government paid the costs of the suit brought by Downing.

Mr. COBB. I reckon not.

Mr. BROSIUS. When a judgment is entered against the Government—

Mr. COBB. The Government, I will say to my friend, never pays costs unless it is expressly provided by statute.

Mr. BROSIUS. Well, I apprehend that the Government pays costs in a case like this, where judgment is entered against it.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. Not only that, but it also pays interest on the amount of the refund.

Mr. BROSIUS. I can not speak about the interest. The general principle is that the Government pays no interest.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. In these cases the Government does pay interest. I know it. The statute of the United States so proclaims.

Mr. COBB. I ask the gentleman from New Jersey—

Mr. BROSIUS. One moment, and I will yield the floor to my friend. I rose only to suggest, in view of what I have already stated, the fairness and justice of refunding to these claimants any sums of money which constituted a valid ground of claim against the Government at the time the suit of Downing was brought for the purpose of testing the question. I do not speak of any claims against which the bar of the statute had begun to run at that time. If my friend will amend his amendment by putting that limit upon the amount which shall be considered by the Court of Claims I will support his amendment.

Mr. COBB. I did not understand the gentleman's proposition.

Mr. BROSIUS. If eighteen months constituted the bar of the statute of limitation, then at the time Downing brought his suit in the Federal courts against the Government, the claim as to all the money that had been paid in 1879 and 1880 had already been barred by the statute.

Mr. COBB. Well, that point I am inclined to controvert from information given to me. I do not, myself, remember what the statute is.

Mr. BROSIUS. I am precisely in that situation. I took it for granted that the statement made here by the chairman of the committee was accurate.

Mr. COBB. My impression is, as I have suggested, that there are two statutes, and that the eighteen-month bar does not apply in regard to suits in the courts, but only to appeals from the decision of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the committee for a moment to the question raised by the gentleman from Iowa, I believe, to the effect that no protest was made at the time these duties were paid. I remember, Mr. Chairman, when this question arose in the practical workings of the Treasury Department many years since, ten or twelve years ago. One of my constituents was interested as an importer of steel goods, and he brought to my attention the difficulties which confronted him when this decision was made. I regret that the gentleman who prepared this report did not embody this information for the benefit of the committee, because I think it important we should have all the facts.

This report states that there were two rates of duty suggested in regard to these blooms, 45 per cent. ad valorem and 30 per cent. ad valorem.

That is true as far as it goes, but the Treasury Department, pending the time these blooms were being imported, not the Treasury Department, but one of the appraisers in the city of New York decided these steel blooms were steel ingots, and as such they came under that clause of the tariff laws in force before 1883 which described ingots, blooms, etc., at a rate of 2½ cents a pound.

I do not know what that would be ad valorem, but at 2 cents per pound ad valorem under the law of 1883 for the year 1888 the per centum would be 123.04, an absolutely prohibitory rate if applied to steel blooms used in the making of steel rails.

When these were being imported one of my constituents had a cargo of these steel blooms arriving in the city of New York upon which the local appraiser assessed 2½ cents per pound, and if this had not been reversed he would have been compelled to ship the cargo back to Europe. He could import steel rails cheaper than they could have been made out of the blooms.

It was a ruinous rate, and after an exhaustive argument before the Secretary it was settled by the Secretary waiving the question of the legal rate upon the ground that it would be manifestly unjust that importers should be subjected to this enormous rate of duty, which would amount to over $154 a ton on the steel blooms then imported, when steel rails could have been purchased in England at thirty or forty dollars a ton.

This steel bloom upon which the duty was paid is a piece of manufactured steel from 4 to 5 feet long, and from 6 to 7 inches square, which, when heated to a white heat and put in the rolling mills, produces steel rails. It is the raw material out of which steel rails are made. Therefore, if 2½ cents were exacted they would have had to ship these blooms back. The bondsmen upon the contracts were in the condition that if they contested the question in the courts the courts might have decided that 2½ cents per pound was the legal rate, and it would have ruined them all.

Mr. COBB. They were willing to take the advantage which accrued to them by not making a contest in the courts.

Mr. SPRINGER. They were more willing to submit to the payment of 45 per cent. before the question was decided in the court than to take the chance of having the legal rate of 2½ cents per pound, which would have ruined every man of them. They were confronted with these conditions: Shall we go to the courts when there is a doubt as to what is the legal rate? It was a closely disputed point. If the court decided the legal rate was 2½ cents they would have been ruined in their business. The question with them was whether they should pay the 45 per cent.

Mr. COBB. They willfully determined to remain out of court and not contest because they thought they were getting an advantage.

Mr. SPRINGER. They thought if they went into the court they might be bankrupted, and for that reason they did not make the contest. They did just as the gentleman would have done if he had been a party to such a contract.

Mr. COBB. I think that I would not come and ask the Congress of the United States to relieve me.

Mr. SPRINGER. I believe the gentleman is just and I know he is honest. I believe if he were the judge in the case and persons under duress, as it were, were compelled to submit to a wrongful rate of duty when the time came and the law was made known by the highest tribunal of the land, that he would be of opinion that they should have the benefit of the law as it is.

As to these gentlemen being able to recoup themselves on these contracts, I am cognizant of one case where they were not able to recoup and were compelled to suffer loss on their contract.

The merchant went on and did the best he could, and after the courts of the United States decided that 30 per cent. ad valorem is the lawful rate I do not see why these gentlemen should not have the benefit of what the Supreme Court of the United States decided was lawful as a rate of duty to be collected upon these blooms.

Now, if the Supreme Court of the United States does not so hold, no wrong is done. This is simply to submit the question, in each individual case, to the Supreme Court, and if that tribunal does not decide in their favor they are then out of court and must abide the consequences and pay the costs. But if the court decides that the law only authorized the collection of 30 per cent. ad valorem, and they had a good reason for not protesting and subjecting themselves to the hazard of a case not yet decided, it will award judgment, and the result will simply be to treat these gentlemen as all other persons engaged in this business have been treated.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Can you give any reason why they should go on importing for four successive years knowing this decision?

Mr. SPRINGER. A very good reason. They had to carry out their contracts. They could not stop their business, for they could not get sufficient of this material in this country to carry on the mills. The mill in my district would have been compelled to stop if they relied solely on the home market.

Mr. COBB. But they did not stop.

Mr. SPRINGER. No.

Mr. COBB. Well, was not that because they were making a profit on the blooms imported?

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not know how that may be; but I do know they were compelled to pay in excess of what the duty really was. They were importing these blooms under a rate of 30 per cent. ad valorem and they were compelled to pay 45 per cent., and I do not see why we should not mete out to these people the law of this case, and treat them as honorable business men should be treated engaged in a lawful proceeding in building up the great highways of this country.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. SPRINGER. I have finished my remarks, what I had desired to say, and will yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, simply expressing the hope that this bill will pass.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I did not want the gentleman from Illinois to yield to me, but simply took the floor to ask his attention to one clause of this report which has apparently been overlooked in the committee. These cases—the cases of these business men named in this bill—did get before the Secretary of the Treasury. I do not know whether there was a formal protest, or a formal appeal, or anything of the kind in the language of the law, which perhaps they were required in ordinary cases to make. But the case got absolutely before the Secretary of the Treasury, and he sustained the decision of the collector of the port. Now, if you will read a few lines of this report you will find this statement is verified:

The Treasury Department sustained the collector of customs in this decision, and the claimants were compelled to pay a duty of 45 per cent. on the steel blooms they imported, when the correct, legal rate of duty was only 30 per cent. ad valorem.

So the cases got before the Secretary of the Treasury—that is a fact which can not be denied—and were by him decided. Hence these gentlemen, after the Supreme Court had reversed the decision of the Secretary of the Treasury, were entitled to come in; and it does seem to me to be a hard case, after a decision of the Supreme Court in favor of certain suitors involving the same principle, that these men, who have paid into the Treasury of the United States money exacted from them, over and above the ad valorem duty of 30 per cent., should be kept out of their money.

Mr. COBB. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] said that these parties after the decision of this question by the Secretary of the Treasury considered whether or not it was to their interests to go into the court. They decided that if they went into the courts they might lose, and therefore it was better to remain out. Now, in that state of the case, let me ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania, where is the equity in their favor?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. That does not reach the question of equity. The question is, Were the cases brought before the Secretary of the Treasury, I care not by whom? It is shown that they were there. These identical claims for overpayment of duty were before the Secretary, and the Secretary decided against these claimants for this amount overpaid. I think that covers the question of equity entirely. They were not in the wrong. They did not put themselves in the wrong or outside of the law. They simply had to abide by a decision against them.

Mr. COBB. The gentleman from Pennsylvania does not understand my proposition. Whenever a man considers, as a practical question affecting his interest, whether he will sue in a court or not and decides that it is his interest to remain out, he has then no foundation of claim by which he can urge a legislative body, after the bar of a statute of limitation has been imposed as in this case and such bar has taken effect, to remove the bar. That is all.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. There is no evidence here that there was a statute of limitations running against these people or that the time had expired.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. I will call the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to the statute, if he will allow me.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Certainly.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. The language of the statute is—

The decision of the Secretary on such appeal shall be final and conclusive, and such vessels, or merchandise, or costs and charges shall be liable to duty accordingly, unless suit shall be brought within ninety days after the decision of the Secretary of the Treasury on such appeal for any duties that shall have been paid before the date of such decision on such vessel, or merchandise, or costs and charges, or within ninety days after the payment of duties paid after the decision of the Secretary. No suit shall be maintained in any court for the recovery of any duties alleged to have been erroneously or illegally exacted until the decision of the Secretary of the Treasury shall have been first had on such appeal, unless the decision of the Secretary shall be delayed more than ninety days from the date of such appeal, in case of an entry at any port east of the Rocky Mountains, or more than five months in case of an entry west of those mountains.

The appeal has to be made east of the Rocky Mountains in three months and west of the Rocky Mountains in five months.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Well, I simply wanted to bring this point before the committee, that these claimants were heard by the Secretary of the Treasury, not upon their own appeal, perhaps, but by the collector sending these cases to the Secretary.

As to the question of time when they should bring suit, that was within their own discretion entirely. A suit was pending, and they, of course, after a decision by the Supreme Court of the United States, imagined they would be paid back the amount overpaid by them.

Mr. COBB. Does the gentleman think it was within their discretion when there was a statute of limitations staring them in the face?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I am speaking of the question of bringing suit. I simply arose, not for the purpose of making an argument on the case, but to call the attention of the committee to the reading of this report so as to show that these gentlemen were before the Secretary of the Treasury, and that he decided against them.

Mr. HILL. Before further action is taken I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. SPRINGER. Suppose we take up the amendments of the committee and let them be voted upon.

Mr. HILL. Is there an amendment pending?

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes, sir. Let the amendment of the committee be read, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment reported by the committee will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert the words "and company" after "H. E. Collins," in the fifteenth line.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama offers an amendment to the bill, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to section 1 the following:

"Provided, That no person or firm named shall recover judgment for a greater amount than he or they lost on the goods imported by reason of the excessive duty collected by the Government, and that he or they did not reimburse himself or themselves for the excessive duty in the sale of the goods."

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. I raise the point of order that that amendment is void for want of certainty.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

The question was taken on the amendment, and the Chairman announced that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. SPRINGER. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 51, noes 54.

Mr. COBB. Tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will appoint the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. COBB] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAIDLAW] as tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 69, noes 70. So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. HOOKER. I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move that the committee rise and report this bill.

Mr. LAIDLAW. I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I was recognized to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey was recognized to offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend line 27. Immediately after the word "duty" insert "and as to which protests were duly entered."

Mr. LAIDLAW. I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I believe I was recognized to offer my amendment and to discuss it.

The CHAIRMAN. When this bill is brought up for consideration again the gentleman from New Jersey will have the floor.

Mr. HILL. I ask consent to have an amendment that I have here published in the RECORD for the information of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HILL]?

Mr. PAYSON. Regular order.

Mr. HOOKER. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan, reported that the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar had had under consideration sundry bills and had directed him to report the same back to the House with various recommendations. The committee had also had under consideration the bill (H. R. 3913) granting jurisdiction to the Court of Claims, notwithstanding any statutory bar, to the claim of J. F. Bailey & Co., and others, and had come to no resolution thereon.

PERMANENT AND INDEFINITE APPROPRIATIONS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, asks an order for the printing of a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, the title of which the Clerk will read.

Mr. CANNON. I ask that it be printed as an executive document.

The Clerk read as follows:

Letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, concerning the bill (H. R. 3832) to repeal laws relating to permanent and indefinite appropriations.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the order will be made.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. BUCHANAN, of Virginia, for eight days, on account of important business.

To Mr. O'FERRALL, until the 19th instant, on account of important business.

To Mr. DIBBLE, for three days.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. KENNEDY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill (H. R. 5825) prescribing the times for sales and for notices of sales of property in the District of Columbia for overdue taxes; when the Speaker signed the same.

And then, the hour of 5 o'clock p. m. having arrived, the House took a recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at 8 o'clock p. m., and was called to order by Mr. MORROW as Speaker pro tempore, who directed the Clerk to read the following communication.

The Clerk read as follows:

SPEAKER'S ROOM, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., March 14, 1890.

Mr. MORROW, of California is hereby appointed Speaker pro tempore for this evening.

T. B. REED, Speaker.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills under the rule for Friday evening sessions.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan, in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House, under the rule for Friday night sessions, is in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of private pension bills, bills for the removal of political disabilities, and bills removing charges of desertion. The Clerk will report the first bill on the Calendar.

FRANK DEMING.

The first business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5620) granting a pension to Frank Deming, Company F, Ninth Michigan Infantry.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, instructed and authorized to put the name of Frank Deming, late of Company F, Ninth Michigan Infantry, on the pension-roll, subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws.

The report (by Mr. BELKNAP) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5620) granting a pension to Frank Deming, submit the following report:

Claimant enlisted August 14, 1861, and served until September 15, 1865—four years and one day; all of this time in active service, with the exception of one thirty-day furlough.

Claim is based on total blindness caused by rheumatism. Hospital records show that he was treated at three different times for intermittent fever and once for bronchitis, but the last time he was sent to hospital no record was recorded as to disease, but comrades testify that he suffered from rheumatism. Claimant alleges that he contracted the disease in August, 1864; that he never recovered from it, but that it became chronic, and eventually resulted in total blindness. Claim was rejected by the Pension Department for want of sufficient evidence from date of discharge to the year 1884.

This is accounted for; reasons as follows: After his discharge he went to Nova Scotia, where he married and lived until 1880, when he returned to Michigan. All of the surgeons who had treated him were dead. At that time he was nearly blind and very destitute, and unable to find comrades, and in 1884 he became totally blind. For several years he was supported by his faithful wife, who did washing and other severe drudgery until she also is totally broken down in health and dependent upon charity.

The records show that he was a most worthy soldier, and is only denied a pension for his inability to furnish testimony for the first few years after the war.

Your committee recommend that he be placed upon the pension-roll at the rate of $40 per month from and after this date.

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment to the bill reported by the committee.

Mr. KILGORE. I want to make an inquiry about that. I do not understand why it is committees take it into their own hands to give the applicant for pension more than he or the Representative who introduced the bill in his favor calls for. It is a common practice here, after some gentleman who is cognizant of the facts has introduced a bill giving a certain pension or putting a man on the pension-roll subject to the limitations of the pension law, for the committee to come forward and give more.

Now, I am admonished by a private colloquy here that I am mistaken. I will anticipate what my friend from Kansas proposes to say, and insist that I am not mistaken, because a number of the bills passed last Friday night did that. For instance, a bill granting a pension at $12 and $25 a month was introduced, and the committee came in and reported a bill favorably, and amended it by making it $40 a month. Now, I can not understand why the committee should give more than the party has asked through his Representative who introduced the bill in his behalf. That is a subject for explanation.

Mr. MORRILL. The explanation in regard to the fixing of the rate in this case is simply this: The bill as originally introduced would have given this man a pension of $72 a month. Now, the committee feel that it is hardly just, although a man may be blind, to grant him, with the doubt hanging around the case that does exist in this case, the same pension that you would give a man who had lost his eyes on the battle-field.

Mr. KILGORE. Would not the effect of that bill simply be to place the man on the pension-roll at $8 a month, the fact of the blindness not being recited in the bill?

Mr. MORRILL. The office is always governed by the facts in the case in deciding what disease an applicant shall be pensioned for. Under the original bill this man would be allowed the pension for total blindness, which would be $72 a month. In the Forty-ninth Congress, I think it was, the committee discussed that matter very thoroughly, and decided that there ought to be a distinction made between a case where there are doubts, which can not possibly be solved, as to the cause of the man's blindness, and cases where it is absolutely certain that the loss of sight was incurred on the battle-field. So, ever since that Congress, we have passed upon cases of this kind by fixing the rate at $40 a month instead of $72, the regular rate. I think it happens very rarely indeed that the Committee on Invalid Pensions ever report a rate higher than the bill would carry, but we oftentimes fix a rate where we desire the pension to be lower than what the bill would make it.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the Clerk to read in connection with this bill what I have marked in the volume which I send to the desk. I desire to say in advance that the Francis Deming therein referred to is the Francis Deming referred to in the pending bill.

The Clerk proceeded to read.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, with the view of economizing time, I will ask that that veto message of President Cleveland be not now read in full, but I will ask that it be printed in the RECORD as a part of the remarks which it is now my purpose to submit.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The message is as follows:

To the House of Representatives:
I herewith return without approval House bill No. 2971, entitled "An act granting a pension to Francis Deming."

This claimant entered the service in August, 1861, and was discharged September 15, 1865.

His hospital record shows that during his service he was treated for various temporary ailments, among which rheumatism is not included.

He filed an application for pension in September, 1884, alleging that in August, 1864, he contracted rheumatism, which had resulted in blindness.

On examination of his case in November, 1884, he stated that his eyesight began to fail in 1882.

There seems to be no testimony showing his condition from the time of his discharge to 1880, a period of fifteen years.

The claim that his present condition of blindness is the result of his army service is not insisted upon as a reason for granting him relief as strongly as his sad and helpless condition. The committee of the House to which this bill was referred, after detailing his situation, closed their report with these words: "He served well his country in its dire need; his necessities now appeal for relief."

We have here presented the case of a soldier who did his duty during his army service and who was discharged from 1865 without any record of having suffered with rheumatism and without any claim of disability arising from the same; he returned to his place as a citizen, and in peaceful pursuits, with chances certainly not impaired by the circumstance that he had served his country; he appears to have held his place in the race of life for fifteen years or more. Then, like many another, he was subjected to loss of sight, one of the saddest afflictions known to human life.

Thereupon, and after nineteen years had elapsed since his discharge from the Army, a pension is claimed for him upon a very shadowy allegation of the occurrence of rheumatism while in the service, coupled with the startling proposition that this rheumatism resulted, just previous to his application, in blindness. Upon medical examination it appeared that his blindness was caused by amaurosis, which is generally accepted as an affection of the optic nerve.

I am satisfied that a fair examination of the facts in this case justifies the statement that the bill under consideration can rest only upon the grounds that aid should be furnished to this ex-soldier because he served in the Army and because he a long time thereafter became blind, disabled, and dependent.

The question is whether we are prepared to adopt this principle and establish this precedent.

None of us are entitled to credit for extreme tenderness and consideration toward those who fought their country's battles; these are sentiments common to all good citizens; they lead to the most benevolent care on the part of the Government and deeds of charity and mercy in private life. The blatant and noisy self-assertion of those who, from motives that may well be suspected, declare themselves above all others friends of the soldier can not discredit nor belittle the calm, steady, and affectionate regard of a grateful nation.

An appropriation has just been passed setting apart $76,000,000 of the public money for distribution as pensions, under laws liberally constructed, with a view of meeting every meritorious case; more than a million of dollars was added to maintain the Pension Bureau, which was charged with the duty of a fair, just, and liberal apportionment of this fund.

Legislation has been at the present session of Congress perfected considerably increasing the rate of pension in certain cases. Appropriations have also been made of large sums for the support of national homes where sick, disabled, or needy soldiers are cared for; and within a few days a liberal sum has been appropriated for the enlargement and increased accommodation and convenience of these institutions.

All this is no more than should be done.

But, with all this and with the hundreds of special acts which have been passed, granting pensions in cases where, for my part, I am willing to confess that sympathy rather than judgment has often led to the discovery of a relation between injury or death and military service, I am constrained by a sense of public duty to interpose against establishing a principle and setting a precedent which must result in unregulated, partial, and unjust gifts of public money under the pretext of indemnifying those who suffered in their means of support as an incident of military service.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, July 5, 1886.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I will occupy only a little while, as it is not my purpose or my desire to consume time merely for the sake of doing so. If any gentleman will take the trouble to-morrow or now to read the message of President Cleveland, which I have sent to the Clerk's desk, he will find that a bill pensioning this claimant, Francis Deming, passed the first session of the Forty-ninth Congress and was returned to this House, in which it had originated, without the approval of the President. The reasons for his action are clearly, succinctly, and elaborately stated in the message which I have sent to the desk. The ex-President has said all I care to on this particular bill.

I wish to say a few words, not touching this particular bill, but with reference to this class of legislation. I dislike exceedingly to put myself in opposition to measures of this kind; for these private bills and all bills of a local character are measures which members resent interference with more than any other; and it is a source of regret to me to come into conflict with gentlemen whom I highly regard and with whom I associate here more or less every day, personally and officially. But, Mr. Chairman, I think something ought to be said, plainly said, deliberately said, about this class of legislation.

I came here last Friday night and witnessed the performance of this House on that occasion. I have been here on other Friday nights during this session of Congress and many Friday nights during the years of my service in this House, and what I witnessed here one week ago to-night I have seen repeated over and over again.

Mr. Chairman, it is my deliberate judgment that seven out of every ten—I believe I understate rather than overstate the fact—that seven out of every ten of these private bills passed through this House and through Congress are not only outrages, but outrages which amount in moral intent, if not in legal effect, to absolute larceny. I speak now of special legislation, which is one of the evil results growing out of the widespread public demoralization engendered by our entire system of pension legislation. It is my purpose at an early day, on the very first opportunity which may be afforded me, to express myself very clearly and distinctly upon the subject of general pension legislation. There are some things I am anxious to say in regard to that phase of this question, but not now.

What did we do here on last Friday night? About fifty members of this House were present; there are about twenty here to-night. About fifty members on that occasion, in two hours, passed forty-seven bills. The thing has been done often. On one occasion I believe in the Senate several hundred—my recollection is about three hundred—were passed in one lump without ever being read. Not a gentleman on this floor, outside perhaps of one or two members upon the committee reporting these bills, ever saw them or ever saw the report, or heard of them until they were read from the Clerk's desk. My friend from Texas [Mr. KILGORE] and one or two others, myself among them, sometimes make a few feeble and ineffectual protests [laughter] and withdraw them at the solicitation of members.

A MEMBER. "Feeble" is pretty good.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I repeat it—"feeble" in this sense, that being generous and yielding to members who appeal to them the gentlemen withdraw almost invariably whatever opposition they have to urge.

It is not my purpose now, or at any time, to adopt obstructive measures—to call "no quorum," and all that; but I do purpose to discuss these questions and to have the facts known as we go along.

Mr. Chairman, since the adjournment on Friday night last I have looked over our work. Forty-seven bills passed in about two hours. Twenty-three of the bills carried specific sums, from $12 to $30 each per month. Those twenty-three bills carry an average pension of over $23.50 per month, or a total of $542 per month; $6,504 per year. The other twenty-four bills did not carry specific sums, but directed the Secretary of the Interior to place the beneficiaries on the pension-roll subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws. If those twenty-four bills shall carry an average pension of $8 a month, they would amount to $192 in the aggregate per month, or $2,304 per year. In other words the average for the forty-seven bills would be $15.50 per month, making a total annual expenditure of $8,808 per year.

That was the work of two hours. Forty-seven bills, with which scarcely a member of this House was familiar and which were read at such a galloping pace from the Clerk's desk that nobody was able to understand them at the conclusion, were passed in two hours. If this session were to last for six months and this performance should be repeated each Friday night during that time it would impose an annual burden of more than $200,000 upon the tax-payers of the country. Continue it for ten years and the annual burden on account of these private bills alone will mount into the millions.

I am about done; but before I conclude I wish to call attention to two or three of these bills which passed here on Friday night last as illustrating the character of this legislation. I have them here. First comes the war of the Revolution. Lucy Hale was the beneficiary. Her grandfather, it appears from the report of the committee, served for a short time in some capacity in the War for Independence. What conspicuous service he rendered, what special service he rendered, if any, has not yet been written in the history of the nation. But this granddaughter is old and poor; and because she is old and poor, and for that reason alone, she is granted a pension of $20 a month—because one hundred years ago her grandfather or great-grandfather, I do not now remember which, for some short period of time rendered some service in the Army of his country. Why, sir, I suppose nearly every gentleman on this floor of American birth had a grandfather in the Revolutionary war or a great-grandfather. I heard one distinguished member of this House say here the other day that he had several grandfathers engaged in that struggle. [Laughter.]

Here is Mary Ann Allen.

The claimant's husband, John Piner, was a private in Capt. James Davidson's company of Col. Richard M. Johnson's regiment, Kentucky Mounted Militia, war of 1812, from May 20, 1813, to November 19, 1813—a period of six months. He died in 1823. She afterwards married Mr. Allen and remained his wife for many years. But she liked the name of Piner best. She is a Piner herself! She is old, the report says, and poor. That is the whole case. Now, what service Mr. Piner rendered in the war of 1812 or what disabilities he suffered remain a mystery.

But because her first husband served a short time in the war and because now she is old and poor, she must be allowed a pension. Mr. Chairman, I know many widows in this country who are old and poor and whose grandfathers, I have no doubt, and fathers, too, perhaps, fought in some of our wars with foreign countries as well as in our domestic wars.

Here is Isaac Enderly, another case. He served in Captain Smith's company of Tennessee militia from January 12, 1814, to March 3, a little over a month. He was granted a land bounty and is now and has been for many years a pensioner at $8 a month. Well, he comes here to this willing Congress and asks that his pension be increased to $50 a month—

Mr. LAWLER. He wants to get the surplus out.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. Simply because he is old and poor and his vision somewhat impaired, though he is not blind. That is the whole case, and accordingly this old and poor man, because of his age and poverty and one month's service in the Tennessee militia, is given $50 per month, having already received a land warrant.

Here is the case of William Dunn. He was a private, so says the report, in Mentor's company of Alabama militia in the Florida war, and served from February 29, 1836, to May, 1836, or just about three months. A member, whose genial face I see now before me within the walls of this room, a gentleman whom I esteem, as all of you do, as a man of high character, this member of Congress, says the report, has assured the committee that Mr. Dunn is seventy-eight years old, quite feeble, unable to work, and very poor. That is the whole case as presented by the report, and accordingly this old man who served ninety days in the Florida war is pensioned. He was never wounded or disabled and never rendered, so far as we are advised, any special or conspicuous service to his country, but he is old and poor. There are a great many old and poor men in this country.

I have one more, Charles A. Platz, who belonged to an Indiana regiment during the war of the rebellion. He served first in a hundred-day regiment; then re-enlisted April 12, 1865, after the war was over. [Laughter.] He was never out of the State of Indiana, so far as we are advised, in a military capacity. Soon after his enlistment, while encamped at Camp Morton, Indianapolis, he says he was ordered to water some horses, and while so engaged was kicked by one of them on his left side and seriously injured. That is the man, that is the service, that is the whole case. After full investigation the claim was rejected at the Department, and now, twenty-five years after the incurrence of this alleged injury and almost without a hearing, this House overrules the Department and grants the pension.

Now, Mr. Chairman, let it be borne in mind that all, or nearly all, of these claims, which are brought from year to year by the thousands and tens of thousands into this House and the other branch of Congress, are claims which have been investigated by the sworn officials of the Government, employing all the vast machinery provided by law to aid in investigating them, and which have been denied in the Department as being without merit. It has got to be the practice now that the very moment a claim is rejected in the Department application for rehearing is filed, which is entirely proper, and, if denied, then the applicant comes to his member of Congress. It is easier to put a claim of any kind, war claims, pensions, claims of every kind and character, through Congress than through any Department of the Government. This is the great claim department, easy of access and easy to be used.

Mr. Chairman, I have been looking up, during such moments as I could spare from other duties during the week past, some of the cases that are to come on to-night, and I intend as far as I possibly can do so during the remainder of this session of Congress, in advance of these Friday night meetings, to examine at the Department the papers in the cases, and I purpose to state the facts as I find them in order that the House may not be governed exclusively by ex parte reports—perhaps I ought not to use that term; I will say exclusively by the reports of the members of the committee.

Mr. Chairman, that is as much as I care now to say. I again call attention to the fact that this particular bill was not only rejected by the Department, but has been vetoed since by the President of the United States. Still it is ever with us.

Mr. COOPER, of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I regret very much that I have not had time, as the gentleman who has just taken his seat has had, to investigate this question and to prepare myself to speak deliberately and carefully as he has done; and I further regret that in making the speech he has made to-night at some length he has not devoted himself more particularly to the examination of the special question upon which we are now called to vote. It would have been much pleasanter, for me at least, when I come to cast my vote on the bill now before this committee, if the remarks which the gentleman had made were applied more particularly to that bill.

He began his address by having read to the House a short veto message from ex-President Cleveland. I have not had the opportunity to read that message. I do know this, sir, however, that if any lawyer will take the pains, as my friend from Missouri did who has just taken his seat, to investigate a close question, he can find very much to say on either side; and whether he speaks favorably or against a given proposition depends altogether on the spirit with which he enters the investigation; and I am sorry to say that I feel from the general tenor of the remarks of the gentleman that the spirit which animates him in entering upon this investigation is, and, indeed, he himself declares it to be, antagonistic to this class of legislation.

The pension laws are general in their application. All laws are so. There have been in the neighborhood of half a million cases adjudicated under existing law. It would be extraordinary, it would be strange indeed, Mr. Chairman, if in the adjudication of that number of cases, at least half a million of them, in the allowance of that number, the Department has not stumbled now and then upon one which came very near to the line, one which had many equities, and yet when the line was drawn upon it and the rule rigidly applied was found falling just outside of the line, when at the same time the heart and conscience of the man who had the case in hand told him that in equity the case had merit in it and that in that particular case a modification of the law ought to be made.

Such is the experience and observation of every man who has investigated this kind of cases. Now, I have no answer to the special case that the gentleman has spoken of here, because I have not given that investigation. I have not had opportunity to do so. If the gentleman had been kind enough to attend at the meeting last Friday night and point out these facts that he has pointed out in a specific case the Committee on Pensions would have had opportunity on their side to see what might be said in behalf of or in vindication of the step they have taken in this case, and no doubt some of the criticisms he has made to-night would have been answered. I have confidence in these gentlemen and in their integrity and ability to ascertain the right in these cases; and I utterly dispute and deny the proposition made by him that seven-tenths of these claims if allowed here become acts of petit or grand larceny. I utterly deny that.

Mr. Chairman, these claims as a rule are claims which come very nearly up to the mark or which fall only short of it because of the failure in the phraseology of the law to fit the applicant in a particular case. Now, Mr. Chairman, I say I have not read that message. There is not a gentleman upon this floor, and no gentleman ever occupied a seat upon this floor, who has a higher regard for the man who penned that message than I have; but I will say to you, Mr. Chairman, and I will say to the gentleman who so eloquently entertained us here to-night that I have a deep and abiding conviction that if he had stood by his record upon the great economic questions of the day, upon which he was right and upon which the country was with him, and not endeavored to make a special issue on this class of legislation, and if he had not, as it sometimes appeared he did, gone somewhat out of his way to throw the great weight of his name and official station against some poor blind man, who to say the least was rather to be pitied than reviled, he might have been President of the United States to-day. [Applause.]

I think that was a mistake, and while I am willing to follow him generally I am not willing to admit that he made no mistakes. No man is wholly perfect, and I protest that we do not copy his mistakes. It may be that it is pleasant for the gentleman, coming from the particular locality from which he does, to make remarks which will provoke laughter when the claims of soldiers' widows and of men broken down with disease contracted in defense of their country are being discussed, but it is not popular in the section from which I come.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. Will my friend allow me right there?

Mr. COOPER, of Indiana. Yes, with pleasure.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. The gentleman speaks of the section of country from which I come. I come from a State which furnished more men to the Union armies than the State from which you come. I come from a district—

Mr. TARSNEY. Yes; by seventy-five thousand.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I come from a district which to-day has three thousand pensioners within its borders and about thirty Grand Army posts.

Mr. COOPER, of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to cast any reflection upon the gentleman's State, nor upon its loyalty; but if he makes the charge that the State which he represents furnished more troops in proportion to population than did Indiana, I dispute that proposition and demand the proof. Mr. Chairman, I am not prepared to give you precisely the number of troops Indiana furnished, but I know this, that she has more men upon the pension-rolls to-day in proportion to her population than any other State in this Union. I suppose they are there lawfully and justly.

I believe, Mr. Chairman—I know that it has been the fashion of some to make speeches upon this floor to tickle a particular constituency which they represent, regardless of the effect it has upon other portions of this Union. Of course it is the duty primarily of the member to represent his own constituency and to speak for them; but I desire simply, as between the gentleman, for whom I have the most friendly feeling personally, and myself, to have this line distinctly marked, that in the State from which I come it is not popular to speak disparagingly of the men nor of their families who gave, or at least showed a disposition to give, everything that was dear to them for the honor and preservation of that flag.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in deciding these questions, I do not say that I shall oppose my friend here when he gives us good ground to act upon. It is from the general tone and tenor of his remarks that I dissent. The gentleman has not argued this case. If he had devoted his time to the consideration of this particular claim and should have proven that this man was not entitled to a pension, that he did not come within the rule for our guidance here of equity and fair play, I should gladly support his position; but to make a general attack on this whole class of legislation and especially to denounce it as he has done, I think is entirely wrong. I have been here for three or four months now, and I have seen gentlemen vote appropriations for all characters of public and private enterprises. I believe the gentleman has calculated the amount of money that was appropriated in the last Friday evening session at $6,000.

Why, to-day we saw a compromise made about some old gentleman who had some sort of claim upon the Government for a patent, when the record shows that he was paid every cent that he had asked years ago. Propositions were sent back and forth between the friends and enemies of the bill that they would give him $20,000 or $25,000 to get rid of him, and it was finally agreed, I believe, that he should have $65,000. Now, I have seen this House vote millions of dollars for public buildings, for works of material improvement, to gild the outside and make a show of greatness. But none of these, in my judgment, reflects our country's greatness half so much as the manifestation of gratitude to her brave defenders. This money paid out of the public Treasury as a reward for patriotism is an evidence that the people of this country are willing to reward devotion to and sacrifice in behalf of the Government. It is not thrown away; it is not lost; but is money given out for a good purpose. It proves to these men that they were not mistaken when they thought they were offering their lives for the defense of the best Government that this world has ever seen. It insures the perpetuity of the Government by proving that it is worthy to live. [Applause.]

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Chairman, I simply wish to say a word in regard to general pension legislation as supplementing what has been so well said by my friend from Indiana [Mr. COOPER]. In the history of jurisprudence it was found necessary to establish courts of equity because the courts of law were found to be inadequate to measure and mete out justice in many individual cases, and, as a result of the establishment of courts of equity, we have in every county throughout all this broad land a court which hears and determines cases which, if tried strictly according to the law, would not be determined justly. Congress is nothing more nor less than a court of equity in these pension cases. The Pension Office is the court of law, the nisi prius court so to speak, and wherever a case comes before that nisi prius court in which, according to the law, justice can not be meted out and the application of the applicant is declined or refused because the evidence, or the facts, or the application does not bring the case within the law, then the applicant has the right to appeal to the court of equity, which is the Congress of the United States and which boasts that its doors are open to the humblest applicant, even though he be blind and even though his petition comes from the walls of a poor-house. Let me give an illustration of this. A stepmother may have been dependent almost entirely upon a stepson who marched beneath the banner of the Union and offered up his life as a sacrifice upon the altar of his country, yet by reason of the universality of the pension law that stepmother can not obtain a pension at the Pension Office.

That is right, according to the law of the land. It is right, according to the general statutes passed by the Congress of the United States providing for granting pensions; but there is a higher court which says to that stepmother when appeal is made to it: "Although, under the law, you are not entitled to a pension because you were not the actual mother of that boy, who gave his life for his country and who was your support, yet this court of equity will say that you are entitled to a pension because the mainstay of your life was taken from you." So, almost every Friday evening we have bills brought before us granting pensions to a dependent stepmother or a dependent stepfather. That is simply one class of cases illustrating the operation of this court of equity and the necessity of having such a court to which an applicant can appeal.

The objection is made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. STONE] that there are only thirty or forty members here to-night and that these few pass upon the right of these applicants to receive pensions. Mr. Chairman, how often does it occur during our day sessions that the most important legislation is passed by the voices of not to exceed a dozen of the Representatives of the people upon this floor. Why is that? It is because the days of oratory and eloquence in the House of Representatives are past. It is because the legislation that is now being enacted is framed and molded in the committee-rooms instead of upon the floor of the House. The days of Clay and Webster have been supplanted by the days of fact, by the days of careful examination; ay, more than that, they have been supplanted by the electric wire and by the newspaper, so that whatever is done here during the day is flashed to all portions of our country and is known there before the sun goes down.

The legislation of the country, as I have just said, is now molded and framed in the committee-rooms, and consequently during the day sessions of the House hundreds of motions are passed upon when the voices that are heard in support of them do not exceed a dozen. That is because, in so large a body as this, it is impossible for each member to examine in detail every measure that comes before the House. He must necessarily rely, to a great extent, upon the work that has been done in the committee-rooms. Therefore, what is true of pension legislation is true to a great extent of all other legislation that comes before this House, and if the objection which the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. STONE] makes upon the ground that there are only thirty or forty members present here to-night is valid as against pension legislation, the same objection can be made to four-fifths of the legislation that is passed by the Congress of the United States.

Now, a word in regard to this special bill and then I am done. The veto message of the President which has been read was based upon the ground that there was no evidence showing that this man had contracted rheumatism during the war. I do not know whether that evidence was on file in the Pension Bureau when this case was first examined by the committee, or whether it was on file when the President examined the case, or whether it has been since added to the files and has been considered by the present Committee on Invalid Pensions. I only know that the report says that comrades testify that he suffered from rheumatism during the war.

Here is a man who served four years and over in the service of his country, and the report in the case shows why the Pension Office could not grant his application. It was not because he was unable to show that he had suffered from rheumatism during the war, but because he was unable, by reason of the circumstances which surrounded him, to show the continuance of that disability from the date of his discharge up to the time when he made his application. And there, Mr. Chairman, is another instance where the general law in regard to pensions can not mete out justice in many individual cases.

This man, I believe, removed to Nova Scotia and remained there for some time. In 1884 he became totally blind. The physicians that had attended him during the war and since the war were dead. When he was living outside of the United States of course he was not in the immediate vicinity of any of his comrades. The evidence shows, as a reason why the Pension Bureau could not grant his application, his inability to prove the continuance of his disability year after year, as the law required; but the Committee on Invalid Pensions, having examined all the evidence and all the circumstances in the case, reasonably conclude that this is a case where that proof should not be required in this court of equity, and they say to this blind man sitting in the darkness of the sacrifice which he made for his country, "We will tint the blackness of that sacrifice by giving you a pension." I say it is right and that we should stand by the report of the committee.

Mr. TARSNEY. Mr. Chairman, I had supposed that in the discussion of these measures which are special the consideration of the general principles involved in pension legislation throws but very little light. I had supposed these were special cases, depending each upon special facts and to be determined each upon its merits, and that eloquent appeals for or against the principles involved in general pension legislation should have no weight with those who are to determine these particular cases. Therefore, having had those ideas I am constrained to follow them in the determination of these cases.

I find here from the report of this case as it is presented that in the Forty-ninth Congress a bill was introduced for the relief of this claimant; that it passed both Houses of Congress; that it went to the Executive and failed for the reasons pointed out to receive his approval. The record then is silent as to whether subsequent action was taken in the matter. It is not disclosed to this House to-night that the bill when returned to the House without the approval of the Executive was taken up and considered here again or not. It does not appear whether by a failure of a two-thirds majority to pass it over the veto of the Executive it was defeated or whether the author and the friends of the bill were convinced by the arguments of the Executive that there was no merit in the measure and let it die.

These matters do not appear on the record in this case; and it adds nothing to the merit of the case for my friend from Indiana to step outside the record and criticize the Executive upon other matters. I regret exceedingly that that Executive did not have the counsel and advice of my friend from Indiana to guide him and save him from the errors which the gentleman has pointed out to-night. I say that until it is shown that in this measure the Executive erred that record is conclusive upon me, unless, as in ordinary cases of right involved in questions of this character, new evidence is disclosed.

No man can feel more sympathy for a person deprived of his sight than I. But all over this land are countless thousands of men groping in darkness because the heavy hand of Providence has been laid upon them and they have been afflicted. But because of these facts I am not warranted in putting my hand into the Treasury of this nation to take out money and give to them when it does not belong to me or to them. I would deal not only fairly, but liberally with them when they present a case of merit. But sympathy can not guide me in the discharge of an official duty of this kind. We are here the trustees of an express trust, to take care of the people's money and to distribute it according to the law of the land for the purposes for which this Government was organized, not to deal it out in charity when there is no legal obligation that calls for such distribution.

This man if he is entitled to anything under the law had a clear remedy provided by law. He went to the Pension Office, the duties of which, as we know, are administered with the utmost liberality. He went there and filed his application for pension. It was examined in the spirit of liberality which characterizes the office. It was rejected. What was the issue? No technical failure of proof, no technicality which deprived him of a legal right. The question on which he failed was the merits of his case. "Did this disability occur by reason of your service to your country? Did this rheumatism occur because of your service in the Army? Did it occur while you were so serving? Has it continued since?" That was the issue involved; that was the issue determined by those liberal administrators of the pension laws. Upon that issue the verdict was adverse to the claim. Then he comes and appeals to a still more liberal tribunal—this House and the other. They pass a bill. It goes to the Executive, whose approval it fails to secure upon its merits.

The reasons for the withholding of the Executive approval are before the House. Now, the claim has come back here again after one Congress has passed by, and I say if the Committee on Invalid Pensions can show me that there is any new evidence in this matter which changes its merits, which changes the situation from what it was when this case was passed upon by the Pension Bureau, when it was passed upon before by Congress and when they refused to pass the bill over the veto of the Executive—if the committee can show me that any new evidence has intervened to prove that the Pension Bureau or the Executive erred in their judgment I will cheerfully vote for $50 a month, if that is the amount proposed, or $72 a month, ay, for $100; because $100 a month would not compensate for blindness brought on by service in the Army.

But I want these measures scrutinized; I want them to pass upon their merits; so that the distinction shall be maintained here between meritorious and unmeritorious cases; so that all shall not be treated alike, one having a just and meritorious case under the law and another having no merit but the eloquent pleas that are made here on this floor for sympathy because the Author of the Universe has afflicted some of His creatures. Let us examine these cases upon their separate merits. When the Pension Committee comes in and reports in favor of the allowance of a pension and the record does not disclose want of merit, I will vote with the committee every time; but when the record, as in this case, unexplained by subsequent or new evidence, exhibits a lack of merit, I can not vote with the committee, and I will not in this case.

Mr. WADE. Mr. Chairman, my colleague from Missouri reflects somewhat on the Committee on Invalid Pensions and on individual members of the House when he charges that we come here to pass legislation that is equivalent to "petty larceny." Now, I am here with two bills on this Calendar to pension two citizens of the State of Missouri that the gentleman, in common with myself, represents. I have had passed during the time I have been in Congress other bills pensioning men in Missouri; and against no one of them could the charge of "petty larceny" lie.

One of these men was wounded badly at Springfield. He belonged to a Missouri militia regiment. There is no provision in the general pension law which will warrant the granting of a pension in his case. He was wounded in 1864, and he has suffered from the date of the reception of the wound up to this day, and he has never received a pension from the Government. His case is undoubtedly meritorious.

The other is also a citizen of Missouri, who, in 1862, as one of the home guard was guiding a company of Missouri troops, and in an engagement with the enemy in which they took part he was wounded. He has been a cripple since 1862, unable to gain a livelihood. This Government owes him a pension and ought to have discharged the debt in 1862.

I am not here, sir, to-night, and never have been, to assist in committing petty larceny upon this Government, in the interest of any constituent of mine or anybody else, and I will pledge this House and the country that when I present a bill to this House and ask the support of the House for its enactment into a law it is a meritorious case.

Now, sir, I desire to address myself briefly to the pending bill. My colleague from Missouri, unfortunately for himself, was too young to enter the Army during the late war. If he had been old enough he would have been alongside of me sustaining the old flag. I went into the service in 1861, in April.

I can remember in the State of Ohio, of which I was then a citizen, that they called meetings to excite enthusiasm and induce men to volunteer and induce them to defend the old flag. They put on the rostrum the leading men of the State, and they spoke to the young men and the married men, and told them that if they went out and defended the flag of the country, preserved the Union and the Government, the Government would owe them a debt which would be discharged. Now, sir, this language was repeated on every rostrum in the State of Ohio and all over the Union by these people, and it had as much binding force, because it was backed by the entire sentiment of the people, as though the language had been formulated into a law and had received the sanction of the Chief Magistrate of the nation. And we are here to-night to carry out, as far as we may, those promises and that provision of law. That man who served four years in the Army of the United States in defense of the Union is to-day blind, and I say if there is a bit of virtue in the people of the United States, they will now at this time give him a pension and enable him to pass the remainder of his life in comfort and to provide a home to the woman who has labored until she has broken herself down for the support of this defender of the Union.

Mr. LAWLER. Mr. Chairman, I have often wondered on nights like this, when members leave their families, their warm, comfortable rooms, and come up here to the Capitol in the rain and try to legislate for soldiers, their widows or dependents, throughout the country, to find the night wasted or taken up by filibustering, I may term it, because it looks a good deal like it, to prevent action upon meritorious and deserving cases. I have believed, from watching the action of Congress here, voting away thousands and tens of thousands of dollars, that we would have a right as a Congress to advance to our old and aged citizens pensions if we believed they were actually in need of the same.

I want to say, sir, that I consider all these matters that come before Congress in this shape are, as a rule, bills that are outlawed at the Pension Office, and the only resort of the applicant is here in order to secure relief.

I know one case that President Cleveland vetoed, and in a few words I will show you its merit. There entered the war, when very young, a boy who from shocks became partly derailed, received from the striking of a shell while engaged on one of the mosquito gunboats. The concussion affected his brain and he went out of the service and some years afterwards he was killed in the Cañon of the Colorado in a snow-slide. The bill came up here in the House and there was enough merit in it to say that his old mother, seventy-two years of age, should have a pension. The bill passed the House and the Senate, and went to the President and was vetoed.

That bill is now before the House again. The President of the United States vetoed it because of reasons which are set forth in the veto, but stated that he regretted much that he was compelled to do so, on account of the mother. That old mother to-day is poor and helpless. If it had not been for the service of her son and his death in consequence of it he would be living now and taking care of her, who is to-day in Chicago in a starving condition.

I want to say to those trying to find means of obstructing pensions and pension legislation that if I was in their places I would not come here at these sessions. If I did not believe in the justice and the merit of this legislation I would remain absent and allow the party in power to go right along and assume these responsibilities, because I will say to my Democratic friends we made that issue for four years, and we went out before the people and we were beaten. I say to-day that the tax-payers of this country, and I know I voice the sentiments of many of them in my own locality, believe that even the stepfathers and stepmothers and those who took care of those who fought for the Government during the war should be provided for in their old age and that pensions should be granted to them.

Mr. TARSNEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LAWLER. Certainly.

Mr. TARSNEY. Will the gentleman say that in the locality he represents his constituents are desirous of having pension bills passed whether they are meritorious or otherwise?

Mr. LAWLER. I want to say that my people would to-day endorse me to vote a pension to every citizen of this country who served in the Army who is past that age that he is fit for manual labor, I will answer him. [Applause.]

Mr. TARSNEY. I am satisfied.

Mr. LAWLER. And that means that the man who is known to have served in the Army, who is known to be blind, who is known to have been injured, and who has sacrificed his youth and health for the Government and for the protection of the Union should be aided in his old age.

Mr. PERKINS. Let me interrupt the gentleman from Illinois to ask if the constituency he represents is not entirely willing to take the judgment of the gentlemen who compose the Committee on Invalid Pensions to determine whether the claims pending before them, and on which they report to this House, are meritorious or otherwise?

Mr. LAWLER. The committee are known to be honest and conscientious gentlemen who give a great deal of their time examining these cases, and I further wish to say that I would cheerfully, and I have cheerfully and willingly, cast my vote on all of these pension matters, representing a large constituency, as I do, of over 300,000 people; and I am pleased to say that they have endorsed my views, and sent me back here by a majority of 6,082 votes. [Applause.]

The surplus so much talked of; it is there. I say it were better to put it out in internal improvements in the country or to pay it out for pensions and put it in circulation, where it will do more good than to keep it tied up in the vaults of the Treasury. [Applause.] The money paid to these unfortunates is not hoarded up; it is put into active circulation. In this country there are to-day over a million men unemployed; and, while this surplus can not affect them directly, indirectly it would assist these people and put more than a million of unemployed men to work. But our Republican friends say we must draw the line at some place and our Democratic friends say they are becoming alarmed at the amount of expenditures. I will say that the party which puts that money out in internal improvements is deserving of the thanks of the country.

Mr. KILGORE. For national fairs.

Mr. LAWLER. I will meet you at Chicago in '92, and I will say that the men who will vote to do that will come back to this House with increased majorities. [Applause.]

Mr. KILGORE. I have been unwittingly, I take it, rung into this discussion to-night. I have been subjected to a lecture in a mild way by one or two gentlemen who have addressed the committee. Therefore, I think it is entirely proper that I should consume a little of the time of this committee in this discussion. There have been but few observations, if any, upon the pending question, because it has been a discussion after the manner of procedure known to gentlemen who participated in the war called "shelling the woods." We are engaged in "shelling the woods" this evening, and I want the privilege of indulging in that luxury a little myself.

Now, my friend from Missouri [Mr. STONE] made a very fine speech. But he argued his case after the trial, after the verdict against him, and after the motion for new trial had been overruled and the final judgment entered. As suggested by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COOPER], if he had been here on last Friday night and had made the eloquent speech which he has made here this evening, I apprehend the action of this House would have been more in conformity with his views and convictions in regard to the bills he has discussed. At any rate, Mr. Chairman, if he is so much opposed to the bills he referred to, if he has found so little merit in them, it was within his power to defeat them. Now, when I make up my mind in sessions like this that a measure ought not to pass, I know how it can be defeated, and proceed to defeat it. That is the best way to do business.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I think my friend ought to permit me a word.

Mr. KILGORE. Yes, sir; I will permit you to say anything. A man who talks so eloquently can always command my attention.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I remarked at the outstart of what I said that I was here on Friday night last; that I had not previously ever taken occasion to examine these bills; that they were read rapidly from the Clerk's desk, so rapidly that it was almost impossible for me to understand the merits of the cases. Since then, as a matter of curiosity somewhat, I have, however, looked over them as published in the RECORD, and what I said in regard to these measures is simply to explain that it is my purpose in future similar measures to examine them so far as I can in advance in order, at the proper time, to explain my objections to them, if I have any objections.

Mr. KILGORE. Now, Mr. Chairman, he insists "that the gentleman from Texas" interposed "a feeble opposition." [Laughter.] "A feeble opposition." [Laughter.] Mr. Chairman, it may be feeble, but if it is true "'tis pity 'tis, 'tis true." But the gentleman from Missouri, who was in the Forty-ninth Congress, if he will examine the record, will find during that Congress the House would pass from eighty to one hundred and twenty bills on the Friday night sessions. The House was in the habit of doing with precipitation, I may say, with indecent haste what is done in the Senate nearly every day. It would pass private pension bills without reading them or the report of the committee.

Now, I have only chosen, in my limited experience in Congress, to attend these meetings and to insist that business should be conducted in a business like method. I have insisted that the bills should not be passed without having been read in the hearing of members of this House, and that the report of the committee should be read, so that the House might be advised as to the merits of the question under consideration. I have found a great deal of opposition in my efforts to hold the House down to the transaction of business after the manner of business men; and it is this abuse in private and local legislation I have heretofore resisted, and which I think it is my duty to continue to resist. I do not come from a country that is affected by pension legislation; and if the gentlemen who do come from those sections of country where a great number of pensioners live, and where they preponderate possibly as voters, consulted their own private judgment, I venture to say they would admit that there are flagrant abuses perpetrated in this House continually in respect to such legislation. They say that to me in private conversations repeatedly, but that they can not resist the evil; it is unpopular with a large class of voters, and therefore they must fall in with the crowd and drift along with the tide.

Mr. COOPER, of Indiana. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. KILGORE. Oh, yes.

Mr. COOPER, of Indiana. I will say to my very good friend from Texas, if he refers to the State from which I have the honor to come, I hope his remarks at present have no relation to me. And I will ask the gentleman if it is not true that I have repeatedly sat near him and with him and with my arms around his shoulders besought him to keep his seat in order that orderly transaction of business at Friday night sessions might not be interrupted?

Mr. KILGORE. That is true. The gentleman has been very affectionate to me. [Laughter.] But I want to ask my friend from Indiana if he has not said to me that bill or this bill ought not to pass, but to let it go? [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. COOPER, of Indiana. Oh, no! Oh, no! I beg your pardon. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. KILGORE. I have a recollection of some of these conversations, but I will raise no question upon that subject.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is the abuse of this system that I resist, and I can afford to talk about that abuse. You can not, perhaps. You are afraid to do so. It affects your election—Democrats and Republicans alike—and I suppose I would be afraid to talk about it, too, if I were in the same position you are. I am not saying that I am any braver than you, but I am in the attitude to talk about it; and the fact that I come from the far Southwest, the fact that I was on the losing side in the "recent unpleasantness," does not in the least affect my sense of duty here, and it ought not to, and I hope it does not, affect the obligation which is upon me to discharge my duty as I understand it. I am not going over the country apologizing continually for being born and raised in the South and standing with my own people in the late war. I do not deem it necessary that I should surrender my independence and my judgment as a member of this House merely to satisfy the world that I am thoroughly and profoundly reconstructed.

Now, as I have said, it is the abuse of the system that I have always chosen to resist. Never since I have been a member of this House have I raised my voice against a suitable pension to the man who carried the musket and the knapsack and who bore the brunt of battle during the war, if he presented a meritorious case. It is extravagant pensions, it is pensions to wealthy and fashionable people, it is pensions to people who are in high life and who hold high positions, backed by wealth, influence, and culture, I have resisted. In doing that I believe I am in the discharge of my duty according to my own judgment, and no man has a right to criticize my motives in that respect.

As I say, it is the abuse that I have resisted. I have resisted bills which, upon the face of the reports made by the committee, did not appear to present a meritorious case. I have resisted bills where it occurred to me that the committee had made a mistake or had gone further than any reasonable rule would sanction. And, Mr. Chairman, I have the right to differ with the Committee on Invalid Pensions. If their report upon any case is to be taken as conclusive, if there is no appeal, if their report is res adjudicata, then the House has no duty to perform except to record the judgment of the Committee on Invalid Pensions. If their report is not conclusive, if a bill is subject to objection, criticism, and discussion, then the House has a duty to perform, and I, as a member of the House, have my duty to perform, and I trust will be accorded the right to perform it in my own way.

Now, when we talk about these abuses, when we resist claims for pension in which there appears to be no merit, some of our friends who disagree with us upon this subject immediately take the floor and talk about the war for the Union and the brave soldiers who saved the Union. Then they proceed to lecture us for entertaining the slightest suspicion that every man who wants a pension was not a brave and faithful soldier. I do not propose to disparage any man who participated in that war and did his duty. I honor brave men wherever they are found; the country honors them and it ought to do so. But camp-followers, dead-beats, deserters, dishonorably discharged soldiers, have no claim on the country. If the Union Army had not been made up of brave men, true and patriotic men, and had not been led by great soldiers, the Confederate army would have made no reputation. [Laughter and applause.] If the Confederate army had not been made up of brave soldiers and commanded by brave and skillful generals, the Union army would have made no reputation. [Renewed laughter and applause.]

Why, sir, some of the best men in this House owe their presence here to the prowess of the Confederates. I have had occasion sometimes to say, in a joking way, to my friend from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] and my friend from Ohio [Mr. BOOTHMAN], when they have been abusing the "rebels" of Texas and Arkansas and the Southern States, "Why, we did you a favor; you never would have been in Congress if we had not shot your legs off." [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, this system of private legislation has become one of the greatest abuses in the legislative history of this country. The public mind has become so strongly impressed with the evils which attend it that nearly every State in the Union has placed in its constitution a provision prohibiting the State Legislature from engaging in private legislation. Private legislation is the great evil, the greatest evil of Congress. Not merely pension legislation; because my war upon private legislation, as gentlemen well know, has not been limited to pension legislation at all. I have chosen to attack every species of private and local legislation before this body.

I say it is the greatest evil that attends the work of Congress, and it is the abuses that I attack, not merely in pension legislation, but in all other kinds of private legislation—legislation local in its character—if I considered it wrong; and it has made no difference to me whether it affected the North or the South, whether it was urged by a Democrat or a Republican, it met my opposition if my judgment did not sanction it.

Now, the abuses were the things attacked by Mr. Cleveland in his vetoes, and if, in undertaking to correct an abuse, he was beaten in the discharge of what he believed to be his duty, I say it was better to be beaten on principle than to succeed as a matter of expediency and at the sacrifice of principle. Why, Mr. Speaker, only within the last few months the whole country resounded with criticism and condemnation of the abuses which had crept into the Pension Office itself under the direction of the present Administration.

Democrats and Republicans alike condemned the abuses that were found existing in that office. Men who advocate pension legislation and men who oppose it alike denounced those abuses, and the result was a public exposition of the wrongs and outrages in that office and the removal of the Commissioner in charge of it by reason of the abuses which he had committed himself or which he had tolerated in those under him.

Does anybody here condemn the present Administration for turning out Commissioner Tanner because he had permitted the most flagrant irregularities under his eyes every day? Yet you come here and criticize me, and denounce Mr. Cleveland, and denounce other gentlemen who oppose abuses in this line, while you tolerate the present Administration for discharging those who were guilty of similar abuses in the Pension Office itself.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in relation to the remark made by my friend from Chicago [Mr. LAWLER], that everybody who is not able to work ought to have a pension from the Government, I have only to say that it is about where this thing is going to end. [Laughter.] The gentleman said that we had made an issue on this subject of pensions. I never knew, sir, that the Democratic party had made any issue on pensions. Why, more pensions, thousands more, were granted under Mr. Cleveland than under any preceding Administration.

I never knew that the Democratic party had made any issue with the Republican party against pensions. I know that the Democratic party, or members of that party, in this House have resisted the abuses which have crept into the Pension Office and into legislation upon this subject; and the tendency of those abuses, Mr. Chairman, is to the line drawn by my friend from Chicago, who says that he has the indorsement of 300,000 people of his policy to give pensions to everybody who can not work; that is the idea.

Now, I want to remark that my friend from Kansas [Mr. PETERS] has fallen into an egregious blunder in making the declaration that the days of oratory are over. [Laughter]. He ought not to have said it. I was satisfied that they were not over when I heard my friend from Missouri [Mr. STONE].

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. He made that remark before you had spoken.

Mr. KILGORE. I was satisfied that the days of oratory were not over when I heard my other friend from Missouri, the gentleman from Kansas City [Mr. TARNSEY]. I was convinced that the days of oratory had not passed when I heard my eloquent friend from Kansas [Mr. PETERS], who spoke in behalf of this bill. If I had not been already convinced, why, sir, when I heard my Republican friend from Bald Knob [laughter]—when I heard him and the gentleman from Chicago, then this question was conclusively settled that the days of oratory are not over, and my friend from Kansas must retract his statement.

A MEMBER. You forget the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. KILGORE. Yes; I should have referred to the eloquent speech of the gentleman from Indiana. But I can not name them all. After hearing all these speeches, I know that my friend from Kansas will withdraw his remark.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in relation to this bill itself, I think any gentleman in this House can consistently oppose it without being charged with resisting proper pensions to the soldiers of the late war who deserve pensions. I think we can consistently oppose any similar measure that is supported by no better claim than that presented in this report.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I think this House might go on in the orderly discharge of its business; and if there are cases that come within the proper definition of equity, if a man appears to have an equitable case—and it ought to be a pretty strong case, because the pension laws are very liberal and are very liberally construed—I believe it has been held by the Pension Office that a dishonorably discharged soldier may be entitled to a pension—

Mr. LANE. The gentleman is mistaken—

Mr. KILGORE. I understand it has been so held.

Mr. LANE. The gentleman is mistaken in saying the Pension Office is liberal in its construction; it is anything else but liberal.

Mr. KILGORE. I say the Pension Office has held that a dishonorably discharged soldier may be entitled to a pension.

Mr. MORROW. In other words, it has held that the pension does not depend on the discharge, but on the service and disability.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Assistant Secretary Bussey distinctly held that the fact of a soldier having been dishonorably discharged did not prevent him from obtaining a pension.

Mr. KILGORE. That is exactly as I understand it. I say that the laws are liberally construed by the Pension Office.

Mr. MORROW. The Assistant Secretary held that the pension depended upon the service and disability, and not the character of the discharge.

Mr. KILGORE. I understand that; but suppose a man served in the war for three years, rendering gallant service, and then deserted, would he be entitled to a pension? I say that the pension ought to depend upon the entire service—the service from the time of enlistment to the discharge—and if the soldier deserted he ought not to have a pension. But I am speaking of that matter only by way of illustration.

Mr. MORROW. I presume the gentleman understands that the decision to which he refers was simply the construction of a statute; but the attention of Congress has been called to the matter by the Secretary of the Interior, who recommends some legislation in that regard.

Mr. KILGORE. I have mentioned that matter not with the view of criticising the action of the office, but only for the purpose of emphasizing the fact that the pension laws are liberally construed in behalf of pensioners, and there is no objection to such liberality. It is the intention of Congress that they should be liberally construed, I take it; and therefore Congress itself ought to do very little in this line.

Mr. MORROW. Mr. Chairman, I think that we can say that on this side of the House there is no question about the effectiveness of the gentleman from Texas in his opposition to this class of legislation. Since I have been in Congress I have observed his conduct here, and I know that whenever there has appeared an opportunity to criticise any of these pension bills he has resisted them; and I think it was somewhat unfair on the part of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. STONE] to say that the resistance of the gentleman from Texas has been "feeble." It has been effective to the extent often of absolutely stopping the machinery of Congress in passing upon such measures.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this particular case is a somewhat remarkable one. It seems that when the President vetoed the bill passed in a former Congress it gave rise to a general discussion on the part of gentlemen on both sides of the House with respect to pension legislation; and I find in the RECORD page after page where gentlemen on both sides indulged in a full discussion of general pension legislation—

Mr. KILGORE. In this case?

Mr. MORROW. In this case. And after it was all through it appears the bill was referred to the committee without a single point having been discussed with respect to the merits of the bill, and it looks now as if we were to adjourn to-night without the merits of this particular case being discussed. I presume this is only another illustration of the view of the scientists about the peculiarity of all affairs traveling in circles, the earth itself coming around periodically within the range of aerial pyrotechnics; and so this case, traveling around, has again come within the range of the intellectual pyrotechnics of this House with respect to general legislation. I do not propose, myself, to indulge in anything of that kind. I am inclined to agree with my friend from Kansas in his view that oratory has come to an end, that it is not necessary for us to indulge in oratory in order to have this sort of legislation properly presented to the country.

Now, what is this case? The President in his message to Congress, July 9, 1886, says:

This claimant entered the service in August, 1861, and was discharged September 15, 1865. His hospital record shows that during this service he was treated for various temporary ailments, among which rheumatism is not included.

And that was the point on which the veto message was based: that this man's blindness could hardly have arisen from rheumatism, as he did not appear to have been treated for rheumatism while in the service.

We all have, I presume, confidence in this Committee on Invalid Pensions. According to the report of that committee this claimant, Frank Deming, enlisted August 14, 1861, and served until September 15, 1865, four years, one month, and one day, all of this time in Government service, with the exception of one thirty-day furlough.

The committee then goes on to state the nature of the claim:

Claim is based on total blindness caused by rheumatism. Hospital record shows that he was treated at three different times for intermittent fever, and once for bronchitis, but the last time he was sent to the hospital no record was recorded as to disease, but comrades testify that he suffered from rheumatism.

I am not sufficiently conversant with the character of diseases to say whether there is any pathological sequence between intermittent fever and bronchitis and rheumatism, but I think it is a fact which has been recognized by physicians that patients suffering from intermittent fever and bronchitis are liable as a consequence to attacks of rheumatism. I know where a party was traveling in a foreign country, when a child was attacked with the bronchitis and was taken to an English physician. He at once stated that the child was also subject to rheumatism, and gave it as a pathological sequence to throat disease.

The claimant alleges that he contracted the disease in August, 1864; that he never recovered from it, but that it became chronic and eventually resulted in total blindness. Claim was rejected by the Pension Department for want of sufficient evidence from date of discharge to the year 1884.

It presents a fair case. There is, in my judgment, no impropriety about the discussion of these cases in the House. The session was provided for that purpose. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE] and other gentlemen are perfectly right in asking for the reading of the report from the committee in each case, in asking for it to be read and read in full, and passing upon it such criticism as they may deem necessary, so that the House may pass intelligently in reference to all these matters.

I believe, from the report in this case, it will be perfectly proper to grant a pension to this man, who served faithfully, and who is now suffering from blindness caused by intermittent fever arising out of services in the Army, and for that reason I am in favor of the passage of the bill.

Mr. LANE. Mr. Chairman, the gentlemen who have addressed the committee so far are not members of the Committee on Invalid Pensions. For myself, as a Bourbon Democrat of the severest type, I wish to enter my protest against the statement made here, that the practice in the Pension Office is most liberal. I have been three years on this Committee on Invalid Pensions, and I have examined somewhere near 800 cases referred to me personally as a member of that committee; and in the whole of twenty-five years' practice of law, and nothing else, I am prepared to say to the House and the country that the practice of the Pension Office is not liberal at all. I have on my desk fifteen cases reported favorably that I assume to say if those cases were tried before any jury and judge in the country there would be a report in favor of the soldier. They are rejected by the Pension Office for the most trivial and nonsensical reasons; and it is evident to my mind that the men selected to make these examinations in the Pension Office are taken from a class of men who never had any experience in weighing evidence. I am satisfied of that fact from my examination of these cases.

I am willing to challenge the investigation of any court or jury to hear those cases and to pass upon them, and I say the decision of that court and jury would be adverse to the decision of the Pension Office.

A MEMBER. Cut it short.

Mr. LANE. No, nothing can be done this evening. I think there is $6,000 a year wronged out of some soldiers or their widows by the course of the House to-night. I do not say who is to blame, but some one is to blame, and whoever is to blame will take the responsibility of depriving forty soldiers or their widows of their just allowance.

For the man who wrote that veto I have the highest esteem and respect for his judgment and manhood, and in my presence I would not allow any man to challenge his honesty, his purity of purpose, his sense of duty, and willingness to discharge every obligation fairly resting upon him.

But I know, Mr. Chairman, that it is the fortune of man to make mistakes. We are but human, and it is human to err, and Grover Cleveland is no exception to that rule.

I have on the Calendar now a case with which I am familiar, the facts of which I understand, and a case which was vetoed by him. This is a case where there is the testimony of six witnesses, five of whom swear to a certain state of facts, that the soldier's death was due to his army service, and a single witness swears that his death was due, not to his army service, but to intoxication.

Mr. Cleveland, in the exercise of the high functions of his office, saw proper to believe the one man in preference to the testimony of the five. All of them seemed to be equally conversant with the facts of the case, all equally honest and equally intelligent, but he in vetoing the bill relied on the testimony of the one man and set aside the testimony of five. The case is now on the Calendar for consideration. When the case came back with the veto of the President I went myself and saw him in regard to it and told him that I had personal knowledge of the man, that he was from my own district, and that in my judgment he had made a mistake. I mention that, Mr. Chairman, to show that Mr. Cleveland sometimes made mistakes himself, although I think in the main he was right in the majority of cases which he declined to approve.

This particular case before us presents some points of interest. The committee acted knowingly upon it. They did not act blindly. There is not a committee of this House that has labored half as hard as this Committee on Invalid Pensions, and I think I may say with propriety that there is no committee of this House which has discharged its duty with any more zeal or care than the Committee on Invalid Pensions. They have studied these cases with extreme care. We have examined the testimony carefully in every instance. In this particular case we have the assurance of a member of this House who saw this soldier, who was there before the committee present with him, who knows his condition, who was himself an eye-witness of his condition, and therefore we did not act blindly, but with a full understanding of the case.

It is not a proper thing, after twenty-five years, in my judgment, when these men have been kept waiting, to go and poise the scales, as the President of the United States says, with the utmost precision about such cases. For myself I would rather, as a Democrat, make ten errors in the granting of pensions than to refuse an act of justice to a deserving and worthy soldier. I would rather make ninety-nine errors in favor of men—if there was an error; my leaning would be that way—and give them the benefit of the doubt, rather than to deny the right of a single man who is entitled to a pension.

Gentlemen talk about the pension rules being "liberal." Why, Mr. Chairman, I should like to know where the liberality comes in. You may go into a court of justice anywhere in the land, and there is not a court in this country but, upon the testimony of a single witness, you may hang a man, and yet these liberal laws will not permit you to go to the Pension Office and have your claim allowed on the testimony of a single witness.

You can go into the courts of the country and secure a verdict for $10,000 or any amount on the unimpeached testimony of a single witness, and that man the claimant himself; but the system in the Pension Office, going away back to the old law of two or three hundred years ago, away back of all the courts of our age and the laws of our land, entirely ignores the testimony of the claimant himself, and presumes that a man who fought for his country, a gallant soldier, no matter what his personal character or standing, if he went before the Pension Office in his own behalf would swear to a lie. I say it is a shame upon our system and practice in the Pension Office. They attach no weight to the testimony of the claimant at all, I do not care how credible he may be in all the walks of life, simply because he is the claimant in the case.

The courts allow him to come before them and swear to his claim, and it is allowed, if the testimony is not impeached. But in the Pension Office you say it will not do at all; you must have two corroborative witnesses or else the testimony of a commissioned officer. You must have other testimony than your own. Is that the liberality that gentlemen talk about? Where is the liberality in that system?

Now, Mr. Chairman, in regard to all of these cases reported here we have exercised the most minute care in examining the testimony. As a matter of fact we ought to report a great many more of them, but the committee has been overcareful. It is a shame that men are kept out of their just dues for years and years, until old age grows upon them, and their claims are allowed to sleep in the pigeon-holes and offices of the Government.

I am in favor of general laws, of course, when general laws are applicable. If it could be done, all of these cases should be relieved under a general law, and I hope before this session of Congress closes that out of the Committee on Pensions will be reported a general law relieving a great mass of these cases. But still the ingenuity of man can not devise a general law that will meet all of such cases.

Why, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE] says that you have in all the States constitutional prohibition against special legislation. And it is a fact that in all the States that have resorted to such a prohibition they resort to general legislation to meet special cases, and I insist that that is worse than the other practice. When you go to States where there is prohibition against special legislation what is done? Why, they pass a general law to meet a single case, and the result of it is that you encumber your statute-books with useless laws which are of no purpose whatever after the special case to which they are applied is out of the way.

There are therefore two sides to that question as to every other question. You can criticize this on both sides; and yet it is not well to arrive at a judgment until you have examined the other side of the case. It must be apparent to every member that it is utterly impossible for this House to give attention to each one of these cases. They must rely upon the committee. The committee make their report under oath to this House, and they state the facts on which they base their reports. That report is prima facie evidence of the truth of the claim and should be so held until it is impeached. If that position is not correct and you have no confidence in your committees you should wipe out the committees and bring all the bills here.

The committee, in the exercise of its duties, submits a report of the facts and its conclusions upon them, and I think that report is prima facie true until something is brought here rather than the mere ipse dixit of some member without proof to sustain the allegation that the report is erroneous. The case at bar is reported by the committee, and I think the report is specific and should be satisfactory. It sets out the full case. It charges that the man is blind and that his blindness is due to his army service. What more do you want?

I think the claim ought to be allowed.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to this bill reported by the committee, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words "subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws" and insert in lieu thereof "at the rate of $40 per month."

The amendment was adopted.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

HENRY BLOOMFIELD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5617) granting a pension to Henry Bloomfield.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to put the name of Henry Bloomfield, late of Company G, Ninety-second New York Infantry, on the pension-roll, subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws:

The report (by Mr. BELKNAP) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5617) granting a pension to Henry Bloomfield, submit the following report:

Claimant enlisted December 29, 1863, was discharged April 6, 1865, as a private, Company G, Ninety-second New York Infantry. Claim for pension was rejected December 5, 1883, for want of testimony of a commissioned officer or comrades that the wound was received while in line of duty. Basis of claim is gunshot wound, left foot, by accidental discharge of his gun July 5, 1864. There is no dispute as to this point; it is clearly shown by the records of the War Department of his service; the hospital and medical reports are full and plain, but it is claimed that the wound was received by the accidental discharge of his gun while cleaning it after returning from the picket line, when it was wet by rain during the night.

Your committee therefore, believing that the claimant was on duty at the time and it being clearly shown that his record of service as a soldier was good, would respectfully recommend that he be placed on the pension-rolls, subject to the rules and regulations governing the same.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I would like to know, Mr. Chairman, whether under the rules the sitting of the House is limited to 10 o'clock?

The CHAIRMAN. The House will adjourn at half-past ten, according to the rule.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a word in reference to this bill. Mr. Bloomfield, the beneficiary of this bill, applied for a pension on the ground that he had been injured by a gunshot wound by which his left big toe was injured. The toe was not lost, but injured by the shot. The medical board which examined him found, and so reported, that the injury resulting from this wound was slight. I examined the papers at the Pension Office to-day. The question before the Pension Department, the question at issue, and which was determined by the officials in that Department, was as to how this wound was inflicted, the circumstances under which it was done, and whether it was received while the soldier was in the discharge of his duty and in the line of his duty.

The claimant in his original application, made under oath, stated that the wound was received in battle—the battle of Petersburg. That is what he swore to when he filed his application in June, 1879. He was not able to furnish any proof by anybody as to when or how or where the wound was received. He swore that his lieutenant-colonel was present when the wound was received, but the colonel was dead. Afterwards, on May 4, 1881, two years after this original application under oath was filed, he filed another affidavit, in which he stated that the gunshot wound was not received in battle, but, as stated in the report of the committee just read by the Clerk, that it was received while cleaning his gun after having been relieved from picket duty. The two statements are contradictory. There is but one single witness whose testimony is offered in the case, that of Samuel Bloomfield, presumably a relative.

I could not discover from the somewhat brief examination I was obliged to make of the papers what the kinship was, if any existed at all. That witness, Samuel Bloomfield, simply testified that he "understood" that the claimant's wound was occasioned by an accidental discharge of his gun. "That his understanding was." How he was made to understand it, when or from whom he learned it, is not stated. Now, Mr. Chairman, that is the whole case as it appears in the papers on file in the Pension Department. The case as presented here depends entirely on the testimony of the claimant himself.

Mr. BELKNAP. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. Certainly.

Mr. BELKNAP. Did you examine the record evidence?

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I examined the report of the medical board.

Mr. BELKNAP. Did you not find that he was in the hospital for a gunshot wound, and that he was discharged from the service on account of that wound?

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I found that there was a report from the Adjutant-General or some officer of the War Department who furnishes those reports—

Mr. BELKNAP. From the Surgeon-General.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. The Surgeon-General, I meant to say, and that this man had been in the hospital for a gunshot wound, but that was all. That he was wounded I have no sort of doubt.

Mr. BELKNAP. Did not that record state, and did it not do so plainly, that he was discharged from the service on account of this wound?

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I do not remember as to that. I can not say exactly what was stated in that report. I can not see that it is material.

Mr. BELKNAP. But did you look to see if such was the fact?

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I can not now recollect whether I did or not. If I did so, I do not regard it as a material fact and I do not now say it is.

Mr. BELKNAP. What, then, would you regard as a material fact in this case?

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. The question to be determined in order to entitle this claimant to a pension is, first, to ascertain whether there was disability at all and the nature of the disability, and, then, to determine whether that disability was incurred in the military service and in the line of duty.

Mr. BELKNAP. Did you not discover in the papers the report of the special examiner, who examined that case, hunted up the evidence, and made up the claim in that case? Did it not show that it was regarded as a very meritorious one, fully describing the soldier's disabilities and that it was rejected simply on account of the fact that the wound was not received in line of duty; that the man was not on duty, but was cleaning his gun, and that the case was rejected simply because of the fact that the claimant was not in the line of duty?

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. My remembrance of the report of the board of medical examiners, as I stated, is that there was evidence of the wound to this toe, that there was a cicatrix upon the toe, and that there was some adhesion to the bone of the toe; but that the wound itself was slight and the injury was slight.

Mr. BELKNAP. I do not understand that such is the evidence. Now, I know this man personally and have known him for the last ten, twelve, or fifteen years.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I did not yield for a statement.

Mr. BELKNAP. I know that he walks with a crutch and that he is unable to walk without a crutch.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri declines to yield.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. Now, Mr. Chairman, I of course am passing upon this question on the evidence as delivered under oath and on file in the Pension Office, and not upon what may be within the personal knowledge of the honorable gentleman who interrupted me, and who, I believe, has not volunteered to make a statement in the way of evidence. Now, it has occurred to me as being strange and unaccountable that if a man was actually wounded in the line of duty in battle nobody knew it, not even himself.

Mr. MORROW. Will the gentleman from Missouri allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. Certainly.

Mr. MORROW. As I understand the evidence, it is that this man received this wound in battle and in line of duty.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. There is no evidence of that except the statement of the soldier himself.

Mr. MORROW. And that is what you were looking for. Now, if that evidence was on file would not he receive a pension from the Pension Bureau, and therefore have had no occasion to come and ask for this relief?

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I know nothing about that.

Mr. MORROW. And is not that the present condition of the case; that, because it does not appear that he received this wound in battle and in line of duty, he was not given a pension by the Bureau?

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. Now, Mr. Chairman, I am not prepared to say what the position of the Pension Office would have been if certain conditions had existed and certain facts had been made to appear.

My statement is this, and I want it to be distinctly understood, that the only evidence that I could find in the case touching the incurrence of this alleged disability was the testimony of the claimant himself, supported by the statement of Samuel Bloomfield that he had "understood" that this man had been accidentally shot while cleaning his gun. But the soldier himself, in his original statement made under oath, said that he had received the wound in action in the battle of Petersburg. Two years afterward he filed a supplementary affidavit in which he stated that the wound was not received in battle, but was accidental; that he had been recently relieved from picket duty, and while cleaning his gun it was accidentally discharged, resulting in this injury. Now, that is the whole testimony in the case, except such inferences as may be drawn from the report of the medical board or the record in the War Department, that he was in hospital for a wound, and it is upon those inferences that my friend [Mr. BELKNAP], who, I suppose, made this report—did the gentleman make the report?

Mr. BELKNAP. I made that report, and I made it upon the evidence found on file with the claim; and if the gentleman searched the records as he claims to have done, he must have found that it is plainly and clearly shown that the claimant was confined in the hospital and treated for a gunshot wound in the foot and was discharged from the service on account of the same.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. There ought to be no dispute about the facts. Let me ask my friend whether this statement is correct according to his memory: That the soldier himself testified in his first application that the wound was received in action, and afterwards, in his later affidavit, stated that it was an accidental injury, not received in battle. Am I correct so far?

Mr. BELKNAP. I am not prepared to dispute the technical point brought up here—

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I am simply asking for the evidence.

Mr. BELKNAP. But I assure the gentleman that there was no time during the siege of Petersburg when the troops were not in action. It was one continual battle day and night.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I will ask my friend one question further: Whether there is any testimony of any witness except Samuel Bloomfield corroborating the testimony of the claimant himself and whether that testimony of Samuel Bloomfield is not purely hearsay?

Mr. GROUT. Will the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. STONE] allow me to ask a question?

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. Certainly.

Mr. GROUT. Have you here the exact language used by the claimant in his original application, so that you are able to state positively whether he said he received this wound "in action" or during the fight at Petersburg?

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I have not a copy of the affidavit here.

Mr. GROUT. The exact language might be very important, because that siege or battle was an affair running through many days, as all soldiers who were connected with it will remember.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. While I have not copied either of the affidavits in the case, I undertake to say that the first affidavit does distinctly state that the wound was received in action, in the battle of Petersburg, and uses that language, "in action."

Mr. GROUT. Uses the language "in action?"

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. Yes, "in action." I wish that understood, and I will stand by it. I undertake to say, also, that the second affidavit is as I have stated.

Mr. GROUT. The language could not have been "during the action?"

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. "In action." Then, in the second affidavit, when his attention is called to it, he specially corrects that statement.

Mr. SMYSER. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. Certainly.

Mr. SMYSER. If the record discloses the fact that the man was treated for this wound and the soldier himself, in his first declaration, does allege that he received it at one place, but afterwards states that he received it at another, would you not say that he had simply made a mistake?

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. There is no question that it was a mistake.

Mr. SMYSER. Would you be prepared to go further, or do you now mean to impute perjury to the claimant simply because there is a discrepancy in his statements?

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I mean to say that this is a claim against the Government of the United States, prosecuted under the laws of the United States, and that there ought to be some sort of conformity to the requirements of the law; and I go further and say that it is an unusual and dangerous practice to allow a claim upon the unsupported testimony of the claimant himself, and especially so when he has made contradictory statements as to the main facts.

Mr. SMYSER. But do you not base your objection largely upon the ground that the soldier has made contradictory statements as to how the wound was incurred?

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. Yes, sir; and as to when it was incurred. Mr. SMYSER. Now, when you find the Government itself furnishing record evidence of the injury, are you not then prepared to say that the soldier simply made a mistake in one or other of his declarations, as to the time and place when he received the injury?

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I am prepared to say that he certainly made a mistake.

Mr. SMYSER. An innocent mistake.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. No doubt he made a mistake. There can be no doubt about that.

Mr. HILL. If the gentleman will permit me I will ask him a question.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. Certainly, sir.

Mr. HILL. Would it make any difference as to the real merits of the case whether this wound was received in action, as stated in the first affidavit, or accidentally by the discharge of the soldier's gun, as stated in the second affidavit?

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. Oh, I think not. I mean to say that it makes no difference in my judgment whether he was wounded in battle or accidentally wounded while in the discharge of his duty and in the line of duty. I think there would be no difference in that respect.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. As I understand, my friend from Missouri has looked at the report of the medical board that examined this claimant.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. Yes, sir.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. What disability rating did that board give him?

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. Well, I can not recall it, if there was any.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. There was some disability rating, was there not?

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. Very likely. I will say to my friend that I devoted three or four hours to-day—the only time I have had to give to this matter during the week—to the investigation of a number of these cases. But as to details of that character, though possibly I observed them, I did not make any minute, and hence I can not answer accurately the question of my friend.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. Is not this the situation of the claim, that no dispute as to the fact of the man having been wounded arises?

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I do not dispute it.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. And when the claimant himself swears that he received the wound in action and afterward swears that the wound was received while he was cleaning his gun after he had returned from picket duty, does not this circumstance show that the man intended to be honest about the matter, to state the fact as to the occurrence? He was not obliged to state afterward (was he) that the wound was received out of action?

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I will ask the gentleman a question, Yankee fashion. If he were the Commissioner of Pensions and if in the discharge of his duty under the law an applicant should come before him with nothing but his own unsupported testimony and state that he had received a wound in battle—in the fierce onslaught of battle—and if two years afterward he should come and make another affidavit saying that he had received the wound at an entirely different place and under entirely different circumstances, by reason of an accident—and that is the whole affirmative testimony—would the gentleman grant the pension?

Mr. BOOTHMAN. I will say this in answer to the gentleman's question: If I were the Commissioner of Pensions, I would grant pensions upon sufficient evidence as recognized by the rules of law.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I have stated a particular case.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. I will meet the case. In this instance there is but one witness to the incurrence or origin of the wound.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. And that is the claimant.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. The Pension Office, under such circumstances, can not grant a pension, and for that very reason the man comes to Congress for relief.

Now, if I were Commissioner of Pensions and desired to test the truthfulness of this witness, I would let this circumstance bear some weight with me: the fact that there was a continuous action in front of Petersburg for many weeks or months, that this man may have been on picket duty when he was in fact in actual action, and upon his immediate return, in cleaning his gun, he might have received the injury as soldiers frequently did to my own personal knowledge; and the differences in the statements of the witnesses as to time and place are so slight that they would not, in my judgment, bear against the man's truthfulness. The mere fact that this man, being himself the only witness to the incurrence of the disability, states at one time the circumstances in one way and at another time in another way, shows to my mind that he did not intend to deceive, because there was no necessity resting upon him, if he intended to deceive, to make the second statement differ from the first as to the circumstances under which the wound was received.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Is it not probable, from the gentleman's own knowledge of the way things were done, that if this man had received the wound in action his company commander would have reported him wounded at the time, and there would then have been corroborative evidence? He might not have been familiar with that rule; but when he made his statement under oath that he had been wounded in action the absence of his name from the company report would be contradictory of his statement; and therefore if he were intending to deceive he might afterward want to fix up the matter so as to make the wound appear as having been received under circumstances which would not require, as he would think, that it should appear in the official report. If he had been wounded, even by accident, when he was on duty or with his company, that would have been returned by the proper officer of the company in accounting for the absence of the soldier, if the record was kept in that regiment, as I suppose it was.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. Now, my friend from Kentucky is too old and too good a soldier not to know that frequently men were injured in the service, and injured in action, when the company commander was not near.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Undoubtedly.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. A case of this kind might occur when the company commander was not present.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Undoubtedly. But in all well disciplined companies or regiments every soldier must be accounted for. There is a morning report of the orderly sergeant to the sergeant-major of the regiment, which accounts for every soldier on the roll; the soldier must be present for duty, or detailed, or absent sick, or in some way accounted for. Now, this person would be accounted for on that roll if he had been wounded.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. Let me put a question to the gentleman.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I want to ask my friend a question. I think I have yielded far enough. Before this debate is closed I want to ask one question of my friend from Ohio [Mr. BOOTHMAN]. I believe he was wounded in battle?

Mr. BOOTHMAN. Yes; I think I have a lively recollection of that.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I would like to know whether my friend from Ohio, in applying for a pension, would be able to state whether he was shot by the enemy or shot by himself.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. Yes, I think I would.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. Well, does it not occur to you that this man ought to have been able to state in the first place whether he was shot in battle, as he says he was (leaving the inference to be drawn that it was a wound received from the enemy), or whether he inflicted the wound himself?

Mr. BOOTHMAN. I will answer that question by asking another. Does not my friend know that in many of these cases the soldier is not able to draught his own papers; and I do not understand that the papers in this case were draughted by the claimant. Now, when the soldier goes to a claim agent to have his papers draughted the attorney in hundreds of instances places in the blank language which the soldier himself would not put there in describing the injury; in other words, the attorney, having the usual idea that every wound is received in action, puts it down so.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I do not know about that, Mr. Chairman, but I know this (of course gentlemen can do as they please)—I know that this claim was rejected on account of this insufficient testimony, after a full investigation by the Pension Department; and it seems to me to be carrying this policy of private legislation to a great extreme when we allow a measure of this sort to be passed through here upon testimony of this character.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall this bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation?

The question being put, it was decided in the affirmative.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. MORROW having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan, reported that the Committee of the Whole House, having had under consideration pension business on the Private Calendar, had directed him to report back the bill (H. R. 5620) granting a pension to Frank Deming, Company F, Ninth Michigan Infantry, with an amendment, and the bill (H. R. 5617) granting a pension to Henry Bloomfield without amendment.

FRANK DEMING.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill (H. R. 5620) granting a pension to Frank Deming, Company F, Ninth Michigan Infantry, has been reported back with an amendment, which will be read.

The Clerk read, as follows:

Strike out "subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws" and insert "at the rate of $40 per month."

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I move that the House adjourn.

A MEMBER. Let us pass these bills.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. In view of the debate we have had this evening, we had better postpone action until after we have seen that debate in the RECORD.

Mr. PERKINS. The country will understand they have not permitted a single pension bill to pass to-night. It will be understood that gentlemen have exhausted this entire evening in debate.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. Let the country understand that they have dropped out forty pension cases which should have been passed to-night.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I rise to a point of order. The rhetorical and excited statements of my friends on the other side are entirely out of order. The motion to adjourn is not debatable.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. The country will understand who it is has prevented to-night the passage of any pension business.

Then (at 10 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Speaker pro tempore declared the House adjourned.

MEMORIALS AND RESOLUTIONS OF STATE LEGISLATURES.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, the following memorial was delivered to the Speaker and referred as follows:

By Mr. ANDERSON, of Mississippi: A memorial of the Legislature of Mississippi, recommending the passage of a law by Congress compelling railroads engaged in interstate commerce to equip their cars with uniform safety automatic couplers and power automatic brakes—to the Committee on Commerce.

RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, the following resolution was delivered to the Speaker and referred as follows:

By Mr. MCCORD:

Resolved, That the Committee on Printing be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to consider a proposition to furnish to the House of Representatives a consolidated alphabetical index of the reports of committees of the House and Senate from the beginning of the First Congress, 1793, to the close of the Fiftieth Congress, 1889, being the reports for one hundred years, the committee to report by bill or otherwise;

to the Committee on Printing.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, the following reports were filed, and, with accompanying bills, ordered to be printed, and referred as follows:

Mr. TAYLOR, of Tennessee, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported favorably the bill (S. 609) granting a pension to Mrs. Catherine Tittle, widow of Ephraim Tittle—to the Committee of the Whole House.

He also, from the same committee, reported with amendment the bill (H. R. 2989) granting a pension to Mrs. Martha E. Jones—to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. WILSON, of Kentucky, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported favorably the bill (H. R. 4028) granting a pension to Agnes Vetter—to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. WILLCOX, from the Committee on Claims, reported favorably the bill (H. R. 4473) for the relief of the National New Haven Bank of the State of Connecticut—to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. FLICK, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported favorably the following bills; which were severally referred to the Committee of the Whole House:

- A bill (H. R. 4808) granting a pension to Roxanna Finch;
- A bill (H. R. 1456) granting a pension to Ira E. Smith;
- A bill (H. R. 1670) granting a pension to Sarah Hamilton;
- A bill (H. R. 4127) granting a pension to Rhoda Williams;
- A bill (H. R. 4126) granting a pension to H. G. Church;
- A bill (H. R. 4038) granting a pension to James Fitzgerald;
- A bill (H. R. 6296) granting a pension to Samantha Williams;
- A bill (H. R. 1672) granting a pension to Margaret P. Minter;
- A bill (H. R. 7078) granting a pension to Mary B. Stidger;
- A bill (H. R. 4258) increasing the pension of Francis Gilman;
- A bill (S. 907) to restore the name of Mrs. Mary L. Bradford to the pension-roll;
- A bill (S. 2137) granting a pension to David C. Bullard;

- A bill (S. 177) granting a pension to Mary McCowan;
- A bill (S. 650) granting a pension to William H. Cummings;
- A bill (S. 2290) granting a pension to Olin Hanson;
- A bill (S. 2283) to increase the pension of W. H. Bailey, of Braintree, Mass.; and
- A bill (S. 2347) granting an increase of pension to George L. Warren.

Mr. FLICK also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported with amendment the following bills; which were severally referred to the Committee of the Whole House:

- A bill (H. R. 4152) granting an increase of pension to Albert Mabb;
- A bill (H. R. 4359) granting a pension to Elizabeth Ogden; and
- A bill (S. 1221) granting a pension to Helen Plunkett.

Mr. LAWS, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported favorably the following bills; which were severally referred to the Committee of the Whole House:

- A bill (H. R. 6906) granting a pension to John H. McLaughlin; and
- A bill (H. R. 5299) for the relief of Chloe Cooper.

Mr. BELKNAP, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported favorably the following bills; which were severally referred to the Committee of the Whole House:

- A bill (H. R. 1400) for the relief of Patrick Culhan; and
- A bill (S. 1022) granting a pension to the widow of the late Commander Samuel H. Baker, United States Navy.

Mr. WILSON, of Washington, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported favorably the bill (H. R. 5964) granting the Spokane Falls and Northern Railway Company the right of way through the Colville Indian reservation—to the House Calendar.

Mr. PICKLER, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported favorably the bill (S. 368) to establish two additional land districts in the State of Nebraska—to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia, from the Committee on Commerce, reported favorably the bill (H. R. 7993) to amend section 4 of "An act to authorize the county of Laurens, in the State of Georgia, to construct a bridge across the Oconee River, at or near Dublin, in said county and State"—to the House Calendar.

Mr. ROBERTSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported with amendment the bill (H. R. 3857) to provide for the disposal of a portion of the United States military reservation at Baton Rouge, La.—to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. THOMAS, from the Committee on War Claims, reported favorably the bill (H. R. 3107) for the relief of Col. James Lindsey—to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. RAY, from the Committee on Claims, reported favorably the bill (S. 1381) for the relief of Jacob I. Cohen and J. Randolph Mordecai—to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BROWNE, of Virginia, from the Committee on Commerce, reported with amendment the bill (H. R. 3871) for the establishment of a steam fog-signal at Ludington light-station, Michigan—to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. OSBORNE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported favorably the bill (S. 117) for the relief of Edward H. Lieb—to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BOOTHMAN, from the Committee on Claims, reported favorably the bill (S. 888) for the relief of George K. Otis or his legal representatives—to the Committee of the Whole House.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills and joint resolutions of the following titles were delivered to the Speaker, severally read twice, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BAKER: A bill (H. R. 8193) to amend section 12 of the act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1857—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. NORTON: A bill (H. R. 8194) to amend section 1 of "An act granting pensions to the soldiers and sailors of the Mexican war"—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HEARD: A bill (H. R. 8195) to provide for the coinage of both gold and silver and for the issuance of coin certificates to circulate as money, and to provide for the substitution of such certificates for the silver and gold certificates now outstanding—to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

By Mr. PAYSON: A bill (H. R. 8196) for the erection of a public building at Kankakee, Ill.—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. RUSK: A bill (H. R. 8197) to define the route of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky: A bill (H. R. 8198) for the erection of a public building at Georgetown, Ky.—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. PIERCE: A bill (H. R. 8199) to authorize a survey of that portion of the Mississippi River west and north of Red Fork Lake, in Kentucky and Tennessee—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. PARRETT: A bill (H. R. 8200) to erect a public building at Mount Vernon, Ind.—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. CUTCHEON: A bill (H. R. 8201) to amend the Articles of War relative to the punishment on conviction by courts-martial—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8202) to provide for the examination of certain officers of the Army and to regulate promotion of officers therein—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. DIBBLE: A bill (H. R. 8203) authorizing the construction of a new steam-tender for service in the sixth light-house district—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. PAYNTER: A bill (H. R. 8204) to direct the Secretary of War to appoint a commission to ascertain and report the facts concerning the destruction of property at Augusta, Ky., on September 27, 1862—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. BAKER: A bill (H. R. 8205) to amend section 22 of the act to regulate commerce, as approved March 2, 1889—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. CUTCHEON: A bill (H. R. 8235) to prevent desertions from the Army, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. THOMAS: A bill (H. R. 8236) to amend chapter 331, approved July 20, 1874, entitled "An act making additions to the fifteenth section of the act approved July 2, 1864, entitled 'An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes,'" approved July 1, 1862—to the Committee on the Pacific Railroads.

By Mr. SPINOLA: A joint resolution (H. Res. 124) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to take possession of part of Governor's Island and for the establishment of an immigration depot—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills of the following titles were delivered to the Clerk and referred as follows:

By Mr. ABBOTT (by request): A bill (H. R. 8206) for the relief of Raby Alderson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BINGHAM: A bill (H. R. 8207) for the relief of the legal representatives of Charles W. Adams, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky: A bill (H. R. 8208) for the relief of H. P. Montgomery and Patty W. Garnett, executor and executrix of Gean Garnett, deceased—to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8209) for the relief of Thomas Kephart—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CULBERTSON, of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. R. 8210) granting an increase of pension to Maria L. Caraher—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DARLINGTON: A bill (H. R. 8211) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Rebecca E. Simon—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. DIBBLE: A bill (H. R. 8212) granting a pension to John Preacher—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. EVANS: A bill (H. R. 8213) for the relief of James R. Edwards, of Chattanooga, Tenn.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. FLOOD: A bill (H. R. 8214) for the relief of Gamahil Benjamin—to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8215) granting a pension to Elsie Dykeman, mother of James and Nathan Dykeman—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8216) granting a pension to John Mann—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8217) granting a pension to Mary E. Smith, widow of George W. Smith—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GEST: A bill (H. R. 8218) to grant a pension to Margaret E. Hall—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GROUT: A bill (H. R. 8219) granting a pension to Emeline M. Butler—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8220) granting a pension to Marion M. Smith—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HAYES: A bill (H. R. 8221) granting a pension to William White—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HEARD: A bill (H. R. 8222) granting a pension to Sarah C. Rutledge—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HOOKER: A bill (H. R. 8223) for relief of A. N. Kimball and sureties on his official bond as receiver of public moneys—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. KERR, of Iowa: A bill (H. R. 8224) granting a pension to Charles Avery—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KERR, of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. R. 8225) granting a pension to Mary Jane Blair—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LAWLER: A bill (H. R. 8226) granting a pension to James H. Fleming—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MCCOMAS: A bill (H. R. 8227) granting a pension to Ann Downey—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8228) granting a pension to Eliza Wentz—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MOREY: A bill (H. R. 8229) granting a certificate of honorable service to George W. Sollers—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MORRILL (by request): A bill (H. R. 8230) to provide for the payment of $5,000 to Mrs. Celia C. Short—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. RUSSELL: A bill (H. R. 8231) granting a pension to Harriet P. Farnsworth—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. STONE, of Kentucky: A bill (H. R. 8232) for the relief of Robert N. Nation—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. TAYLOR, of Tennessee: A bill (H. R. 8233) granting a pension to Catherine Vaughn—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. TRACEY: A bill (H. R. 8234) granting a pension to Catherine S. Lawrence—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. R. 8237) for the relief of Jared W. Dillman, late of the United States Navy—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8238) for the relief of William Wheeler Hubbell—to the Committee on Claims.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII the following changes of reference were made:

A bill (H. R. 6967) for the relief of sailors and marines in the United States Naval Homes—Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

A bill (H. R. 7008) granting a pension to Thomas Shannon—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 647) granting a pension to Catherine Simmonds—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 7523) granting a pension to Calvin Gunn—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 4819) granting increase of pension to Gottfried Gauss—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 7073) to investigate into and remunerate Samuel S. Stevenson, a physician of the city of Detroit, county of Wayne and State of Michigan, for a certain discovery and cure for sporadic pneumonia and "la grippe" pneumonia—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to Committee on Claims.

A bill (H. R. 4165) for the relief of Jesse H. Strickland—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Petition to accompany the bill (H. R. 6780) to refund license fees to officers of steam-vessels—Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries discharged, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were delivered to the Clerk and referred as follows:

By Mr. ANDERSON, of Mississippi: Petition of William Foy, administrator of Fiestor Foy, deceased, praying for reference of his claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. BOOTHMAN: Petition of ex-Union soldiers, in favor of a service pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BULLOCK: Resolutions of town council of Waldo, Fla., asking an appropriation for improvement of the entrance to Cumberland Sound—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, resolutions of town council of Gainesville, Fla., asking an appropriation for improvement of the entrance to Cumberland Sound—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. BURTON: Petition of Alfred A. Jerome, for an increase of pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CANNON: Petition of William Hester, Theodore Reynolds, and others, of Vermillion Grove, Vermillion County, Illinois, asking Congress to reject recommendations of the Senate Naval Committee proposing large expenditures for the Navy and coast defenses—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. COGSWELL: Resolutions of the Vessel-Owners and Captains' National Association, for appropriations for a deep harbor at Galveston, Tex.—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. CONGER: Petition of Redfield Post, No. 26, Grand Army of the Republic, at Perry, Iowa, in favor of a service-pension bill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of Samuel Irwin Post, No. 444, Grand Army of the Republic, at New Virginia, Iowa, in favor of a service-pension bill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of Dorr Post, No. 62, Grand Army of the Republic, at Altoona, Iowa, in favor of a service-pension bill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DE LANO: Petition of J. D. O'Brian Post, No. 65, Grand Army of the Republic, of Oswego, N. Y., praying for the passage of a service-pension act—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DORSEY: Petition of members of the Farmers' Alliance, of the State of Nebraska, for the defeat of the Windom bill—to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

Also, petition of H. A. Hayward, L. Oswald, and 14 others, citizens of the State of Nebraska, for the defeat of the Windom bill—to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

Also, petition of Atlanta Post, No. 275, Grand Army of the Republic, of Platte Center, Nebr., in reference to increased pensions—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DUNNELL: Petition of John Ludwig and 88 others, citizens of Minnesota, asking that a pension be granted to E. A. Goodfellow—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition asking that the Superintendent of Census be authorized to collect data relative to the electrical industry—to the Select Committee on the Eleventh Census.

By Mr. FARQUHAR: Petition of John S. Patric, for an extension of patent—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. FITHIAN: Resolutions of Gila Lodge, No. 1350, F. M. B. A., Jasper County, Illinois, against the ship subsidy bill, and of same lodge, against increasing circulation of national banks—to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. GEST: Petition and proof upon the pension claim of Martha J. Wells—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition and proof upon the pension claim of Margaret E. Hall—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GIFFORD: Memorial by the Legislature of South Dakota, asking that an appropriation be made to aid in the selection of indemnity school lands in South Dakota—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. GROUT: Petition of Marion M. Smith, of Reading, Vt., for a widow's pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, of Emeline M. Butler, for a widow's pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HAUGEN: Petition of citizens of Wisconsin, asking for the passage of an appropriation bill to provide for the completion of the Sault Ste. Marie Canal and improvements of Hay Lake Channel—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa: Resolutions of Buford Post, No. 300, Grand Army of the Republic, at Ogden, Boone County, Iowa, urging the passage of the service pension bill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MAISH: Petition of Ida F. Bossler, praying that her name be placed on the pension-roll—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MOREY: Petition of A. A. Fulton and others, of Xenia, Ohio, asking that the name of Mollie V. Johnson be placed on the pension-roll—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of Malinda Ellis, of Xenia, Ohio, for a pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MORRILL: Petition of old soldiers, of Garnett, Kans., in favor of a service pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania: Petition of Samuel M. Thatcher, for restoration to the pension-roll and increase of his pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, memorial of the ex-letter-carriers of Philadelphia, asking that the civil-service law may be so amended as to give five years for application for reinstatement instead of one year, the present period—to the Select Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

By Mr. RUSSELL: Petition of Harriett P. Farnsworth, asking for a pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SENEY: Petition of Frank Jones and others, citizens of Upper Sandusky, Ohio, asking for a tax on cigars, and for protection by trade-marks—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. STRUBLE: Resolutions of Newell Post, No. 416, Grand Army of the Republic, of Newell; of E. O. C. Ord Post, No. 219, Grand Army of the Republic, of Sutherland; of Kenyon Post, No. 339, Grand Army of the Republic, of Sanford, and Colonel Goodrich Post, No. 117, Grand Army of the Republic, of Odebolt, all of Department of Iowa, urging the passage of the service-pension bill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, March 15, 1890.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D.D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

GOVERNMENT OWNERSHIP OF PACIFIC RAILROAD SECURITIES.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, by instruction of the Committee on Pacific Railroads, I submit the following resolution and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby requested to inform the House of Representatives, at as early a date as practicable, whether the Government of the United States is the owner or holder of any of the first-mortgage securities of any of the Pacific railroad companies which were aided by the Government; and, if so, the amount of such securities held or owned by the Government, when, and in what manner, and by what authority the same were acquired.

There being no objection, the resolution was considered, and agreed to.

FLOODS IN THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, requested to inform the House if sufficient money and facilities are at the command of the officials in charge to guard the levees and other works and the plant of the Government, so far as the same may be practicable, from destruction or injury by the present flood in the Mississippi River; and, if not, to report to the House at the earliest possible moment what may be necessary. He is requested also to report if there is reason to apprehend unusual danger to human life, and what steamers can be used by the Department or by the Mississippi River Commission to rescue those in peril.

There being no objection, the resolution was considered, and agreed to.

IMPROVEMENT OF THE TENNESSEE RIVER.

Mr. HOUK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have a memorial from the Chamber of Commerce of Knoxville and a river improvement convention, composed of delegates from the States of Tennessee, Virginia, Alabama, Georgia, North Carolina, and Kentucky, printed in the RECORD. The memorial is in behalf of the improvement of the Tennessee River and its tributaries.

There being no objection, the memorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, and referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

It is as follows:

Memorial to the Congress of the United States in behalf of the improvement of the Tennessee River and its tributaries.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the undersigned, representing large portions of the States of Tennessee, Virginia, Alabama, Georgia, North Carolina, and Kentucky, by appointment of a general convention held at Knoxville, Tenn., on January 25, 1889, beg leave to submit to your consideration the following resolutions unanimously passed by said convention:

RESOLUTIONS OF THE RIVER CONVENTION.

"Whereas the Tennessee River, with the tributaries, is third in size and national importance, and drains an area nearly as large as the New England States, of the richest undeveloped part of the globe, and has received less in proportion to its claims than any other river now recognized in the Government plan for the improvement of the rivers and harbors; and the small amount asked can, therefore, and ought to be at once expended:

Therefore, we, the representatives of the people who reside in that portion of the United States drained by the Tennessee River and its tributaries, in convention assembled at Knoxville this day, respectfully petition the American Congress:

"1. That all navigable rivers be made national highways free from any toll.
"2. That all obstructions to the navigation of the Tennessee River and its tributaries, as high as the same can be improved by slack-water navigation, be removed therefrom.

"3. That said river, with its tributaries, be improved so as to give us at least 4 feet of water all the year round from its mouth to Chattanooga; at least 3 feet of water all the year round from Chattanooga to Knoxville, and by slack-water navigation to the headwaters of all its tributaries.

"4. That no bridge be allowed to cross said river, or its tributaries, so as to interfere with the free use of the same as hereinbefore set forth.

"5. Resolved, That a committee, consisting of eleven at large and one from each county and city represented, be appointed to prepare and submit to Congress, now in session, a memorial in our name, setting forth the claims of our river and its tributaries to their consideration, and petitioning as hereinbefore set forth.

"Resolved, That our Representatives and Senators be requested to aid us and our memorialists to obtain what we ask.

"Resolved, That the Legislatures of Kentucky, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, and Tennessee be requested to take action favoring the improvement of our rivers."

And now, in obedience to said resolutions, we ask permission to set forth the claims of the Tennessee River and its tributaries to your consideration, to the end that the petitions of said convention, above set forth, may be granted.

THE TENNESSEE AND ITS TRIBUTARIES.

The Tennessee River is, if not the longest, certainly next to the longest river in the United States east of the Mississippi. The Ohio with the Allegheny, its longest tributary, is 1,250 miles in length. The Tennessee with the Holston, its longest tributary, is over 1,200 miles in length. The Tennessee and its tributaries water large parts of Kentucky, Tennessee, Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, North Carolina, and Virginia, and give to fully half a million of the people of these States their only means of reaching a profitable market for their products.

The principal tributaries of the Upper Tennessee are the Holston and the Clinch, each of which is a great river of itself and both of which run far up into the State of Virginia. The other tributaries that cross the Tennessee line are the Hiwassee, the Little Tennessee, the French Broad, the Big Pigeon, the Nolachucky, the Watauga, and the Powell, all of which have their rise in the North Carolina mountains, except the Powell, which rises in Virginia.

The Emory River, while wholly within the State of Tennessee, is also a tributary well worthy of the attention of Congress. It cuts far and deep into the Coal Measures, and by means of slack-water navigation can be made to the Tennessee what the Monongahela is to the Ohio.

The Clinch flows in a broad, deep current within ten miles of the great Coal Creek mines, and the Powell passes within five miles of the immense iron and coal deposits at Cumberland Gap. The Hiwassee, the Little Tennessee, the French Broad, the Pigeon, the Nolachucky, and the Watauga all penetrate the iron districts of East Tennessee and Western North Carolina.

COUNTRY DRAINED AND ITS PRODUCTS.

The territory drained by this great river contains at least 40,000 square miles, and constitutes one of the finest regions in the world, whether estimated by the salubrity of its climate, the richness and variety of its vegetable products, or the quantity and excellence of its mineral deposits. In all of these great particulars no river east of the Mississippi surpasses it, and none, except the Ohio, can equal it.

The principal products shipped by the citizens of these seven States to distant markets are cotton, grain, bacon, hay, coal, iron, timber, marble, lumber, and zinc. These are all bulky commodities, for the cheap transportation of which river navigation is indispensable. These bulky products are our main sources of wealth, and upon our means of getting them to good markets our prosperity greatly depends.

These products, cotton, grain, bacon, hay, coal, iron, timber, marble, lumber, and zinc, are, also, important factors in the markets of the world; and by their cheapness and abundance the growth of the United States and the welfare of the American people are greatly promoted. The quantities of these and other products shipped on the upper Tennessee and its tributaries by the millions of people living in the seven States through which these waters flow can not be given even proximately, there being no sufficient statistics thereof; but to give your honorable bodies some conception of the commerce of the region above the Muscle Shoals we append some tables to this memorial. (See Appendix.)

These shipments were generally made under great disadvantages and at great risks. The percentage of loss from striking snags or rocks in the river bottoms and from being swamped in the rapids is very large. But fully half a million of our people have no other way of reaching their markets, and are thus forced to run these risks.

The amounts and kinds of merchandise now shipped on these rivers are mere trifles compared with what would be shipped if the obstructions, caused by rapids, rocks, and shoals, were removed. Your honorable body having, with a generous patriotism, undertaken several years ago the removal of the Muscle Shoals obstructions, our constituencies have been content to await the completion of that important work before calling upon you to deepen the rivers above the Shoals. But, the canals at these shoals being nearly completed, we beg leave to show what enormous benefits will accrue to the seven States drained by the Tennessee and its tributaries, and through them to the whole country, by so improving the navigation of these rivers as to make available the enormous deposits of iron, coal, marble, and other minerals, and the timber accessible to these rivers.

COAL AREA TO BE REACHED.

Tennessee has 5,100 square miles of coal lands, more than half of which is above Chattanooga and in reach of the Tennessee, the Clinch, and the Powell. Kentucky and Virginia have 2,500 square miles of coal territory in convenient reach of the Clinch, the Powell, and the Holston. The coal of these three States is the equal of any upon earth, as is demonstrated by the fact that enormous quantities are now transported by railroad (costly as this method is) to the South as far as Dallas, Tex.; to all parts of the Southern Atlantic sea-coast; to the West as far as Denver; to the North as far as Chicago, and to the East as far as New York City. The aggregate amount of coal and coke shipped last year by rail from territory in reach of said rivers was not less than two million tons. With slack-water navigation on said rivers for three months in the year above Knoxville and for all the year round below Knoxville, before the year 1900 the output of the coal mines of Tennessee, Kentucky, and Virginia, transported on these rivers, would be at least 9,000,000 tons, about 40 per cent. of the present output of the Pennsylvania mines.

IRON DEPOSITS MADE ACCESSIBLE.

But vast and valuable as are the coal fields on the waters of the Tennessee, more vast and valuable are the deposits of iron in the same territory. While the coal is found only upon the upper waters of the river, the iron deposits are found everywhere in its valley from Paducah in Kentucky to the Alleghany Mountains in Virginia, a distance of over 1,000 miles. And as the coal is being mined in great and increasing quantities, so is the iron. From Chattanooga to Rockwood, a distance by water of 150 miles, the course of the river can be traced by the smoke of the furnaces near its banks, furnaces using coal and iron from mines in sight of each other, and producing iron good in quality and unequaled in cheapness this side of the Atlantic. The output of these furnaces is immense, one of them alone consuming 450 tons of iron ore, coal, and limestone every day, all of which is transported on this river, advantage being taken of high waters, and the ore-banks being below the junction of the Clinch. Fully 95 per cent., however, of all the coal and iron mined in the valley of the Tennessee is transported by railroad.

SUPERIOR QUALITY OF THE ORES.

The red and brown hematites are found on both sides of the river and throughout its whole length, and on both sides of nearly all of its tributaries. These ores are of a grade out of which excellent pig-iron is made, they averaging over 60 per cent. of metallic iron and a large proportion of it containing less than one-fifth of 1 per cent. of phosphorus. On the western side of the great East Tennessee Valley the belts of iron ores are for hundreds of miles in sight of the coal beds, and generally not more than a mile apart. The United States Geological Report for 1883-'84 says that "in the manufacture of car-wheels and best refined bar-iron the ores of Tennessee have no superior."

But the iron ores on the eastern side of the Tennessee are richer in both quantity and quality than those on the western side. The reason they have not been more generally worked is their inaccessibility to coal and coke. When the auspicious day shall arrive that witnesses the removal of the obstructions in the Tennessee and its great tributaries, then the coal from the western side of the valley and the coke from the famous Pocahontas fields in Virginia and the Cumberland Gap mines in Kentucky will be met at the river banks by the wonderfully rich ores of the eastern side of the valley, and the world will then see the finest possible iron and steel produced at the lowest possible price. This done, and this valley becomes the seat of the iron empire in North America, and the tariff problem as to iron and steel will be forever solved.

The Pocahontas coal-fields in Virginia are in easy reach of the Holston and the Clinch, and the Cumberland Gap coal-fields are only 5 miles from the Powell; and a small part of the money so wisely expended on the Allegheny and Monongahela, the two main branches of the Ohio, would make the Holston, the Clinch, and the Powell more navigable than either of those wealth-bearing tributaries, and would open up to the balance of our country coal-fields fully as rich in coking coal as those that have made the Connellsville region in Pennsylvania more valuable than the richest gold mine upon the earth. The headwaters of the Clinch actually flow out of the Pocahontas Mountains, and the Holston's sources are under their very shadows.

THE CRANBERRY IRON ORES.

But your memorialists feel that we would fall short of telling the whole truth about the iron ores on the eastern side of the great East Tennessee Valley if they omitted to make special mention of the now world-famous Cranberry magnetic ore, found in such great quantities on the boundary between Tennessee and North Carolina, and no doubt existing also in Virginia on the south fork of the Holston. It seems to be agreed among iron experts that these are among the most valuable iron mines in the United States, quality and quantity both considered. The quality is fully equal to the finest Swedish ore. As evidence of its extraordinary value a very costly railroad 30 miles long has been built to the mines for the sole purpose of reaching this ore.

The report of the United States Geological Survey for 1886 says that "the Cranberry ore makes good steel by the Bessemer process," and the 1885 report says that this ore yields 68 per cent. of metallic iron, and that "its superior adaptability to the manufacture of steel is everywhere acknowledged."

COAL AND IRON THE SOURCES OF NATIONAL WEALTH AND POWER.

England's prominence in the affairs of nations is due very largely to the cheapness of her coal and iron. Where would the mistress of the oceans be to-day, politically and commercially, had God not filled her pockets with iron and coal? To some nations he gave gold and silver; but to England he gave iron, and coal to fuse that iron; and to her people he gave courageous hearts and industrious hands; and with her iron she has won empire, gold, and glory.

The country watered by the Tennessee and its tributaries has a larger coal area and contains more iron and better iron than all England. But of what benefit are talents buried in the earth? The opening of these rivers, which can be done at a cost utterly insignificant, compared with the ability of the nation and the beneficent results of the expenditure, will enable the United States to compete with England not only in the iron markets of the world, but at the very doors of her own furnaces and factories.

HOW THESE ORES AND COKE CAN BE BROUGHT TOGETHER.

The Holston River can now be navigated by steam-boats, in high water, to Kingsport, 175 miles above Knoxville, and large flat-boats, loaded with grain, bacon, lard, butter, poultry, and hides, come down from points in Virginia in sight of the Pocahontas Mountains. The Clinch is also navigable for steam-boats in high water 400 miles above Chattanooga, and for flat-boats far beyond the Virginia line. The Powell can be navigated for flat-boats beyond the Virginia line. What wealth-bearing rivers these will become when they begin to transport the Pocahontas coals to the furnaces where the Cranberry ores will await their coming! The transportation of the Pocahontas coke on cars hundreds of miles beyond the high-grade Cranberry ores, to be used in melting low-grade hematites, reminds one of a grand queen leaving her own country to marry a boorish peasant and become the mother of swineherds in a distant land!

CUMBERLAND GAP IRON AND COAL REGION.

The Cumberland Gap region, composed of parts of Kentucky, Tennessee, and Virginia, is known throughout the iron and coal world for its wonderful deposits of the finest coke-making coals and the finest steel-making ores, all in cannon-shot of each other. To reach these coals and ores a railroad is now being built both from Knoxville and from Louisville, and the present year will probably witness its completion. This railroad crosses both Powell and Clinch Rivers, and thus renders them easily accessible to the iron and coal banks. Powell River is about 5 miles from Cumberland Gap and Clinch River is distant about 25 miles. A company of heavy capitalists have purchased a large area of the Cumberland Gap coal and iron region, and are building a railroad from Knoxville to enable them to utilize their purchase. A large city has already been located near the Gap, on a grand site, and far-seeing men predict that here will spring up another Birmingham in the near future, but a Birmingham with cheap river transportation, which Alabama's iron city does not possess.

TESTIMONY OF EMINENT EXPERTS.

And now, speaking more generally of the mineral wealth of the region watered by the Tennessee and to show that our picture has not been too highly colored, we will cite the opinions of three well known men, fully qualified to give reliable testimony on this subject.

Hon. Abram S. Hewitt, of New York, the most distinguished iron man in America, says of this region: "It is the only place upon the North American continent where it is possible to make iron in competition with the cheap iron of England. * * * The cheapest place on the globe, until now, for the manufacture of iron is the Cleveland district, in Yorkshire, England. The distance of the coal and iron from the furnaces there averages about 20 miles. Now, in Alabama and Tennessee the coal and the ore are, in many places, within half a mile of each other. This region, so exhaustless in supplies, so admirably furnished with coal, so conveniently communicating with the Gulf, will be of infinitely more consequence to us for its iron than it has ever been for its cotton. I think this will be a region of coke-made iron on a scale grander than has ever been witnessed on the globe."

All that is wanting to make sure the perfect fulfillment of this grand prophecy is the expenditure of a few hundred thousand dollars on the rivers of this God-favored but man-neglected region.

THE FUTURE COAL AND IRON EMPIRE OF THE UNITED STATES.

Col. A. K. McClure, editor of the Philadelphia Times and one of the most noted citizens of Pennsylvania, after visiting our section of the South, thus writes: "No citizen of the North, of fair intelligence, can review the slumbering wealth of Alabama and Tennessee, and the water ways which offer the cheapest transportation, without accepting the conclusion that the next generation will see these States an iron and coal center equal to if not surpassing Pennsylvania. * * * Alabama and Tennessee have been gifted far beyond even our boasted empire of Pennsylvania; * * * and the time is at hand when a large portion of the great iron and coal products of the country, which enter competing centers, will be supplied cheaper from Alabama and Tennessee than from any States in the North. * * * These are strong expressions, but I write them only after the most exhaustive inquiry and careful examination, and I know they are fully warranted. This is the coal and iron empire of the South, and, I believe, the future coal and iron empire of the United States."

OPINION OF A GREAT ENGLISHMAN.

Sir I. Lowthian Bell, a well known Englishman, who is declared, by the 1886 report of the United States Geological Survey to be "the highest authority in England on the manufacture of pig-iron," says of this section: "There seems nothing to prevent Tennessee, Alabama, and Georgia from becoming the cheapest iron-making centers in the Union." And said report, after making this quotation, adds: "They are that now."

ONLY STATESMANSHIP AND PATRIOTISM NEEDED.

The valley of the Tennessee, then, being the seat of "the future coal and iron empire of the United States," he who would attempt to resist this decree of the fates would fight against "the stars in their courses." The rivers of this valley are sure to be deepened by the hand of man; the only question is, have we statesmanship and patriotism enough to do this grand work in our own day or will we leave it to be done by a grander generation to come? Nobler is he who founds an empire than he who inherits one. Let us be founders of this empire!

The effect of the improvement of our rivers would so cheapen iron, coke, and coal that the whole of our country would be greatly benefited. Iron and coal so enter into the cost of manufacturing everything else and are so interwoven with all the multifarious business operations of mankind that their cheapness cheapens everything else. Now, we buy over $50,000,000 worth of iron and steel every year from foreign lands; but deepen these rivers and in less than twenty years we will sell to foreign nations fully $100,000,000 worth of our own iron and steel and become the supreme masters of the iron markets of the world.

The advancement of a nation in civilization is measured by its consumption of iron, and its commercial power and political prestige may be measured by its production of iron. Verily, iron is king and his scepter sways the world. But hitherto in the United States he has not only been an uncrowned king, but has been imprisoned here in his mountain fortresses. Let us open up a highway worthy of his power and majesty and he will go forth and conquer for us the wealth of the world.

The questions we are presenting, while seemingly interesting to a few States only, are really national questions of momentous importance, whose magnitude can not well be overestimated and whose consideration is worthy of the highest statesmanship.

MARBLER OF EAST TENNESSEE.

We beg leave to add a few words in reference to our marble and timber, before we conclude. So full of marble is the East Tennessee Valley that it may almost be said to be paved with marbles from Chattanooga to Bristol, and marbles, too, of many of the most beautiful varieties, and, as a rule, of the most excellent qualities, both for building purposes and for ornament.

The Capitol of the United States and the State capitol of New York are adorned with Tennessee marble, and the custom-houses at Knoxville and Memphis and the Lee monument at New Orleans are built of it. For durability, polish, strength, and resistance to moisture the gray building marbles of this section are unequalled, and our ornamental marbles are known from San Francisco to New York and from New Orleans to Chicago, and praised and patronized wherever known. Whether for indoor ornamentation or for outdoor usefulness, the East Tennessee marbles are everywhere sought for, and never disappoint those who use them.

These marbles are found in hundreds of immense deposits, and so cheaply are they quarried that, although transported exclusively by railroad, they will yield a profit to the quarryman, even when shipped to markets as remote as New York and San Francisco. As evidence of this, we point to the convincing fact that last year there were over 54,000,000 pounds of our marbles shipped by railroad, chiefly to Baltimore, Philadelphia, New York, and Boston. These marbles, being free from iron and sulphur, never stain or tarnish by exposure to the weather.

OUR MARBLES THE FINEST IN THE UNITED STATES.

The United States Geological Report for 1886, after alluding to the fact that 269,486 cubic feet of marble were shipped from Tennessee in that year, says: "The already celebrated marbles of Tennessee are rapidly increasing in popularity, and are unquestionably the finest in the country [meaning the United States] for decorative work."

If, then, we can afford to ship tens of millions of pounds of our marbles by railroad to markets a thousand miles distant, as we are now doing, what hundreds of millions could we not ship if we had the advantages of cheap river transportation. No longer would our American youth be forced to content themselves with "dreaming that they dwell in marble halls," but "marble halls" would become so numerous that the patriotic statesmen who aid in improving these rivers might make the boast of Augustus, who said he "found Rome built of brick, but left it built of marble!"

And in this connection we may add that the quantity of lime, marble dust, and cement that will be shipped from this region as soon as our rivers are deepened, will be such as to make them among our leading industries.

TIMBER IN THE VALLEYS OF TENNESSEE.

And now a word in reference to our timber wealth. We can truthfully say that the Tennessee River and its tributaries drain the largest and richest forests now existing on the American continent; and already Knoxville and Chattanooga are among the foremost lumber markets of the world. There are in easy reach of these rivers at least 25,000 square miles of timber land, much of it containing virgin forests and all of it covered by as valuable timbers as can be found on the continent. Commissioner Hawkins estimates the timber lands of Tennessee alone at 25,000 square miles, "much of which," he says, "has been but slightly, if at all, disturbed by the woodman's ax." And when it is remembered that the tributaries of the Tennessee penetrate the very finest timber regions of Alabama, Georgia, North Carolina, and Virginia, it will be agreed that 25,000 square miles is an underestimate.

In these immense forests is found almost every variety of valuable timber found anywhere in the United States. This richness of variety is due to the varieties of soil and of climate, the lands rising from rich alluvial river bottoms 200 feet above the sea level, through many gradations, to the lofty heights of the Unakas, 6,000 feet above the sea.

The marketing of this timber has hardly been begun. The attention of our people has been only recently called to this new source of wealth. A few years ago fences were made of walnut and hickory, and gum and cherry were deemed worthless. A seventy-four page pamphlet descriptive of the resources of East Tennessee, published in 1883, only six years ago, does not even allude to these millions of acres of timber lands, trees being regarded, even then, in many parts of our section, as mere cumberers of the earth, whose existence was an annoyance and whose extermination was most devoutly desired!

How the lumber business has grown since then! Now, it is one of our great sources of wealth. Last year 70,000,000 feet of saw logs went down our rivers and 18,000,000 feet of sawed lumber, and yet only the outskirts of the timber regions have felt the edge of the woodman's ax.

OUR RAILROADS.

Your memorialists have several times alluded to the great cost of railroad transportation as compared with water freightage, but we do not wish to be understood as in any way complaining of our Tennessee railroads. On the other hand, we deem it our duty to bear witness to their liberality in meeting all the reasonable demands of our shippers of coal, coke, iron, timber, and marble. They have put freights on these articles down to the minimum. Without this liberality on the part of our railroads our coal, iron, and marble would be almost unknown in those great marts of our country where they are now such important factors. And it gives us pleasure to know that the improvement of our rivers will so greatly develop the general wealth and increase the population and business of our section that, while our railroads will lose a cumbersome freightage that was not at all profitable, they will in exchange obtain an immense increase of lighter and more valuable freights, and thus prosper pari passu with the general prosperity of the communities through which they run and whose welfare they have done much to promote.

HOW OUR RIVERS HAVE BEEN OVERLOOKED.

You memorialists beg leave to say to your honorable bodies that Tennessee has in the past been neither greedy nor importunate in her demands for river appropriations. Exa tly how much has been expended on the rivers of Tennessee we have no present means of knowing. But in the American Almanac and Treasury of Facts for the year 1888, edited by A. R. Spofford, Librarian of Congress, we find a semi-official statement of the amounts appropriated by the United States to be expended on rivers, harbors, roads, and canals from 1789 to 1883; and this statement shows that Tennessee has received far less than any other State in the Union except Iowa, Colorado, and Nevada, all new States, and neither of them having a navigable river within its territory.

To show you how little has been done by Congress for the rivers of Tennessee, we give this table of appropriations:

TENNESSEE THE GREATEST RIVER STATE IN THE UNION.

Now, when it is remembered that the Mississippi River forms Tennessee's western boundary and that the Cumberland and the Tennessee flow entirely through the State, and that all three of these great rivers have many large tributaries within the limits of the State, it will be seen that Tennessee has more miles of river than any State in the Union. And yet, notwithstanding this momentous fact, she has received down to the year 1883 only $85,000 for rivers and harbors, roads and canals, while sister States, with much less need and no greater merit, have received from five to fifty times as much!

We do not begrudge our sister States what Congress has done for them. Far from it! We honor Congress for its liberal and patriotic statesmanship; and we congratulate our sister States upon their good fortune. But, then, it must be remembered that Tennessee is a large State, containing 42,000 square miles and about 2,000,000 inhabitants; and that she has been a member of the Union nearly one hundred years. For these reasons, we memorialists, who are from Tennessee, respectfully ask, may we not hope to share equally, with at least our younger sisters, in the benefits granted by our common country?

But neither our Representatives nor your honorable bodies have been as neglectful of the interests of the upper Tennessee Valley as the foregoing facts would seem to imply; for of no great benefit would the deepening of the rivers above Chattanooga have been until the completion of the Muscle Shoals. And we assume that the reason Congress has not expended more money on the waters of the upper Tennessee is that it was deemed best to postpone these appropriations until the obstacles to navigation at the Muscle Shoals had been removed. That auspicious day has now dawned; and in behalf of the seven States most interested we are now here to ask that these appropriations be now made.

Of all the fabled works of Hercules, none has been of such lasting value as the tearing open a passage-way from the Mediterranean to the ocean; and of all the great works of river improvement executed by the American Congress, none has been more beneficial and profitable than the canal around the Falls of the Ohio, at Louisville, and the improvement of the Upper Ohio and its tributaries. And we believe that when a like work is done at the falls of the Tennessee (for such the Muscle Shoals are), and on the upper Tennessee and its tributaries, a like benefit and a like profit will be the result. God has given us many great rivers, but he requires of us that we improve them. This is the test of our enterprise, manhood, and patriotism.

Without further consumption of your time and attention, we will conclude by briefly summarizing what we have said.

SUMMARY STATEMENT.

First. The upper waters of the Tennessee River open to the world the best and largest coal-fields in the United States.

Second. To these same waters are easily accessible the best and largest deposits of iron ore east of the Mississippi.

Third. The coal-fields and iron deposits are nearer together than any others of like quality and quantity in North America, if not in the world.

Fourth. On the waters of this same great river are hundreds of quarries of the most beautiful and most durable marbles in America and immense forests of the best merchantable timber.

Fifth. This river and its main tributaries can be made, at small expense, capable of cheaply transporting all of this coal and iron, marble and timber to the markets of the world.

Sixth. While the seven great States of Tennessee, Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, North Carolina, Virginia, and Kentucky will be directly benefited by the improvement of these rivers, nevertheless, in the indirect benefits, the whole people of the United States will prove to be largely the partakers.

And for these reasons and in obedience to the resolutions under which we act, we respectfully memorialize your honorable bodies to make prompt and adequate appropriations for the removal of all obstructions to the navigation of the Tennessee River and its tributaries, as high as they can be improved by slackwater navigation, so as to give 4 feet of water all the year round from Paducah to Chattanooga, at least 5 feet of water all the year round from Chattanooga to Knoxville, and good slackwater navigation on all the tributaries up to their headwaters.

And as in duty bound, we will ever so pray.

ADDITIONAL BOOK-KEEPER, CLERK'S OFFICE.

Mr. KERR, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Accounts to report back the resolution I now send to the desk, and ask its present consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be authorized to employ an assistant book-keeper in the Clerk's office during the sessions of the Fifty-first Congress, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, until otherwise provided for, at a salary of $100 per month.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Is that reported from a committee of the House?

The SPEAKER. It comes from the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. By unanimous report of the committee?

Mr. KERR, of Pennsylvania. Unanimously.

The resolution was adopted.

WILLIAM AND MARY COLLEGE, VIRGINIA.

Mr. BOWDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have a memorial of the board of visitors and others, of William and Mary College, Virginia, for reimbursement for destruction of the building during the war, printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There being no objection, the memorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on War Claims.

It is as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

Your memorialists are a committee appointed by the board of visitors of William and Mary College, Virginia, to present a claim on the part of that institution to reimbursement from the Government for losses caused by fire during the late civil war.

Your memorialists are full-handed with proofs of the following facts: Early in 1862 Williamsburgh, being a place of strategic importance on the peninsula of Virginia, was occupied and held by the Union forces. William and Mary College and its outbuildings being used as barracks. On September 9 of that year these Union forces were attacked by a body of Confederate cavalry and the college taken and held for a few hours by them, who, however, very soon evacuated the college and the town, which were promptly reoccupied by the Union forces. A body of stragglers from these, drunken, disorderly, and insubordinate, in the first hour or two after their return fired and destroyed the college building, with the library, philosophical apparatus, furniture, and other property in the building belonging to the institution. The Union forces continued to occupy the premises for most of the subsequent period of the war, during which other houses and property of the college and connected with it were destroyed by the Union soldiers. General Meade said of this destruction, in a letter which was made public: "I am satisfied, on examination of the facts of the case, that the destruction of the buildings of William and Mary College by our troops was not only unnecessary and unauthorized, but one of those deplorable acts of useless destruction which occur in all wars," etc.

Your memorialists are taught by the law of nations that works of art, repositories of science and learning, and public buildings devoted exclusively to civil and scientific purposes, though belonging to an enemy, are and ought to be sacred from spoliation and destruction, and are not considered as the pecunia of this or that nation, but as the property of mankind at large and as belonging to the common interests of the whole human species.

This noble doctrine of international law has been signally illustrated in the history of the venerable college of William and Mary itself. During the War of Independence the buildings of this college were repeatedly occupied by British troops. They were in every instance respected as sacred to the cause of letters, and left unharmed. After the cease of that contest, Louis XVI, our ally, caused buildings of the college, accidentally destroyed by his troops, to be rebuilt and every injury to be repaired, thus rendering royal homage to the cause of learning.

Another instance of respect for the principle under consideration is furnished by the history of another literary institution of Virginia, the University at Charlottesville. In 1865, when General Sheridan passed through Charlottesville, the seat of the university, he thoughtfully, and without solicitation, stationed a guard to protect the institution from all injury; and the fact is gratefully and conspicuously recorded to his honor on the archives of the university. Thus, the great institution which Thomas Jefferson gave to his country was fortunately preserved, although the elder college, which may be called its mother and which gave Thomas Jefferson to America and to mankind, fell a victim to the devastating hand of war.

Your memorialists are confident that further examples, illustrating the principle of international law under consideration, need not be adduced.

The restoration of the buildings, library, apparatus, and other properties destroyed by Union troops, as described, has cost the college the aggregate sum of $65,000, details of which will be presented to appropriate committees of Congress. This expenditure has well-nigh exhausted the endowment fund of the college, and your memorialists have been charged with the duty of presenting its claim for remuneration to the present Congress.

Your memorialists beg leave to remind the Congress that, next after Harvard, William and Mary College is the oldest on the continent of North America. It was chartered in 1693 by royal grant from England's most illustrious sovereigns, William and Mary. Many of the great statesmen who were most conspicuous in declaring and effecting the Independence of the United States and in laying the foundations of our new Government on the sound principles on which they have rested for a century, were educated within its walls. The president of the first general Congress, five signers and the author of the Declaration of Independence, three Presidents of the United States, Chief-Justice Marshall, the first Attorney-General, Edmund Randolph, a commanding general of the Armies of the United States, and many statesmen, jurists, and soldiers but little less distinguished were students of this venerable college.

Documents published by preceding Congresses will be submitted to the present Congress, illustrating the honorable part that William and Mary College has taken through her sons at every period of the history of our country.

These present the claims of the college to the relief now solicited in a manner so cogent, full, and exhaustive that your memorialists feel it unnecessary to recapitulate them here. They may add, however, that the relief here asked for has been granted by each House of Congress, but, unfortunately, not in the same bill; and thus the college, by the accidents of legislation, has failed of this righteous relief.

Confidently relying upon the justice of Congress in this matter, your memorialists will ever pray, etc.

ARREARAGES OF GENERAL AND SPECIAL TAXES IN THE DISTRICT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5179) fixing the rate of interest to be charged of arrearages of general and special taxes now due in the District of Columbia, if paid within the time specified.

The Senate amendment was read, as follows:

In line 10 strike out "April" and insert "June."

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, I move to non-concur in the amendment of the Senate and ask a conference on the disagreeing votes thereon. I would suggest that the commissioners state that this will defeat the purposes of the bill.

Mr. ADAMS. Will the gentleman state the difference between the House and the Senate?

Mr. GROUT. The Senate makes a change in the date fixed by the House from April to June—that is, when payments may be made. The House bill provides that payments may be made by the first Tuesday in April, and the amendment proposed by the Senate extends it to June.

The motion of Mr. GROUT to non-concur in the Senate amendment and ask a conference thereon was agreed to.

The Speaker announced the appointment of Mr. GROUT, Mr. BURTON, and Mr. HEMPHILL as conferees on said bill.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSOURI RIVER AT PIERRE, S. DAK.

The Speaker also laid before the House the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4139) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at the city of Pierre, in South Dakota.

The Senate amendments were read at length.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Speaker, these amendments are merely verbal in their character. They have been examined, and it is the desire of the parties interested that they be concurred in. I therefore move concurrence in the Senate amendments.

The amendments were concurred in.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE COLUMBIA RIVER, OREGON.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a bill (H. R. 7617) to authorize the Oregon and Washington Bridge Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Columbia River between the State of Oregon and the State of Washington, and to establish it as a post-road, returned from the Senate with amendments.

The amendments were read at length.

Mr. BAKER. The amendments read are of the same character as those to the preceding bill and are merely of a verbal character. I move they be concurred in.

Mr. ROGERS. I endeavored to hear the gentleman from New York, but was unable to do so.

Mr. BAKER. I will state to the gentleman from Arkansas that the amendments are merely of a verbal character, necessary to perfect the bill; and I ask concurrence in the amendments.

The amendments were concurred in.

Mr. BAKER. I move to reconsider the votes by which the amendments to the last two bills were concurred in; and also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TERRITORY OF OKLAHOMA.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, in the consideration of the Oklahoma bill, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McKRAE] offered an amendment, which was adopted by the Committee of the Whole and by the House, but which, when you come to incorporate it in the bill, destroys the sense intended by the amendment. The amendment in the bill will read:

And no persons shall be entitled to vote at the first election or to be elected to any office who are actual residents in said Territory at the time of the passage of this act.

That is the language as amended. The word "not" should be inserted, and I ask unanimous consent that that correction be made.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the correction will be made.

STEAMER SAN BENITO.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take up for consideration the bill (S. 2501) to provide for an American register for a steamer to be named San Benito, owned by a corporation of the State of California.

The bill was read at length for information, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of Navigation is hereby authorized and directed to cause the foreign-built steamer Kimberly, owned at the port of San Francisco, State of California, by the Pacific Improvement Company, a corporation of said State of California, and now rebuilding in the United States, to be registered as a vessel of the United States, under the name of San Benito.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to authorize and direct the inspection of said steam-vessel, steam-boiler, steam-pipes, and the appurtenances of said boiler, and cause to be granted the proper and usual certificate issued to steam-vessels of the merchant marine without reference to the fact that said steam-boiler, steam-pipes, and appurtenances were not constructed pursuant to the laws of the United States, and were not constructed of iron stamped pursuant to said laws; and the tests to be applied on the inspection of said boiler, steam-pipes, and appurtenances will be the same in all respects as to strength and safety as are required in the inspection of boilers constructed in the United States for marine purposes, save that the fact that said boiler, steam-pipes, and appurtenances not being constructed pursuant to the requirements of the laws of the United States, and are of unstamped iron, shall not be an obstacle to the granting of the usual certificate if said boiler, steam-pipes, and appurtenances are found to be of sufficient strength and safety.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Reserving the right to object, I would inquire whether there is any special reason why this should be considered out of its regular order? Has the committee made a report and requested it?

Mr. BINGHAM. There is no special reason. It is an unobjectionable bill, and I am directed by the committee—

Mr. BREWER. If there is no special reason I do not see why the bill should pass.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman makes inquiry as to whether there is any special reason why it should be considered at this time.

Mr. BINGHAM. I would state that I am directed by the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries to ask unanimous consent to report this bill to the House for favorable action, it being identical with a bill introduced in the House and approved by the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. BREWER. I would like to ask the gentleman if this vessel is not covered by the general law?

Mr. BINGHAM. It is not covered by the general law, for the reason that the repairs to the vessel amounted to $60,000. The general law requires that the repairs shall amount to three-fourths of the value of the vessel.

Mr. BREWER. What proportion is $60,000 to the value of the vessel? Mr. BINGHAM. The value of the vessel is $200,000; and if the gentleman will allow me, I will state that it was bought for $50,000. The purchase price included $45,000 for salvage. Therefore, the expenditure upon the vessel having been $60,000, it is believed to be a fair case for the action of the House, for the reason that under the general statute the Commissioner of Navigation, as well as the Secretary of the Interior, can not admit the vessel to register. The Commissioner writes in this way:

It is probable, therefore, that if application for register of the vessel should be made to the bureau it would be rejected on technical grounds. The case, however, seems to have merits, and, if not directly within the letter of the law, it appears to be within its spirit.

[Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I think we had better have the regular order.

Mr. BINGHAM. Will not the gentleman from Kentucky withdraw his call for the regular order? It would take but a moment to pass this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky demands the regular order, and the morning hour commences at 12 o'clock and 32 minutes. The call rests with the Committee on the Territories.

TERRITORY OF OKLAHOMA.

Mr. STRUBLE. The day before yesterday the House disposed of the Senate bill on the subject of Oklahoma, but there stands upon the Calendar the House bill H. R. 6786, on the same subject, undisposed of. I move that that bill be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, that order will be made.

COUNTY SEAT, SHOSHONE COUNTY, IDAHO.

Mr. STRUBLE. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 6474) to submit the location of the county seat of Shoshone County, Idaho Territory, to a vote of the people of said county.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the location of the county seat of Shoshone County, Idaho Territory, be submitted to a vote of the legal voters of said county at the next general election which shall be held in said county.

SEC. 2. That such town as receives a majority of all the votes cast at said election for the location of the county seat shall be the county seat of said county until otherwise changed by law.

SEC. 3. That said election for the location of the county seat shall be governed in all respects the same as all other general elections in Idaho are governed.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I think we should have some explanation of this bill.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. Speaker, the Forty-ninth Congress passed a law which prohibits the Territories from changing their county seats, from building roads, from changing their county boundaries, or from doing almost anything else, and the consequence is that the Territories are forced to come to Congress and ask relief in these directions. This bill simply proposes to give the people of one county in the Territory which I represent the right to vote as to where they will have their county seat located. We can not pass a law on the subject through our Territorial Legislature, and therefore, as I have said, we are compelled to come to Congress and ask this authorization. I think that everybody in the country desires to change the location of the county seat, and the bill provides that a majority of all the voters must select one town before it shall become the county seat.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Speaker, I think the proposition made by the gentleman from Idaho is a very correct one, and it only demonstrates the utter absurdity of the provision by which we undertook to fix the county seats in the Territory of Oklahoma. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say a word in regard to the law to which the gentleman from Idaho has referred. That law simply prohibits the people of the Territories from passing special laws on the subjects to which he has referred. The Territorial Legislature in this case might have passed a general law to cover these subjects, but it has not done so. The law to which the gentleman has referred was simply a provision of the constitution of nearly every State in the Union with regard to special legislation. It was prepared in this House and a portion of it in the Senate, and the President of the United States at this time was the author of about half of the bill. It was a very good bill, and it illustrates the wisdom of Congress in that respect, as well as in the Oklahoma bill which has just passed. [Laughter.]

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. STRUBLE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BONDS FOR RAILROAD, ARIZONA.

Mr. STRUBLE. I now call up the bill (H. R. 3934) to authorize the board of supervisors of Maricopa County, Arizona, to issue certain bonds in aid of the construction of a certain railroad.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the board of supervisors of Maricopa County, in Arizona Territory, be, and they are hereby, authorized and required to issue the bonds of said county to aid in the construction and equipment of a railroad to, from, or through the city of Phoenix, in said Maricopa County, to the northern boundary line of said county, which shall form a part of a continuous line from Phoenix, by way of Prescott, to the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad, in the Territory of Arizona, which bonds shall be issued at the times, at the rate per mile, in the form, and as provided by this act.

SEC. 2. That whenever Joseph Renzolds, as trustee, or his assign or incorporated grantee, shall have completed a road-bed and laid the ties and rails thereon for the distance of 10 miles along the route of said road in said county of Maricopa, the board of supervisors of said county is hereby empowered and required, within ten days thereafter, to issue the bonds of said county for said 10 miles, in the sum of $4,000 per mile, which said bonds shall be delivered to said Joseph Renzolds, trustee, or to his assign or incorporated grantee so constructing said railroad, upon proof, including the certificate of the chief engineer having in charge the construction of said road, being filed with said board of supervisors showing the construction and completion of said 10 miles of railroad in the manner and to the extent as above required; and as often as 10 miles along the route of said road additional to said first 10 miles shall be constructed as aforesaid in said county of Maricopa said board of supervisors of said county are hereby empowered and required, in like manner and upon like proof, to issue and deliver the bonds of said county to said Joseph Renzolds, as trustee, or to his assign or incorporated grantee, in like amount per mile: Provided, That if the last section of said road to be constructed in said county of Maricopa shall be less than 10 miles, then whenever the same shall have been constructed as aforesaid, and proof thereof made to and filed with said board of supervisors in the manner aforesaid, said board of supervisors may thereupon, in like manner and form, issue and deliver the bonds of said Maricopa County, in the same amount per mile, for said last section: Provided, That said county of Maricopa shall, upon the issue and delivery of said bonds, receive a like amount of full-paid non-assessable stock from said Joseph Renzolds, trustee, or from his assign or incorporated grantee, said stock being issued and based upon said railroad so constructed or to be constructed as aforesaid.

SEC. 3. That the bonds provided for in this act shall be issued in the name of the county of Maricopa, in the usual form of municipal bonds, and shall be signed by the chairman of the board of supervisors of said county in his official capacity, and countersigned by the treasurer of said county, under the seal of said board of supervisors, each bond to be of the denomination of $1,000, payable thirty years after date thereof, with interest at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum, payable annually, said principal and interest to be made payable at the office of the county treasurer of said Maricopa County or at the office of any trust company in the city of New York that said Joseph Renzolds, trustee, or his assign or his incorporated grantee, shall select. The interest, rate, and time of payment shall be evidenced by coupons in the usual form attached to said bonds.

SEC. 4. That said board of supervisors of Maricopa County are hereby empowered and required, at their first regular meeting after the first issue and delivery of said bonds under the provisions of this act, and annually thereafter, and at the time and in the manner provided by the general revenue laws of the Territory of Arizona for levying taxes, to levy such additional taxes as may be necessary to raise a sum of money sufficient to pay the interest as the same matures on any outstanding bonds issued by said county of Maricopa under the provisions of this act: Provided, That in the year 1901, and every year thereafter, until both principal and interest of said bonds shall have been paid, said board of supervisors shall, in the manner and at the time provided by the general revenue laws of the Territory of Arizona for levying taxes therein, levy such further and additional taxes in said county as may be required to raise a sum of money sufficient to pay the annual interest upon said bonds and that will insure the payment of the principal of said bonds and the redemption of the whole amount of said bonds outstanding at the date of their maturity; that the taxes so levied and collected by the treasurer of said county of Maricopa be placed in a fund to be denominated "railroad, interest, and redemption fund."

SEC. 5. That the treasurer of said Maricopa County shall, out of said "railroad, interest, and redemption fund," and, if there be not sufficient in said fund, then the amount of the deficiency shall be paid out of the general fund of said county annually upon each bond, to pay the interest which shall then have accrued thereon; and upon the payment by said treasurer of such interest he shall require the coupon or coupons representing the interest to be surrendered to him for cancellation, which shall be his voucher for the money so paid thereon.

SEC. 6. That said board of supervisors are further authorized and empowered to enter into a contract, in the name and under the seal of said county, with said Joseph Renzolds, as trustee, or with his assign or incorporated grantee, touching the issue of the bonds herein provided for, to aid in the construction of the said road, and in and by said contract said board of supervisors are hereby authorized to agree for and on behalf of said county with said Joseph Renzolds, as trustee, or with his assign or incorporated grantee, for the issue and delivery of the said bonds in the manner and for the purpose and as in this act provided: Provided, however, That any contract heretofore made by said board of supervisors for the issuance of said bonds in conformity with the provisions of this act is hereby ratified.

SEC. 7. That this act shall not apply to any section or portion of said railroad which shall not be completed in the manner aforesaid on or before January 1, A. D. 1893, it being the intention of this act to give and extend the time for the completion of said road to January 1, A. D. 1893.

SEC. 8. That all acts or parts of acts in conflict with this act are hereby repealed in so far as the same might be deemed or taken to affect or prohibit the action of said board of supervisors of Maricopa County as herein authorized and provided.

Certain verbal amendments recommended by the committee and set forth in the report below were read.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, before these amendments are voted upon I should like to have the report read.

Mr. STRUBLE. I will yield in a moment to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] to explain the bill, but before doing so I wish to call attention to a clerical error which ought to be corrected wherever it occurs in the bill. The name "Reynolds" is misprinted "Renzolds." I ask unanimous consent that it be corrected.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the correction will be made. There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. STRUBLE. I now yield to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH, of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, this bill is for the purpose of authorizing the county of Maricopa, in the Territory of Arizona, to issue bonds to the amount of $4,000 a mile to aid in the construction of a railroad, in order to give the people some sort of chance to get to market the fruits and the farm products of that valley which now rot upon the ground, owing to inability to get them out by horses, mules, or the ordinary old-fashioned modes of transportation. The Legislature of the Territory in 1885 passed a law granting to the counties of Yavapai and Maricopa, which adjoin, the right to issue bonds to aid in the construction of a railroad. Through the county of Yavapai there runs the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad. At the southern end of the Territory there runs the Southern Pacific, but there is no north and south connection. There is a connection as far as Phoenix with the Southern Pacific, but there is no connection north. The county of Yavapai, under the power given by the Legislature, did construct a railroad through that county. There are 45 miles of road yet unbuild and which can not be built unless the money is raised in this way.

The people of Maricopa County held an election to determine whether or not these bonds should be issued, and about 90 per cent. of the full vote of the county voted in favor thereof, because that is purely a fruit-raising and agricultural region, and, as I have said, their products, to a value greater than the amount for which it is proposed to issue these bonds, rot yearly in the fields for want of means of transportation. It is the almost unanimous wish of the people that these bonds shall be issued and the road built. The amount of the bonds is less than 2½ per cent. of the taxable property of the county, and I assure the House that I have been besieged by letters from chambers of commerce, from mass meetings, and from almost every man in the county, asking that Congress shall give the right to issue these bonds.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, let us have the report read.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Territories, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3934) to authorize the board of supervisors of Maricopa County, Arizona, to issue certain bonds in aid of the construction of a certain railroad, submit the following report:

That Maricopa County is one of the most fertile and productive counties in Arizona. That by reason of having no railroad connection with the northern part of the Territory the large crops raised become almost valueless on account of excessive freight charges. Maricopa County has taxable property to the extent of $5,000,000, as your committee is informed. By the terms of the bill the county receives bonds in payment of the money proposed to be advanced.

A letter from the Chamber of Commerce of Phoenix, Ariz., hereto attached and marked "Exhibit A," presents the facts.

The committee respectfully recommend the passage of the bill with the following amendments, namely: On page 1, line 4, strike out the last word "and." On page 1, line 5, strike out the first word "required." On page 2, line 6, strike out the words "and required." On page 2, in line 19, strike out the words "and required." On page 3, in line 27, strike out the word "shall" and insert in lieu thereof the word "may." On page 4, in line 2, strike out the words "and required." On page 4, in line 13, strike out the word "shall" and insert in lieu thereof the word "may." On page 5, in line 4, strike out the word "shall" and insert in lieu thereof the word "may."

EXHIBIT A.

THE CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON TERRITORIES,
Washington, D. C.:

On or about the 2d day of April, 1889, a meeting of the citizens of Maricopa County was called for the purpose of investigating the possibilities of building a railroad from Phoenix north to some point on the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad.

At this meeting the following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, That the citizens of Maricopa County, assembled this 2d day of April, 1889, to discuss the great and urgent necessities of further and better railroad facilities, for the marketing of the products of the Salt River Valley as now produced, and considering the largely increased products of this valley from year to year, do deem it wise and proper that Maricopa County pledge its credit by the issuing of its county bonds in a sum not to exceed the sum of $4,000 per mile to aid in the construction of a railroad to the north, to connect this city with the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad. The building of this proposed road would open to this valley a very large country, using largely of its products, and we, the citizens of Maricopa County, here assembled, request the Phoenix Chamber of Commerce to act as a committee for and in behalf of the citizens of Maricopa County, and to take such steps as they deem proper to interest capital in the proposed line of road."

At the Territorial legislative session of 1885 an act was passed authorizing Yavapai and Maricopa County to issue county bonds to aid in the building of a railroad from some point on the Atlantic and Pacific to Prescott and thence to Phoenix. Yavapai County took advantage of this act within the prescribed time, and a railroad was built to Prescott. Through negligence of the officers of Maricopa County the benefits provided for in this act were allowed to lapse. This chamber entered into negotiations with capitalists and provided for the immediate building of this north and south railroad, provided that the county of Maricopa issue its bonds to aid in the construction of said road at the rate of $4,000 per mile. For the purpose of getting the voice of the tax-payers of this county, an election was held on the 27th day of August, 1889, when the question of the county aiding the building of said road by issuing county bonds in the sum of $4,000 per mile was submitted to a vote of the legal voters of the said Maricopa County. Out of a total vote of 2,000 over 90 per cent. were in favor of the issuing of county bonds.

The building of this proposed road is a necessity to this people at this time. The products of this valley are increasing very largely from year to year, and the markets now within reach to the south and east are not sufficient to use the surplus, while to the north, along the line of this proposed road and along the line of the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad, are extensive markets, using largely the products grown here, that are to-day supplied from California, making a railroad haul of at least 600 miles, while this valley lies less than 200 miles distant.

A bill will be introduced in Congress making valid the issuing of the bonds above referred to, and this chamber, in behalf of the citizens of Maricopa County, would respectfully ask the support of the committee of which you are chairman to this bill when it comes before your honorable body.

Our Delegate in Congress, Hon. MARK A. SMITH, is familiar with our wants and necessities, to whom we would respectfully refer you.

Very respectfully, yours,

PHOENIX CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
By HENRY E. KEMP, President.
H. H. LOGAN, Secretary.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon agreeing to the amendments recommended by the committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I think that even well established communities very seldom act wisely in adopting a system which taxes the whole people of a given county for public improvements of this kind, and I believe that in Arizona it will be found exceedingly unwise policy on the part of the counties to incur in this way such heavy indebtedness. As I understand the proposition, 45 miles of road are to be completed.

Mr. SMITH, of Arizona. Forty miles.

Mr. HOLMAN. I understood it was 45 miles. The indebtedness incurred is to be at the rate of $4,000 a mile, making, if there were 45 miles, $180,000 of indebtedness at the very beginning of the county's existence. All legislation of this sort inures to the benefit of a comparatively small body of people, while the burden falls upon all. It does seem to me more natural and reasonable that conveniences of this sort should not be created in this thoroughly artificial method.

Mr. SMITH, of Arizona. My friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] is, I presume, acquainted with the condition of the country about Prescott. We are in this attitude: The Southern Pacific Railroad has a connection from the south with the Salt River Valley, where all these crops are raised. A branch railroad having been constructed to connect the Southern Pacific with Phoenix, every freight team has been driven off the road; and as soon as the freight teams are gone the railroad companies put the freight at what they please. The result is that through Southern Arizona, in the mining region, within 100 or 200 miles of the very locality where all these fruits, vegetables and grain are grown, it is impossible to obtain them, but such supplies must be brought from California, paying freight for a distance of 1,000 or 1,500 miles. The road which is here proposed to be built will give a connection with the Atlantic and Pacific on the north, giving outlet for produce which now it is impossible to ship over the mountains by mule teams, while hay shipped from California is selling at Prescott, 100 miles above, at $23 a ton. Under present conditions the products of that valley, the richest in the world, are simply lying in the fields without any chance of getting to market.

In answer to another objection of the gentleman, allow me to state that there is no settlement along the proposed line of this road sufficient to induce capital unaided to build it. The work will not be done unless the people are permitted to take hold of it themselves. The road will give its bonds for the money raised by the people in this way.

I will state again that the people themselves have voted on this question, and over 90 per cent. of all the tax-payers of that valley have voted in favor of the issuance of these bonds. They only ask Congress to permit them, as they work as hard as any people in the world, to do in this matter what they please with their own money. If what they propose to do should prove to be a mistake, they will learn something by it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not yet understand, because the report furnishes no information of any value, in what form this debt is to be created. Is it to be a loan of money?

Mr. SMITH, of Arizona. A loan of money. The county is to issue bonds in aid of the construction of the road, and accept in return the bonds of the railroad company.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to refer to one fact mentioned by my friend from Arizona. He complains of the absence of competition between the roads mentioned. That indicates hasty legislation on the subject. How did it happen that Arizona allowed the construction of those roads under conditions which enable them to exercise such arbitrary power? And as to this road which is to be constructed, is there any provision in the act incorporating the company which will impose proper limitations upon the charges to be made for transportation of persons or freight?

Mr. SMITH, of Arizona. I do not know whether there is or not. But this bill is only permissive; in the action yet to be taken by the people they may impose whatever limitations they please.

Mr. HOLMAN. As a general rule this is the act of the corporation itself—

Mr. SMITH, of Arizona. This is not a corporation as yet.

Mr. HOLMAN. We all remember our experience in regard to the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé Railroad Company. There the employees of the corporation themselves organized counties and voted large subsidies, which became a lien upon the whole property of the counties. That may be the case here. Some enterprising town or city may take advantage of the opportunity to force upon the whole surrounding population, embracing all the farms of the county, a mortgage of $180,000.

For one I have protested against this policy in the State which I have the honor in part to represent. I do not believe in the exercise of any such power by a State. I do not believe that such a power is within the proper province or domain of government. These enterprises are in the very nature of things private enterprises, with which the Government has nothing to do. I have protested always against this policy, and I shall vote against this bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon agreeing to the amendments. The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. HILL. I would like to hear the bill and amendments reported. The SPEAKER. They have already been reported to the House.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. STRUBLE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

INDEBTEDNESS, OGDEN, UTAH.

Mr. STRUBLE. I now call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 7170) to authorize the city of Ogden, Utah, to assume an increased indebtedness.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4 of the act entitled "An act to prohibit the passage of local or special laws in the Territories of the United States to limit Territorial indebtedness, and for other purposes," approved July 30, 1896, be amended so as to authorize the municipal corporation of Ogden, Utah Territory, to assume a bonded indebtedness, including all existing liabilities, equal to 8 per cent. of the value of the taxable property within said corporation, such value to be ascertained by the last assessment for municipal taxes: Provided, That any and all sums borrowed or secured under the authority of this act shall be expended for the public improvement of said city.

Mr. HOLMAN. I presume there is a report accompanying this bill. If so, I hope it will be read.

Mr. STRUBLE. I yield the time to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. DORSEY].

Mr. DORSEY. I will call for the reading of the report, as the gentleman from Indiana desires to have it read.

The report (by Mr. DORSEY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Territories, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7170) "to authorize the city of Ogden, Utah, to assume an increased indebtedness," beg leave to report as follows:

1. That there are in the city about 60 miles of streets which are in great and immediate need of improvement.

2. That the lower and thickly populated portion has since the first settlement thereof drained the whole city until now the soil has become saturated with sewage and rendered unhealthy and offensive. That therefore a system of public works, including adequate sewerage, is imperatively demanded.

The foregoing facts are fully set out and elaborated in the petition before the committee, dated January 28, 1890, and signed by the mayor and the prominent business men, property-holders, and tax-payers of the city; in the statement of Dr. H. J. Powers, the city physician, and Drs. Samuel M. Brick and John D. Carahan, dated January 28, 1890, and addressed to the mayor; and in the statement by T. A. Perkins, the city engineer, dated January 29, 1890, addressed to the mayor.

Were the city of Ogden located in a State, the relief here sought would be unnecessary, as any community, in a State so situated and composed of an intelligent, industrious, progressive population, like that of Ogden, would have the making of the needed improvements within its own power.

It is conceded that it may be necessary in the Territories, and in the case of villages and proposed towns and cities, to prevent by law the incurring of indebtedness for speculative purposes and to "boom" the property, but surely no such inhibition should stand in the way of Ogden, which is already an established, populous, and growing city.

The situation of affairs as shown in the papers filed is such as to demonstrate that the improvements suggested are essential to the progress, the prosperity, and the health of the community, and it is shown that they are desired by the officials, the business men, and the citizens generally.

The report of the governor of Utah for 1889 shows that the population of Ogden in 1880 was 6,039; that in 1889 the population was 15,000, showing an increase of nearly 300 per cent. in ten years; and the population is steadily and rapidly increasing. The governor's report also shows that the property assessment of Ogden for 1889 was $7,000,000; that the indebtedness of the city was $100,000 only; that there were in the city three national banks, with a capital of $350,000 and deposits of $1,321,000. Speaking of the business prosperity of the Territory, the governor, after reciting that an immense immigration has been flowing into Ogden, says:

"The people of this rapidly growing city are active, persevering, and industrious, and deserve the success which has come to them."

Ogden is a railroad center, and to and through the city there is an immense traffic and travel. It is a distributing point for the United States mails and for Army stores and supplies.

The city is the central point of five trunk lines of railroad and there are always a great number of transient visitors in the city, as well as the employees of the railroad companies, and the erection and maintenance of a city hospital is indispensable.

The following, quoted from the last report of the city recorder, will show something of the financial transactions and condition:

"The report of the city recorder for the quarter ending February 14 was read, and showed a balance on hand at the beginning of the quarter of $11,076.39; receipts, $29,126.70; total, $40,203.29. Disbursements, $26,725.43; cash on hand, $13,473.86. The yearly report, ending February 14, showed cash on hand at beginning of year, $30,773.37; receipts, $106,496.60; total, $127,269.97. Disbursements, $113,796.11; balance on hand, $13,473.86."

In view of all the surroundings, it is evident that Ogden is already a very important city, and that in the near future it is certain to be one of a great population and of vast business interests. It is not necessary to point out that the improvements now sought can be more economically and advantageously made at this stage, so as to be prepared for the coming increase, as well as to contribute to the health, convenience, and comfort of the present population.

It is believed that upon a proper consideration the bill will commend itself to the House.

It is known that, should the bill become a law so that the loans can be negotiated on long time and in the manner proposed, the money can be had at an annual interest of not to exceed 5 per cent.; whereas, under other circumstances and for shorter time, the interest charges would be not less than 8 or 10 per cent.

Your committee, however, recommend the following amendments to the bill as being better in phraseology and to more carefully guard the interests of all concerned, namely:

First. Strike out from the beginning of line 3, to and including the word "taxes," in line 2, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the municipal corporation of Ogden, Utah Territory, is hereby authorized to assume a bonded indebtedness, including all existing liabilities, equal to per cent. of the value of the taxable property within said corporation, such value to be ascertained by the last assessment for municipal taxation, notwithstanding the provisions of section 4 of an act entitled 'An act to prohibit the passage of local or special laws in the Territories of the United States, to limit Territorial indebtedness, and for other purposes,' approved July 13, 1896."

And, second, add at the end of the bill the following:
"And provided further, That this act shall be of no effect until the proposition to increase the indebtedness of said city shall have been submitted to and adopted by the lawful voters thereof at an election for that purpose to be held after the passage of this act and on such day as the mayor and city council of said city may appoint: And provided further, That the amount and purpose for which such bonds are to be issued shall be distinctly stated in the proclamation calling such election."

And as so amended your committee recommend that the bill do pass.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.
The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.
Mr. DORSEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FUNDING ACT OF ARIZONA.

Mr. STRUBLE. I now call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 3365) approving, with amendments, the funding act of Arizona.
The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of the revised statutes of Arizona of 1887, known as "Title XXXI—Funding," be, and is hereby, approved and confirmed, with the following amendments, subject to future Territorial legislation. The act as amended shall read as follows:

"TITLE XXXI—FUNDING AND LOAN.

"CHAPTER I.

"TERRITORIAL, COUNTY, MUNICIPAL, AND SCHOOL DISTRICT INDEBTEDNESS.

"PAR. 2039. (Sec. 1.) For the purpose of liquidating and providing for the payment of the outstanding and existing indebtedness of the Territory of Arizona, and such future indebtedness as may be or is now authorized by law, the governor of the said Territory, together with the Territorial auditor and Territorial secretary, and their successors in office, shall constitute a board of commissioners, to be styled the loan commissioners of the Territory of Arizona, and shall have and exercise the powers and perform the duties hereinafter provided.

"PAR. 2040. (Sec. 2.) It shall be, and is hereby, declared the duty of the loan commissioners to provide for the payment of the existing Territorial indebtedness due and to become due or that is now or may be hereafter authorized by law, and for the purpose of paying, redeeming, and refunding all or any part of the principal and interest, or either, of the existing and subsisting Territorial legal indebtedness, and also that which may at any time become due, or is now or may be hereafter authorized by law, the said commissioners shall, from time to time, issue negotiable coupon bonds of this Territory when the same can be done at a lower rate of interest and to the profit and benefit of the Territory.

"PAR. 2041. (Sec. 3.) Said bonds shall be issued as near as practicable in denominations of $1,000, but bonds of a lower denomination, not less than $250, may be issued when necessary. Said bonds shall bear interest at a rate to be fixed by said loan commissioners, but in no case to exceed 5 per cent. per annum, which interest shall be paid in gold coin, or its equivalent in lawful money of the United States, on the 15th day of January in each year, at the office of the Territorial treasurer, or at such bank in the city of New York, in the State of New York, or in the city of San Francisco, in the State of California, or such place as may be designated by said loan commissioners, at the option of the purchaser of said bonds, the place of payment being mentioned in said bonds. The principal of said bonds shall be made payable in lawful money of the United States fifty years after the date of their issue.

"They shall bear the date of their issue, state when, where, and to whom payable, rate of interest, and when and where payable, and shall be signed by said loan commissioners, and shall have the seal of the Territory affixed thereto, and countersigned by the Territorial treasurer, and bear his official seal, and shall be registered by the Territorial auditor in a book to be kept by him for the purpose, which shall state amount sold for, or if exchanged, for what; and the faith and credit of the Territory is hereby pledged for the payment of said bonds and the interest accruing thereon, as herein provided.

"PAR. 2042. (Sec. 4.) Coupons for the interest shall be attached to each bond, so that they may be removed without injury to or mutilation of bond. They shall be consecutively numbered, and bear the same number of the bond to which they are attached, and shall be signed by the Territorial treasurer.

"The said coupons shall cover the interest expressed in said bond from the date of issue until paid; but in no case shall bonds bear interest nor shall any interest be paid thereon for any time before their delivery to the purchaser, as hereinafter provided.

"PAR. 2043. (Sec. 5.) Whenever the said loan commissioners may be authorized by law to issue bonds or shall have decided to refund or redeem all or any part of the existing indebtedness of this Territory, they shall direct the Territorial treasurer to advertise for a sale of the bonds to be issued for that purpose, by causing a notice of such sale to be published for the period of one month in some daily newspaper published at the capital of the Territory, and at least one insertion in a newspaper published in the city of New York, in the State of New York, and in the city of San Francisco, in the State of California, or such other places as the loan commissioners may name; such notice shall specify the amount of bonds to be sold, the place, day, and hour of sale, and that bids will be received by said treasurer for the purchase of said bonds within one month from the expiration of said publication; and at the place and time named in said notice the said treasurer and loan commissioners shall open all bids received by him and shall award the purchase of said bonds, or any part thereof, to the bidder or bidders therefor bidding the lowest rate of interest: Provided, That said loan commissioners shall have the right to reject any and all bids: And provided further, That they may refuse to make any award unless sufficient security shall be furnished by the bidder or bidders for the compliance with the terms of their bids.

"PAR. 2044. (Sec. 6.) When the sale of said bonds shall be awarded by the loan commissioners, they shall provide and procure the necessary bonds as in this act provided, and any expense incurred by them therefor, for the publication of said notices, costs of remitting funds for the payment of interest or money on said bonds, and all other necessary incidental expenses under the provisions of this act shall be paid out of the general fund of said Territory, upon the order of the Territorial auditor, countersigned by the governor; and a sum of money sufficient to cover said costs and expenses is hereby appropriated out of said fund.

"They shall, from time to time, after signing said bonds, deliver them to the Territorial treasurer, taking his receipt therefor, and charge him therewith. The said treasurer shall give to the Territory of Arizona an additional official bond, with two or more sureties, in a sum equal to the amount of bonds delivered to him by the said loan commissioners, which bond shall be approved by the governor and deposited and filed with the secretary of the Territory, and recorded by him in a book to be kept for that purpose. And the said treasurer shall stand charged upon his official bond for the faithful performance of the duties required of him under this act.

"PAR. 2045. (Sec. 7.) The Territorial treasurer shall sell said bonds for cash, or exchange them for any of the indebtedness for the redemption of which they were so issued, but in no case shall said bonds be sold or exchanged for less than their face or par value and the accrued interest at the time of disposal, nor must any indebtedness be redeemed at more than its face value and any interest that may be due thereon.

"That said treasurer shall indorse, by writing or stamping in ink on the face of the paper evidencing the indebtedness received by him in exchange for said bonds the time when and the amount for which exchanged.

"PAR. 2046. (Sec. 8.) Moneys received by said treasurer shall be applied by him to the redemption of the indebtedness for the redemption of which bonds were issued, and the treasurer shall give notice, as is provided by law in case of payment and redemption of Territorial warrants, of his readiness to redeem such indebtedness, and thereafter interest on all such indebtedness due and outstanding shall cease.

"Before any such indebtedness shall be paid the Territorial auditor shall indorse on each certificate the amount due thereon, and shall write across the face of each the date of its surrender and the name of the person surrendering, and shall keep proper record thereof.

"PAR. 2047. (Sec. 9.) There shall be levied annually upon the taxable property in this Territory, and in addition to the levy for other authorized taxes, a sufficient sum to pay the interest of all bonds issued and disposed of in pursuance of the provisions of this act, to be placed in the Territorial treasury, in the fund to be known as the 'interest fund.' And fifty years after such bonds shall have been issued such additional amount shall be levied annually as will pay 10 per cent. of the total amount issued until all the bonds issued under the provisions of this act are paid and discharged.

"The Territorial board of equalization, or, on their failure, the Territorial auditor, shall determine the rate of tax to be levied in the different counties in the Territory to carry out the provisions of this act, and shall certify the same to the board of supervisors in each county and to the municipal or school authorities; and the said board of supervisors, or authorities, are hereby directed and required to enter such rate on their assessment rolls in the same manner and with the same effect as is provided by law in relation to other Territorial, county, municipal, and school taxes. Every tax levied under the provisions of authority of this act is hereby made a lien against the property assessed, which lien shall attach on the first Monday in March in each year, and shall not be satisfied or removed until such tax has been paid.

"All moneys derived from taxes authorized by the provisions of this act shall be paid into the Territorial treasury, and shall be applied:

"First. To the payment of the interest on the bonds issued hereunder.

"Second. To the payment of the principal of such bonds: Provided, That all moneys remaining in the interest fund after the payment of the interest in each year, and all moneys remaining in the 'redemption fund' after all said bonds shall have been paid and discharged, shall be transferred by the Territorial treasurer to the Territorial 'general fund.'

"PAR. 2048. (Sec. 10.) Whenever, after the expiration of the fifty years from the date of issuance of any bonds under this act, there remains after the payment of the interest, as provided in the preceding section, a surplus of $10,000 or more, it shall be the duty of the Territorial treasurer to advertise, as in the manner of advertising by the loan commissioners for bids for sale of bonds, which advertisement shall state the amount of money in the said redemption fund, and the number of bonds, numbering them in the order of their issuance, commencing at the lowest number then outstanding which such fund is set apart to pay and discharge; and if such bonds so numbered in such advertisements shall not be presented for payment and cancellation at the expiration of such publication, then such fund shall remain in the treasury to discharge such bonds whenever presented, but they shall draw no interest after the expiration of such publication. Before any such bonds shall be paid they shall be presented to the Territorial auditor, who shall indorse on each bond the amount due thereon and shall write across the face of each bond the date of its surrender and the name of the person surrendering. The Territorial auditor shall keep a record of all bonds issued and disposed of by the Territorial treasurer, showing their number, rate of interest, date, and amount of sale, when, where, and to whom payable, and, if exchanged, for what, and, when presented for redemption, the date, amount due thereon, and person surrendering.

"The boards of supervisors of the counties, the municipal and school authorities, are hereby authorized and directed to report to the loan commissioners of the Territory their bonded and outstanding indebtedness, and said loan commissioners may, on written demand, require an official report from the board of supervisors of counties, the municipal or school authorities, of their bonded and outstanding indebtedness, and said loan commissioners shall provide for the redeeming or refunding of the county, municipal, and school district indebtedness, upon the official demand of said authorities, in the same manner as other Territorial indebtedness, and they shall issue bonds for any indebtedness now allowed, or that may be hereafter allowed by law, to said county, municipality, or school district upon official demand by said authorities; the county, municipality, or school district to pay into the Territorial treasury, in addition to all other taxes authorized by law, such amounts as may be by the Territorial board of equalization, or on their failure by the Territorial auditor for the payment of the principal of the bonds issued in redemption, refunding, or other bonds issued to such county, municipality, or school district when the same shall become due, and, in addition, a rate of interest paid by the Territory on such bonds.

"PAR. 2049. (Sec. 11.) When the treasurer pays or redeems any indebtedness he shall indorse, by writing or stamping in ink, on the face of the paper evidencing such indebtedness so paid or redeemed, the words 'redeemed and canceled,' with the date of cancellation. He shall keep a full and particular account and record of all his proceedings under this act and of the bonds redeemed and surrendered, and he shall transmit to the governor an abstract of all his proceedings under this act with his annual report, to be by the governor laid before the Legislature at its meeting. All books and papers pertaining to the matter provided in this act shall at all times be open to the inspection of the party interested, or the governor, or a committee of either branch of the Legislature, or a joint committee of both.

"PAR. 2050. (Sec. 12.) It shall be the duty of the Territorial treasurer to pay the interest on said bonds when the same falls due out of the said interest fund, if sufficient; and, if said fund be not sufficient, then to pay the deficiency out of the general fund: Provided, That the Territorial auditor shall first draw his warrant on the Territorial treasurer, payable to the order of said treasurer, for the amount of such deficiency, out of the general fund.

"PAR. 2051. (Sec. 13.) It shall be the duty of said loan commissioners to make a full report of all their proceedings had under the provisions of this act to the governor on or before the 1st day of January of each year, and said reports shall be transmitted by the governor to the Territorial Legislative Assembly.

"PAR. 2052. (Sec. 14.) No bond issued under the provisions of this act shall be taxed within this Territory."

The committee recommend the adoption of the following amendments:

Strike out, in lines 83 and 84 of section 5, the words "or such other places as the loan commissioners may name."

Also, insert in section 9, after the word "discharged," in line 155, the words "Nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent the Legislature of Arizona from creating a sinking fund during the life of said bonds for their redemption at maturity."

Strike out in the same section, after the word "interest," in line 190, the words "in each year."

Also, insert in lines 228 and 229, after the words "may be," the word "directed," and in line 230, after the word "auditor," the words "to be levied;" so that it will read:

"Such amounts as may be directed by the Territorial board of equalization, or, on their failure, by the Territorial auditor, to be levied for the payment of the principal of the bonds issued in redemption, refunding."

Also, add new sections 15 and 16, as follows:

"SEC. 15. That nothing in this act shall be construed to authorize any future increase of any indebtedness in excess of the limit prescribed by the 'Harrison act.' Provided, however, That the present existing and outstanding indebtedness, together with such warrants as may be issued for the necessary and current expenses of carrying on Territorial, county, municipal, and school government for the year ending December 31, 1890, may also be funded and bonds issued for the redemption thereof; and thereafter no warrants, certificates, or other evidences of indebtedness shall be allowed to issue or be legal where the same is in excess of the limit prescribed by the 'Harrison act.'"

"SEC. 16. That all acts or parts of acts in conflict with this act are hereby repealed."

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the report accompanying this be read.

Mr. STRUBLE. I will yield to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. DORSEY.]

The report (by Mr. DORSEY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Territories, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3365) approving with amendments the funding act of the Territory of Arizona, having considered the same, report as follows:

The assessed valuation of the Territory of Arizona is, in round numbers, $30,000,000, and the indebtedness of the Territory, counties, cities, and school districts, about $3,000,000, or 10 per cent. of the assessed valuation.

The rate of interest on the present indebtedness is not less than 6 per cent., and much of it 10 per cent. per annum, the average being about 8 per cent.

This high rate of interest has been paid regularly, and all the bonds, Territorial, county, city, and school, are held at or above par, and they were all issued for indebtedness created prior to the Harrison act. At the time said act went into effect the Territorial and county treasuries were without funds, and continued without funds until the next taxes were paid. In order to carry on government it became a necessity to create debt, and this debt was placed in the form of warrants bearing 10 per cent. interest. Notwithstanding the high rate of interest these warrants have never had a good commercial standing, on account of their dubious legal status. It is therefore a fact that the running expenses of the Territory, including counties, cities, and school districts, are largely increased by the depreciated value of warrants and the high rate of interest they bear. The Territory and many of the counties have each year fallen a little behind the preceding year in meeting their expenses, and it is therefore an absolute necessity to afford them relief.

The committee believe that a Territorial bond, with the long time proposed and having the approval of Congress, can be sold at par, bearing a less rate of interest than can be sold in any other way, and thereby secure for the Territory the much-needed relief and the saving of $100,000 annually.

The provisions of the bill for carrying the same into effect have been carefully considered by the committee and are found to be ample, and that, except to legalize the indebtedness, there is no responsibility attached to the United States.

The time within which indebtedness may be funded is placed at December 31, 1890, when the taxes are due and payable. From and after that date there will be cash on hand with which to meet the current expenses of the Territory.

The committee are unanimously of opinion that the Territory of Arizona is entitled to relief, and therefore report back the accompanying bill with amendment, and recommend that it do pass.

The SPEAKER. The first question is on agreeing to the amendments reported by the Committee on the Territories.

The amendments were adopted.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the attention of the gentleman from Arizona for a moment, and also the gentleman from Nebraska in charge of this bill. The time fixed during which these bonds shall run is fifty years, with interest at 5 per cent. I think the gentleman reporting the bill, the gentleman from Nebraska, as well as the gentleman representing the Territory, will agree to the proposition to reduce the period to twenty years, with this provision added:

Provided, That said Territory reserves the right to redeem at par any of said bonds, in their numerical order, at any time after ten years after the date thereof.

That would make the bonds redeemable in ten years and payable in twenty, and it seems to me that it is not the policy of any of the Territories or the States of this country, or ought not to be, to create a longer debt than that period. I think this generation should meet the obligations it sees proper to create, especially in the form of public indebtedness.

I therefore move, with the concurrence of the gentleman from Arizona, to strike out "fifty" wherever it occurs in the bill, as fixing the date that these bonds shall run, and insert "twenty years," and add also the additional section which I have suggested.

Mr. DORSEY. If the gentleman from Arizona assents to the proposition of the gentleman from Indiana, I am sure I have no objection; but I desire to say that this bill has been carefully considered by the Committee on the Territories in both the Senate and the House. We have had frequent conversations with officers of the Territory and also with prominent citizens, and the bill is draughted in accordance with their wishes and desires. They desired that the Territory should have the right to fund its outstanding warrants in long-time bonds.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out "fifty" wherever it occurs in the bill.

The SPEAKER. Strike out "fifty" and substitute "twenty," as the Chair understands the amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. That would come in the additional section to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the remainder of the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add as an additional section: "Said Territory reserves the right to redeem at par any of said bonds in their numerical order at any time after ten years after the date thereof."

Mr. SMITH, of Arizona. That amendment, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me, should come in, on the bill I have before me, on page 3, lines 48, 49, and 50, inclusive. It now reads—

The principal of said bonds shall be made payable in lawful money of the United States fifty years after the date of their issue.

Now, the amendment of the gentleman is to strike out "fifty," where it occurs there, and insert "twenty." I think that the amendment is a good one and ought to be adopted.

Mr. DORSEY. That is the proper place for it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Wherever it is appropriate—

Mr. DORSEY. And the same amendment, to strike out "fifty" and insert "twenty," should also come in on page 7, line 151.

Mr. SMITH, of Arizona. Instead of the additional section proposed by the gentleman from Indiana, that amendment should come in after line 50, I think.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendments of the gentleman from Indiana.

The amendments of Mr. HOLMAN were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DORSEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ADDITIONAL JUSTICE FOR THE SUPREME COURT OF WYOMING.

Mr. STRUBLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 967) providing for an additional justice for the supreme court of Wyoming, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think that unanimous consent ought to be entertained during this hour.

Mr. STRUBLE. Then I have no other business from the Committee on the Territories.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. BOWDEN, for the 17th and 18th instant, on account of important business.

To Mr. McCLANNEY, for eight days, on account of important business.

TRANSFER OF REVENUE-CUTTER SERVICE.

The SPEAKER. The Committee on Naval Affairs was passed by consent, and will now be called.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Committee on Naval Affairs I call up the bill (H. R. 6944) to transfer the revenue-cutter service from the Treasury Department to the Navy Department.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint, on or before the 1st day of July, 1890, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, all the officers of the revenue-cutter service (commissioned under section 2751, Revised Statutes of the United States) to be officers in the United States Navy, in the grades corresponding to their present relative rank, as follows: Captains revenue-cutter service to be lieutenant-commanders United States Navy; first lieutenants revenue-cutter service to be lieutenants, senior grade, United States Navy; second lieutenants revenue-cutter service to be lieutenants, junior grade, United States Navy; second lieutenants revenue-cutter service to be lieutenants, junior grade, United States Navy; third lieutenants revenue-cutter service to be ensigns United States Navy; chief engineers revenue-cutter service to be passed assistant engineers United States Navy, with the relative rank of lieutenant, senior grade; first assistant engineers revenue-cutter service to be passed assistant engineers United States Navy, with the relative rank of lieutenant, junior grade, and second assistant engineers revenue-cutter service to be assistant engineers United States Navy, with the relative rank of ensign. That the officers of the revenue-cutter service transferred to the Navy by this act shall take rank in the Navy according to the date of their commissions therein, and their seniority among themselves shall be determined by the date of their commissions in the revenue-cutter service; that the officers so transferred shall receive the pay and emoluments pertaining to their rank in the Navy; that they shall be governed by and subject to all laws and regulations for the government of the Navy, except in such particulars as may conflict with the provisions of this act; and that the number of officers so transferred shall be a permanent addition to that now allowed by law in the Navy, in the several grades hereinbefore mentioned.

SEC. 2. That on or before the said date the Secretary of the Treasury shall transfer from the Treasury Department to the Navy Department all vessels, with all their appurtenances, and all depots, stores, and other articles in any way belonging to the revenue-cutter service, and said vessels shall thereafter form a part of the regular naval force of the United States; and any revenue vessels hereafter built shall be constructed, and all repairs to existing vessels shall be made, under the authority and according to designs of the Navy Department; and the offices of superintendent of construction and consulting engineer and every office appertaining thereto, the office of instructor of cadets, and of the surgeons who serve during the practice cruises with cadets, are hereby abolished.

SEC. 3. That the number of enlisted men now allowed by law in the Navy shall be increased by so many as may be necessary to man the said vessels according to the regulations and allowances of the Navy; and the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to employ a sufficient number of pilots for the proper conduct of the service.

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of the Navy shall at all times, upon the requisition of the Secretary of the Treasury, assign suitable vessels, with the proper complement of officers and crews, to perform the duty now performed by the revenue-cutter service in such ports on the sea and Gulf coasts, on the lakes and elsewhere, as the Secretary of the Treasury may deem necessary, the duties of such vessels, their officers and crews, in relation to the protection of the revenue, to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and their operations and movements to be controlled and directed by him precisely as has heretofore been in the revenue-cutter service. All officers so assigned shall be deemed officers of the customs during the period of such assignment and shall be clothed with the authority and exercise the powers now or heretofore pertaining to revenue-cutter officers.

SEC. 5. That all line officers transferred in pursuance of this act from the revenue-cutter service shall be considered out of the line of promotion upon attaining the rank of lieutenant-commander United States Navy; and all engineers so transferred shall be likewise considered out of the line of promotion upon attaining the rank of passed assistant engineer United States Navy, with the relative rank of lieutenant, senior grade; that whenever a vacancy shall occur from any cause whatever among the transferred officers it shall be filled by an officer so transferred, according to seniority, subject to the provisions herein-after contained in relation to filling such vacancies, such officer having successfully passed the prescribed examination for the grade to which he is promoted, but no officer so transferred shall be promoted to vacancies occurring among officers not so transferred. Whenever a vacancy occurs at the foot of the list of the transferred officers, it shall be deemed an ordinary vacancy in the naval establishment, and be filled according to the law and custom of the Navy, and the Secretary of the Navy may detail any officer of the proper grade to do duty in the vacancy so occurring (and such vacancies shall be filled, and details made in like manner until the list of transferred officers shall be exhausted), and thereafter the Secretary of the Navy may detail any officer to perform revenue-marine duty in the same manner as details are now made for other special duty. But the Secretary of the Navy shall not detail for the revenue-cutter service, nor continue therein, any officer who shall not be satisfactory to the Secretary of the Treasury, nor shall he detail for such service other than transferred officers, so long as any such are available.

SEC. 6. That the standard of examination for the promotion of officers transferred by this act shall be that now in force for the revenue-cutter service, and such examinations shall be made by boards composed of such transferred officers, such examinations to continue so long as any transferred line officers remain below the grade of lieutenant-commander United States Navy, or any transferred engineer below the rank of passed assistant engineer with the relative rank of lieutenant, senior grade, United States Navy.

SEC. 7. That section 1445 of the Revised Statutes shall be held not to apply to the officers transferred from the revenue-cutter service to the Navy by this act, but such officers shall receive the full benefit of sections 1443 and 1444, Revised Statutes of the United States, their rank notwithstanding, when they have performed the prescribed service of forty years or reached the prescribed age of sixty-two years, and officers so transferred shall be credited with the sea-service and other duties performed by them in the service of the United States, and shall receive all the benefits of such duty and of their service in the same manner as if they had been officers of the Navy during such service, without regard to the date of their commissions in the Navy.

SEC. 8. That no officer transferred as hereinbefore provided shall be required to serve in vessels doing other than revenue-cutter duty, except in case of war, and all officers attached to vessels performing revenue duty shall be considered as on sea service.

SEC. 9. That cadets of the revenue-marine service who shall have completed their probationary course when this act shall take effect shall, upon passing the prescribed examination, receive their commissions as ensigns in the Navy, but shall be considered in all respects as officers transferred by this act, and cadets who have completed one year of the probationary course upon the passage of this act shall be admitted to the Naval Academy in the fourth class, after passing a suitable examination, or, if they so prefer, after one additional year's probationary course, to be served on board a revenue-cutter, upon passing the examination for revenue-marine officers, as prescribed in section 6 of this act, be transferred to the Navy as provided above for revenue cadets who have finished their probationary course, and shall thereupon be held to be transferred officers and ineligible for promotion above the grade of lieutenant-commander, and no appointment shall hereafter be made to the grade of revenue cadet.

SEC. 10. That all contracts entered into by the Secretary of the Treasury for the maintenance of the revenue marine, or for the repair or construction of the vessels thereof, in force on the date of this act, becoming operative, shall remain in force in the same manner as if made by the Secretary of the Navy in accordance with the provisions of this act.

SEC. 11. That every officer not on the transferred list detailed for revenue-marine duty shall, within three months after such detail, pass an examination in the laws relating to his duties as an officer of the customs, according to the standard now in force for the revenue-cutters service.

SEC. 12. That all acts or portions of acts conflicting with or inconsistent with this act be, and they are hereby, repealed.

During the reading of the bill,

Mr. SPINOLA said: Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry. How does this bill come here at this time this morning?

The SPEAKER. It comes before the House by being called up by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] in behalf of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. SPINOLA. I wish to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. Amendments are not in order until after the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed and concluded.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order against this bill that it increases the expenditures of the Government in excess of those now contemplated, and therefore would be a charge on the Treasury and hence obnoxious to the rule governing the consideration of bills in the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Tennessee point out any portion of the bill that is obnoxious to the rule?

Mr. MCADOO. If the gentleman from Tennessee will permit me, I will state to him that it simply provides that the revenue-marine service shall be transferred from the Treasury to the Navy Department. It does not increase the expenditures of that establishment, as I understand it, being a member of the committee. It was jointly recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of the Navy that this branch of the service should simply be transferred.

Mr. McMILLIN. My understanding of the bill is that it increases the compensation of officers in the service.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. Speaker, I will explain the bill to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. McMILLIN. I will hear the statement of the gentleman from Massachusetts, reserving the point of order.

Mr. LODGE. The report is rather a long one—

The SPEAKER. Can the gentleman from Tennessee point out to the Chair any ground in the provisions of the bill for the point which he makes?

Mr. McMILLIN. I sent for a copy of the bill when it was being read, but I did not get a copy of it until now, and I have not had time to find the particular provision.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will be obliged if the gentleman will point out the ground on which he makes the point of order.

Mr. McMILLIN. I will ask the gentleman in charge of the bill if that is not the fact?

Mr. LODGE. What?

Mr. McMILLIN. That it increases the compensation of certain officers.

Mr. LODGE. It decreases the expenditures of the service by $138,000.

Mr. McMILLIN. But it increases the compensation of officers embraced in the bill, does it not?

Mr. LODGE. Yes; it increases the compensation as they are taken into the Navy.

Mr. BOUTELLE. But it decreases the expenditures $138,000.

Mr. McMILLIN. But if it increases the compensation of any officer of the Government, Mr. Speaker, it would make it obnoxious to the rule.

Mr. LODGE. This bill makes no appropriation of any kind. It simply transfers this service to the Navy.

Mr. McMILLIN. But it is obnoxious to the rule because of the fact that it increases the compensation of certain officers, and is thereby made a charge upon the Treasury.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. Speaker, this bill transfers the officers of the revenue-marine service to the naval service of the United States. In doing that it is necessary to give them naval rank. They are given a relative rank to that of the Navy while in the service. In the Navy they are given actual rank, and the actual rank carries with it a slight increase of pay in such cases; but the consolidation of the service effects a saving of $138,000 annually. That is the estimate. I do not see how this increase of pay which arises from the change of rank and which involves no appropriation of money, but, on the contrary, decreases the expenses of the Government, would be obnoxious to the rule.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Can the gentleman explain how that is?

Mr. McMILLIN. The bill may be a very proper one. I have not had opportunity to examine it, but I must say, from the statement of the gentleman from Massachusetts, it is clearly obnoxious to the second subsection of the first paragraph of Rule XIII, which provides:

A House Calendar, to which shall be referred all bills of a public character not raising revenue nor directly or indirectly appropriating money or property.

The increase of the compensation of a single officer of the Government is such an additional charge on the Treasury as would make it obnoxious to the rule. I think there can be no doubt about its effect, and it must take its place for consideration in another way and on another Calendar. As I have said, this may be a very proper bill. It is a very long bill, and I was unable to get hold of it until this morning; but I take it that it is obnoxious to the rule on the gentleman's own statement.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I would suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee that this bill does not directly or indirectly appropriate money.

Mr. McMILLIN. Is not the salary, fixed by an officer whom the President may appoint and whom the Senate confirms, a charge upon the Treasury? It transfers them; it changes their rank; and, as stated by the gentleman from Massachusetts, it increases the pay they are to receive.

Mr. BOUTELLE. But in other respects the expenditures are very largely decreased, so that the expenditures on the whole service would be $138,000 less than now.

Mr. McMILLIN. That is a matter of argument.

Mr. BOUTELLE. It is not a matter of argument; it is a matter of financial fact.

Mr. McMILLIN. The bill is on the wrong Calendar, and it can not be considered in this hour. I might vote for the bill if it was up for consideration in its regular order.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I do not understand that the merits of the bill are under discussion, but I think that the bill is on the proper Calendar.

Mr. McMILLIN. It increases the compensation of officers of the Government, and hence is obnoxious to the rule.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The fact is that it decreases the expenditures.

Mr. LODGE. It does not appropriate a dollar.

Mr. McMILLIN. It does appropriate a dollar for these officers. They are provided for to-day in the appropriation bill as officials of the revenue-marine service, under the Secretary of the Treasury, in the Treasury Department.

A MEMBER. But it reduces the salary.

Mr. McMILLIN. No; the gentleman is wrong.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The gentleman assumes that the effect of this bill is an increased charge upon the public Treasury. It has not that effect. That is not the fact. The effect of the bill is to increase in certain instances the compensation of some of these officers; but the general effect of the entire measure is to reduce the expenditures now made for the carrying on of this service. In other words, it does not appropriate money for any purpose, but provides for the reorganization of a certain branch of the public service in a manner that will reduce the amount to be appropriated and the amount of expenditures by something like $138,000, as near as can be estimated.

A MEMBER. But in certain instances it increases the pay.

Mr. LODGE. I wish to call attention to this matter of the appropriation of money out of the Treasury. This bill authorizes the President to appoint under this act, and gives him the power, in other words, to transfer these officers to a certain rank in the Navy. Instead of making an increased charge upon the Treasury it reduces the charge upon the Treasury.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Can you explain that?

Mr. LODGE. Why, certainly. The estimates are all in the back part of the report, if you will examine it. They are given in Appendix A.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. I have not heard of it until this morning.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman will allow me. The effect of the bill may be to reduce the charges made; they may or may not. But that is immaterial. It does provide that the President is authorized to appoint certain officers in the Navy. Now, then, that does make a charge upon the Treasury. It does require an appropriation, and it does not matter, so far as the rule is concerned, to say that it would retrench expenditures and that it would make a less charge than is now made.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to call attention of the House to the way in which the point of order acts for economy; that in order to throw this out of the Calendar and out of its place we refuse to make a net saving of $138,000 a year by making the point of order on a small increase in the officers' salaries. And I do not see how that can be considered as a charge on the Treasury in view of the fact that the increase in the salaries is compensated by the reduction in the total expenditures to the extent of more than $130,000.

Mr. BOUTELLE. This bill might properly be designated a bill to reduce expenditures for the maintenance of the revenue service. That would be an entirely proper title to that bill, and under that title I should think it would go to the House Calendar.

Mr. McMILLIN. But as to every officer that is appointed under this bill, his salary is a charge upon the Government.

Mr. BOUTELLE. But he is a charge upon the Government, and it is simply a transfer that is provided for by this bill.

Mr. HOPKINS. But under this bill he becomes an increased charge.

Mr. McMILLIN. Yes; an increased charge according to the confession of the gentleman in charge of the bill [Mr. LODGE].

Mr. BOUTELLE. There are some increases, but the aggregate effect is a decrease.

Mr. McMILLIN. There are certain increases, and if I understand the bill correctly it retires officers of a certain age who would not otherwise be retired, and in that way the bill makes a charge upon the Treasury. I may, however, be in error on that point.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. You certainly are, because if not retired they are on full pay, while if retired they would receive only 75 per cent. of full pay.

Mr. HOPKINS. But 75 per cent. of the pay they would receive under this bill may be more than full pay would be under existing law.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. But it so happens that it is not.

Mr. SPINOLA. If I understood correctly the statement of the gentleman in charge of the bill [Mr. LODGE] that the pay of a certain class of officers is increased by it, then certainly that increase must be a charge upon the Treasury in addition to that which it is now called upon to meet. If that is the fact, then certainly the bill is open to the point of order under the rule. I do not see how gentlemen can meet or avoid the point in view of the declarations and admissions made by the chairman of the committee, who has charge of the bill, that, as I understand, the increases in the compensation of officers will amount to some thousands of dollars.

Mr. BOUTELLE. You do not decide what Calendar a bill shall go to because of a single paragraph in it.

Mr. SPINOLA. But a single paragraph may provide for taking a certain amount of money from the Treasury, and that would bring the bill under the rule.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The bill only provides for the transfer of officers from one salary-roll to another.

Mr. SPINOLA. Yes; but at increased compensation.

Mr. BOUTELLE. In some cases.

Mr. SPINOLA. Very well. That makes an additional charge upon the Treasury, and there is no way to avoid the point, that I can see, except to allow the bill to take its regular order.

Several MEMBERS. Let us have a ruling on the point of order.

Mr. SPINOLA. I believe I have the floor, Mr. Speaker. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SPINOLA] has the floor and is addressing the Chair upon the point of order.

Mr. SPINOLA. Certainly, sir; and I do not propose to surrender it until 2 o'clock.

A MEMBER. That I should call a dilatory proceeding. [Laughter.] Mr. SPINOLA. No, sir; and I do not propose to be long-winded either, but to take the thing as coolly, quietly, and peaceably as possible, and to see that no injustice is done to the Treasury of the United States. [Laughter.]

Mr. BOUTELLE. I am glad to see how anxiously and earnestly the gentleman [Mr. SPINOLA] is laboring to get that provision upon the bill which he desires adopted on behalf of the pilots.

Mr. SPINOLA. Certainly, sir. My amendment, when the time comes, I shall ask all the members of this House to vote for, and they will do so, for the reason that it will be a just amendment, in the interest of a most worthy class of men. [Laughter.]

Mr. BOUTELLE. Well, let us go ahead now and we will soon reach it.

Mr. SPINOLA. Oh, yes, you want to go ahead, but you will not take my amendment, and that is the reason you must come under the rule. [Laughter.]

THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE KELLEY, OF PENNSYLVANIA.

The SPEAKER. The hour having arrived for executing the special order of the House, the Clerk will read the order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Saturday, March 15, at 2 o'clock, afternoon, be fixed for paying tribute to the memory of Hon. William D. Kelley, late a member of the House of Representatives in the Fifty-first Congress from the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, biography of eminent men who have achieved distinction in life is a great teacher and holds out to youth struggling against adverse circumstances a hope of ultimate success.

William Darrah Kelley, born April 12, 1814, in the city of Philadelphia, died at twenty minutes after 6 o'clock of the evening of January 9, 1890, at the Riggs House, in the city of Washington, D. C., having reached almost seventy-six years of age, from his early youth until his death, while a member of the House of Representatives of the United States, is another illustration in his successful career of what can be accomplished by devotion to study stimulated by a proper ambition.

Young Kelley, thrown upon his own resources in his boyhood, was at school until nearly his twelfth year and was fortunate in receiving a good English education. This was the basis of his fondness for study. He began then to earn his own living by going into a store as errand boy and by reading proof in a printing office. His father, who died when he was but two years of age, was a widely known and successful jeweler, but the shrinkage in all business pursuits following the war of 1812 brought to him financial disaster. The son, feeling the necessity of adopting some permanent occupation, concluded to learn the business his father had followed, and by thirteen years of age had apprenticed himself for seven years to a firm of jewelers. Having completed his apprenticeship he went in a little while to the city of Boston, and worked there several years as a journeyman.

Returning to Philadelphia in his early manhood he commenced the study of law, and at twenty-seven years of age was admitted to the bar. With a matured intellect and with close habits of study he soon became prominent as a lawyer, and, attracting by his rapid progress in his profession the attention of the governor of the Commonwealth, he was appointed prosecuting attorney of the city and county of Philadelphia, and held that office a second time. In 1846, at thirty-two years of age, he was commissioned by appointment a judge of the court of common pleas. In 1851, the judiciary of Pennsylvania having become elective, he was chosen by the people to the same court for a term of ten years, remaining a judge about half his elective term, he having served in that capacity about ten years in all.

He was nominated in 1856 for the House of Representatives, and then resigned his judgeship. His resignation enabled him to take part with propriety in the interesting canvass of that year, presenting to the people with great power and eloquence the principles of Republicanism upon which he sought to be elected, and urging with force and vigor the election of General John C. Frémont. The campaign ended in the defeat of the judge for Congress and also of the distinguished candidate for the Presidency.

He had won distinction upon the bench, and, coming to the bar again, his knowledge of the law and his impressiveness of speech brought to him at once a large clientele, both as counselor and advocate.

Taking hours from his professional work, he was prominent in the lecture field upon many of the subjects, irrespective of politics, of that day which called to the rostrum many cultured men. An errand boy, a printer's proof-reader, a jeweler's apprentice, a workman at his trade, a lawyer, a prosecutor of the pleas, a judge, and a lecturer, he never failed of success, for he never ceased to devote himself to study. His temperament was such that he must work; his unwearying eagerness for learning and his determination to succeed elevated him in the estimation of the people and made his wonderful career in public life a historical certainty.

My acquaintance with my late colleague commenced when he was filling the position of prosecuting attorney. As a student at law I was frequently a listener in the courts and the quarter sessions and over and over again gave me opportunities of hearing him in the trials of criminals of all grades. I was impressed with his consummate skill in the examination of witnesses, his logical analysis of evidence, and his persuasive power of presenting cases to juries. As I look back upon these earlier years of his professional life, the Philadelphia bar full of great lawyers, I can say that he was noted among them as already a distinguished leader.

Great questions were now agitating the public mind, and Judge Kelley naturally entered into their discussion. In the division of parties he had been a Democrat, but he differed with that party upon the issue of slavery and its extension. In his lectures before large assemblies he advocated freedom to all, and upon the stump as a candidate made himself most conspicuous as an orator and contributed in a great degree to the future success of the Republican party.

Elected to the House of Representatives in 1860 as a Republican, he was sworn in as a member of the Thirty-seventh Congress at the session called by President Lincoln July 4, 1861. He came to the performance of his duties fully equipped, for he had studied the principles of republican government. As a man of the people, he understood what was due to humanity. With a mind stored with knowledge acquired by study of the writings of the fathers of the Republic, he soon took rank with the great statesmen who welcomed him to a seat beside them in that eventful called session. Among them, as senior colleagues from Pennsylvania, were Thaddeus Stevens, Galusha A. Grow, James K. Moorhead, and Edward McPherson, all widely known throughout the country.

From other States were seated there JUSTIN S. MORRILL, WILLIAM S. HOLMAN, HENRY L. DAWES, John A. Logan, Schuyler Colfax, DANIEL W. VOORHEES, William Windom, Robert Mallory, John A. Bingham, Samuel S. Cox, Elihu B. Washburne, Clement L. Vallandigham, William A. Wheeler, Francis P. Blair, jr., Roscoe Conkling, George H. Pendleton, JAMES F. WILSON, Elijah Ward, who, with many others of distinction, composed that House of Representatives of the Thirty-seventh Congress. With its roll of only 181 members who took the oath of office, I believe it has never been surpassed, if ever equaled, in the number of men who already had impressed themselves upon the country for statesmanship or who subsequently, so many of them, rose to higher eminence in different branches of Government service.

Judge Kelley, for the first time in a representative position and finding himself surrounded by so many great men, but depending, as was his wont, upon his own ability, at once came almost to the fore front, and sustained himself well in that early day of his Congressional service. Soon he was acknowledged as fit to take a prominent part in the deliberations and debates of that stormy period. The great leader of Republicanism in the House of Representatives then was Thaddeus Stevens, who was, in my judgment, the greatest leader ever in Congressional life. In statesmanship, without detracting in the least from the reputation of others with whom it has been my good fortune to serve these many years in the House, I place him before them all. Now, in conscientiously considering where should stand upon the roll of leading members of Congress the name of my long-time colleague, Judge Kelley, I must inscribe it next to the great American commoner, Thaddeus Stevens.

This high position I give him I believe is due to him, for never in my Congressional acquaintance has any one excelled him in persistent acquisition of knowledge and in toiling without cessation through years as a Representative for the advancement of his country's interests. He never failed at any time earnestly to advance by legislation the improvement in circumstances of his own immediate constituents while never neglecting the people at large. So able in argument for the abolition of slavery, so patriotic in his teachings for the preservation of the Union, so convincing in speech for the system of protection to American industry that eulogy is exhausted. The Congressional Globe and the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in their pages contain an imperishable history of William D. Kelley as a Representative in Congress. He never spoke but to enlighten his hearers and the country. His eloquence upon this floor at times turned expected defeat into victory, and his voice, raised to accomplish something for the poor and distressed seeking individual legislation, rarely was in vain.

Judge Kelley had the confidence of President Lincoln and his Cabinet. He was frequently called upon by them during the four years of the rebellion for suggestions, and his broad views and his convictions of right many a time were concurred in by those distinguished men. His faculty of research, his extensive reading, his gift of a never-failing memory, his personal visitations to almost every part of our country in search of information, his journeyings in Europe, his contact with the great men here and in many foreign lands, taught him as few men have been taught. He gathered facts from every source and brought them into use with great effect upon all subjects upon which he wrote or spoke. This devotion to the acquisition of knowledge made him a statesman. Such, in my estimation, must be the manner of life of any one who wishes to accomplish statesmanship.

Upon the subject of protection, in my opinion, his acquaintance with its details was far beyond that of any of his associates in Congressional life, and was not surpassed, yes, not equaled, even by those from whom he first learned the principles of the system. Indeed, the tariff was his hobby above and beyond every other subject to which he turned his attention. What we owe to those who have hobbies! Knowledge would progress slowly were it not for the devotion of earnest men to the study of some one great subject and the promulgation of their researches to the world.

Notwithstanding the constant hourly and daily occupation of Judge Kelley in the duties of his representative life, he was prompted to take from his busy moments sufficient time to write and edit works upon the topics which engrossed his mind. Thus he gave to the public the stores of information his industry had accumulated, especially so upon the question of protection. To read his publications is to learn the soundness of a system which has given prosperity to our country and made us the chosen of the earth.

Did we ever realize that years were passing on in the life of our distinguished friend? Did we look upon him as one who was showing the advance of age and decreasing in physical strength or mental vigor? That graceful form, that lightness of step which all of us so often noticed as he crossed this floor, that bright and unclouded mind kept out of our thoughts even the idea that he had passed far beyond threescore years and ten. Not until a few months before his death could I, his intimate friend, I who saw him and conversed with him almost every day during the sessions of the Congresses in which we have served, observe any such decided change in his health as to give me undue alarm.

As late as the 13th day of last September, when he and I, in New York, as members of the funeral committee, followed to the grave our dear friend, Samuel S. Cox, his hope of active service in the Fifty-first Congress had not entirely departed. I saw him several times afterwards in Philadelphia; but still later, in an interview with him at the house of his daughter only a few days before he started for Washington to take his seat in the House, did I feel that he had lost strength, seemed discouraged, and that watchful care alone would enable him to undergo the never-ending anxieties which the session would bring upon him. Such a change in him between early in September and late in November last I could scarcely realize.

It was not until after the organization of the House that increasing physical weakness led him to decline serving upon the Committee of Ways and Means, of which he had once been chairman and had served so many years as one of its members. His friends noticed his depression of spirits; and, he having lost that natural buoyancy and liveliness which had ever made him a cheerful companion, their hearts began to fail them and they feared that he might not be long among them. A man whose patriotic ambition had given him years of honor was evidently lingering out but a few remaining days of life.

I never knew Judge Kelley to be ambitious but for an acknowledgment of service advantageous to the people. His aspirations never led him to wish for or to seek the Speakership of the House. He, at times when approached by his immediate Republican colleagues to permit them to present his name to the general caucus as Pennsylvania's choice for that high position, ever declined. Likewise, he never expressed a wish to be transferred to the Senate. His idea of Congressional service was upon the floor of the House, always asserting that continued elections by the people of his district covered the fullness of his ambition. So he had his wish. He alone, of all men living or dead, received fifteen consecutive elections to the House of Representatives.

Judge Kelley not only in speech was true to the preservation of the Union, but in practical service. In the emergency call of September, 1862, he enlisted in an artillery company and with it marched to the front, when Pennsylvania was invaded, and served until its muster out. In a short campaign he endured the fatigues of the march and of the camp. He shared with other privates of the company the privations and dangers of a soldier's life and held as a precious relic an honorable discharge. The exposure of those days and nights, in my opinion, laid the foundation of his fearful bronchial affection, which ended only with his life. He combated this disease with nerve, and never, with all the varied sufferings from it, did he yield in his determination to stand up to his work, his unconquerable will power keeping him many a time in the performance of duty while most others would have given up in despair.

His life was full of most interesting personal incidents. He was a positive man and he always uttered his opinions and sentiments. There were times and occasions when speech was dangerous in many parts of our country, but in the fulfillment of duty to principle he went wherever called upon to speak for the cause of the Union. His fearlessness disarmed his enemies, and under the greatest excitement he was given hearings, for his perseverance in the right commanded the respect of those from whom he differed.

How many a time I have heard him in a conversational way recount his experiences, and so gifted was he in interesting statement that he never tired his ever-ready listeners. He was truly a complete social companion, and he enjoyed life in a superlative degree. He was of a quick temperament, which I ascribe to his long suffering, but no one ever reacted in manner sooner, and if an imagined hurting of the feelings of any one was told him he never failed to seek out the person injured and to evince the greatest kindness and readiness to hear and oblige if possible.

But, Mr. Speaker, the ending of his life was approaching. To a friend it was slow of belief, but it was sure to come. How could I, after twenty-five years of the closest companionship here, become satisfied that before long my associations with Judge Kelley, my friend and my colleague, were to cease? At last I learned from his own lips the progress of his disease. Even by his friends he disliked to be asked about his health, so sensitive had he become. He knew that, however solicitous and anxious they were, his days on earth were not many, and in his love for them he wanted to keep from them, as much as he could, his helpless condition.

Sitting by him at the dinner table at the Riggs House but a few days before the Christmas vacation, in a conversation I had with him about the recess, he, knowing I would spend it in Philadelphia, said that he would not, as he thought he would have more rest in Washington, and that his wife was coming to him. In a moment of extreme depression, and to my great surprise, he said to me: "How difficult I am finding it to talk much; but, my dear, long-time friend, I want to tell you that I am a dead man; yes, to tell you, but please do not repeat it to others. Oh!" said he, "if my life can only be spared until after the holidays, how thankful to my God I will be. I so much desire that the shadow of death may not be upon the households of my dear children and grandchildren to mar their Christmas enjoyments and to darken in my family the brightness of that festive time."

Dear colleague, your life was prolonged beyond that gay season. The wife who was with you, the children and grandchildren who were at their homes, had not to mourn your death until a later day.

To me the shock of this, as it were, confidential communication was terrible. The composure with which he spoke these words, "I am a dead man," unnerved me, and I can never forget them. Soon he took to the bed from which he was not to arise again. A devoted wife, sorrowing sons and daughters, cared for and nursed him until the last moment he was permitted to live. He suffered greatly at times during these dying days, but there was no murmuring. He knew that his end was coming, but he realized that there was One to Whom he could look for ease and comfort in the passing hours of his trials on earth, and calling time and again upon the Lord Jesus Christ, his Divine Lord and Savior, and repeating over and over, by day and by night, the Lord's Prayer, taught him by his christian mother, he breathed away his life in calmness and composure.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, when on the 4th day of March, 1861, Abraham Lincoln was inaugurated President of the United States of America and the Thirty-sixth Congress expired, there was a great multitude of people at this Capitol; there was some display of enthusiasm such as is incident to a great event, but there was a subdued feeling in the minds of all men that the issue which the founders of the Republic could only postpone, which statesmanship for three-quarters of a century could only hold in abeyance, must be decided by an appeal to arms; that the hour of revolution was at hand. Multitudes visited the tomb of Washington as if to revive their love for the Union at the shrine of the immortal patriot. With anxiety and foreboding men sought to conjecture what, from the gathering storm of human passions, Providence would bring forth.

On the 4th day of July, 1861, a day that will be consecrated to human liberty as long as the race shall endure, by the proclamation of the President of the United States Congress assembled in extraordinary session at the Capitol. It was a memorable meeting of Congress. The Republic, resting so long in safety in the security of peace, was already in the throes of war; the clash of arms could almost be heard from the portals of this Capitol. The seats in this Hall went to be occupied by the Representatives of ten States of the Union were vacant. No great crowds of people filled the corridors or galleries. The insignia of war were upon every hand. Union soldiers were encamped in this Capitol.

Anxiety and a sense of high responsibility pervaded both halls of Congress. Yet there was from the beginning a living confidence, both in House and Senate, that the Union of the States would survive the shock and come forth from the gathering darkness in unimpaired grandeur and strength.

The apostrophe of the greatest of American poets to the Union well expressed the confidence and enthusiasm of the two Houses of Congress at that memorable meeting on the 4th day of July, 1861:

Thou, too, sail on, O Ship of State!
Sail on, O Union, strong and great!
Humanity with all its fears,
With all the hopes of future years,
Is hanging breathless on thy fate!

In spite of rock and tempest roar,
In spite of false lights on the shore,
Sail on, nor fear to breast the sea!
Our hearts, our hopes, are all with thee;
Our hearts, our hopes, our prayers, our tears,
Our faith triumphant o'er our fears,
Are all with thee; are all with thee!

On that 4th day of July, 1861, William D. Kelley first entered this Hall as a member of the House. The unseen forces in the great current of human affairs—forces of which men seem unconscious, which underlie physical revolutions and ever bear onward the human race to a higher and better life—were organizing events which statesmanship could not perceive; statesmen and politicians were "building better than they knew."

In the political contest of 1860 an unusual number of able men were chosen by the people to represent them in this Hall. The great political party, the counsels of whose statesmen had in the main guided the affairs of the Republic in former years, was broken into fragments. New men took charge of the ship of state. Pennsylvania furnished to the House in the Thirty-seventh Congress a very able body of men. Of Republicans there were Thaddeus Stevens, John Hickman, John Covode, James K. Moorhead, and Galusha A. Grow, who was elected Speaker, already experienced legislators; William D. Kelley, Edward McPherson, William Morris Davis, and others, all of whom were destined to play an important part in public affairs. Of Democrats, Hendrick R. Wright, the successor of George W. Scranton, the founder of the city of his name, whose early death in the midst of a career of great usefulness caused great and sincere public sorrow; Philip Johnson, Sydenham E. Ancona, and others, men of high merit, who made honorable records in this Hall.

It might be supposed, in view of their long service, that I had omitted the names of SAMUEL J. RANDALL and CHARLES O'NEILL, but the entry of those distinguished gentlemen into the public service did not occur until the opening of the Thirty-eighth Congress, two years after Judge Kelley became a member of the House.

Having been acquainted with the predecessor of Judge Kelley, after the House organized I went over and formed his acquaintance. We talked of his predecessor, of whom he spoke in high commendation; we talked of the condition of our country and the exigencies of the hour. I soon saw the spirit and high aspirations of the new member from Pennsylvania. He talked freely; there was no halting in his convictions.

He looked into the future without doubt or apprehension. The Union was safely intrenched in the affections and hopes of the people, and no revolution could be strong enough to even weaken the foundations on which the fathers had erected the structure. The fierce conflict impending would open up a new era; the slavery of the African, the only obstacle which in the beginning clouded the hopes of the fathers of a perpetual union of the States, would perish. Unconscious forces, under the command of Providence, were to open up in the North American Continent a scene of unexampled grandeur. I could not but admire his enthusiasm. Judge Kelley, as I saw him on that 4th day of July, 1861, was in the very bloom of confident manhood. The mysterious power of hope illuminated to him the scenes of the coming years with rays of golden light. He impressed me in that brief interview with the conviction that with opportunity he would impress his views and opinions on affairs and policies of Government.

I was charmed with Judge Kelley, though I did not fully concur in his views or feel the confidence he expressed in the future of our country, while rejoicing in the hope he expressed. His bearing then, as always afterwards, was pleasant and courteous; his manner genial, not much inclined to self-assertion, and in a degree diffident; yet his manner expressed confidence in himself; with a pleasant and kindly face, a bright, sagacious eye that seemed to see everything transpiring, and yet at moments with an absent expression; with a charming voice, under wonderful control, and of great compass, that in after years on countless occasions was to reach every nook of this great Hall, and which men would always stop to hear; such was Judge Kelley as I recall him to my mind after this long interval of nearly twenty-nine years.

Judge Kelley's record in Congress is in the main confined to three great subjects: the abolition of slavery, the currency, and the tariff. He was as determined, steadfast, and practical in his support of the abolition of slavery in our country as was Charles Sumner in the Senate or Thaddeus Stevens in the House, or as Wilberforce or the poet Montgomery was for its abolition in the British possessions. He was intensely hostile to slavery from the time he became a member of the House.

I think he allied himself with the Republican party because he believed that that party would in the main embody and express the anti-slavery sentiment of the American people. He sympathized keenly with the down-trodden and the miserable. He believed in the capacity of all men for progress and improvement, that all men should have an opportunity to better their condition, and that the distinctive glory of the christian religion was that it taught the unity of the human race, that all men were brethren. He hated all forms of human servitude; he would raise up the lowly and give them an opportunity to assert their manhood; hence he championed the measure for arming the slave that he might strike for his own liberty; he would liberate and enfranchise the slave because he was a man. He believed in the human race; he saw in the convulsions which overthrow hoary-headed distinctions among men, in the fierce antagonisms between rival States, the wrecks of revolution, the everlasting and feverish unrest in the social as well as the political world, only the outward expression of the aspirations of the human heart for a purer atmosphere, for social life, a larger liberty, and a juster recognition of the natural equality and manhood of mankind; the race ever struggling to be better. He would have said with Longfellow, making the human race the "Poet, Prophet, Seer:"

In their feverish exultations,
In their triumph and their yearning,
In their passionate pulsations,
In their words among the nations,
The Promethean fire is burning.

Judge Kelley saw with exultation, emerging from the wreck of war, the accomplishment of the purpose to which he had devoted the earlier period of his life, the slave emancipated and enfranchised and representatives of the race in both Halls of Congress.

He was a valuable associate of Thaddeus Stevens in the contest in Congress as to the form in which the national debt should be created. He stood firmly with Mr. Stevens in demanding that the currency which should meet the enormous requirements of the war should be issued in the form of legal-tender Treasury notes, convertible into public securities, the principal and interest of which should be payable in the same currency; hence his opposition to the national-bank system or the payment of either the principal or interest of the national bonds in coin.

Mr. Stevens, the author of the legal-tender system of currency (greenbacks), was only partially successful in securing the adoption of his system in 1862. Judge Kelley adhered to it without faltering, and went at a later period to the verge of a rupture with his party in its defense. Experience has demonstrated that the plan of Mr. Stevens would have resulted greatly to the advantage of the people.

While the statesmen in Congress were ransacking every field of property and industry for subjects for taxation to meet the demands on the Treasury, the question of the tariff gave rise to but little discussion.

At a later period, when the public debt was materially reduced and it was obvious that the resources of the country would readily meet every demand on the Treasury, the tariff became a subject of absorbing interest. In the mean time Judge Kelley had become a great master of political science from the standpoint of the great party with which he was associated. He explored every field of learning and experience bearing upon the subject, and for twenty years he has been a high authority on all questions bearing upon the tariff as a means and method for promoting American industry. His elaborate speeches on that subject display great ability and inexhaustible industry. He must be regarded as one of the greatest and best informed advocates of that policy our country has produced.

Judge Kelley is justly entitled to be classed as a statesman of a very high order. He was not a politician in the sense in which that term is commonly used; he was not subservient as a partisan. He stood by his convictions of public duty without hesitation. He parted with his political friends, under a sense of duty, on the currency question, indifferent to the result. He refused, with dignified courtesy, to employ his time required in the public service to securing appointments to office of political associates. He served a great constituency in a great city in the high duties of a member of this House for over twenty-eight years, and that, too, without interruption, a longer period of service than has been known in this House since the beginning, over a century ago, and had he lived to the close of this Congress his service would have reached thirty years, and that, too, during a period crowded with a greater number of great events beneficial to mankind than any other period of the world's history. He has made a great record on great and historical questions. He came into this Hall when clouds of war covered the whole land and the Union was in mortal peril. He lived to see his country prosperous and united, every State in its place, the asperities of war supplanted by the kindly relations of a united people, and the spirit of peace and fraternal kindness overshadowing the great States of the Union—

Like the protecting hand of God inverted above them.

He left this Hall for the last time, bending under the weight of years, employed in the service of his country, conscious of possessing the affectionate regards of all the members of this great assemblage. His political opponents as well as his political friends alike join in sentiments of honor to his memory. Surely, this is a fortunate termination of a long and valuable life.

[Mr. BANKS withholds his remarks for revision. See Appendix.]

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, when we pay the last tribute of respect to the memory of William D. Kelley our minds naturally recur to the period of our history through which his service extended. His Congressional career began on the 4th of March, 1861, and ended with his life on the 9th of January, 1890. He was chosen a Representative for thirty consecutive years and was a member of the House for nearly twenty-nine years. During a large part of that time the country was passing through the most trying ordeal that had ever occurred in its history. After his first election and before his induction into office some of the States had declared the bands of political union dissolved, and soon after the fratricidal struggle began. No one supposed it was to assume such gigantic proportions or to last so long.

The wisest statesmen on either side never dreamed of the limitless military power of the country or the extent to which it would be called into action. But it was soon demonstrated that vast armies were to be levied, organized, equipped, and supported; that quartermaster, commissary, medical, and ordnance stores were to be provided for the largest military establishment ever known on the earth. All these had to be created by Congress, and with as little delay as possible.

Beyond these demands, and what was more perplexing and difficult of accomplishment, a financial system had to be improvised to meet the daily draughts upon the Treasury, practically empty. In the preparation and passage of all these measures Judge Kelley's brain and pen bore a conspicuous part. He was then in the vigor of his manhood and in the zenith of his intellectual resources. He came to Congress well equipped for the difficult work which a great civil war made necessary to be done. His life had been spent in mental toil. Books had been his constant companions. Few of his associates were as well up in the knowledge of the country and its resources as he, and few of them made their influence so potent in the legislation of the country, in devising the means to prosecute the war and supply the armies with the men and material necessary to make it efficient.

Unhappily for the country, the difficulties which confronted Congress did not cease with the termination of the conflict. The war left a large debt as a part of its inheritance. To preserve the public credit means had to be provided to meet its annual interest and provide for its gradual extinction. The conquered States had to be restored to the Union. Their governments had to be reorganized. The passions and resentments engendered by civil war had to be allayed, wounds had to be soothed and healed, and the people who had been belligerents had to be reunited in the same government. The problem was filled with difficulties to the brim, and it required for its solution more than ordinary statesmanship.

It could hardly be a matter of surprise that mistakes were made, and mistakes which it would have required extraordinary wisdom and extraordinary virtue and extraordinary leaders to avoid. They were such as were common among the English-speaking people in the hour of triumph over their revolted kinsmen. The terms of restoration were harsh, and the manner of their enforcement was still harsher. The rehabilitation, both political and social, would have been more quickly and more easily accomplished if the hand that wielded the power had been more softly gloved.

Wiser and more desirable as the milder course would have been, yet in the light of the experience of other peoples similarly situated who had fallen under the edge of the sword, it was not to be expected. It required time after the storm had stilled for the billows to cease to roll and break over the surface of the troubled waters. The lawless surges when they roll do not consider natural or political rights, but sweep wildly over everything in their course.

In recalling the history of reconstruction I do not do so in any spirit of complaint. It was one of the inevitable results of civil war, and while it might have been made a brighter period in our history, yet it might have been made on the other hand infinitely darker. When all those now living are sleeping in their graves, and the generations yet in the womb shall have come into being and occupied our places; when all hate and resentment left as an inheritance from the struggle shall "sleep the sleep that knows not breaking," then our children and children's children will point with pride to the fact, as it will stand recorded in the annals of their country, that but a few years after the struggle the distinguished chieftains that led the opposing armies in the field and the statesmen that directed the counsels of the opposing governments sat together in the Senate and House of Representatives of the restored Union and of a reunited people.

Perhaps in scanning the pages of the records of the House they will feel a thrill of pleasure when they see that its membership was assembled in its Hall on the 15th of March, 1890, to render funeral honors to one of the most distinguished statesmen of the Union; one whose hand had steadied the helm when the ship of state, in the convulsion of the conflict, was riding out the storm and slowly but surely coming into the harbor of safety; that more than one hundred of those that stood about his bier had borne arms against the Government when the terrible conflict was on, and now, when it was over and ended forever, were as ready and as willing, if occasion required, to devote life and fortune to the service of the Union.

The party to which Judge Kelley belonged and of which he was a distinguished leader was in possession of the Government and charged with the responsibilities of all legislation affecting the reconstruction and restoration of the revolted States. In all its plans and policies I have no doubt he fully concurred, feeling that it was the course which prudence dictated as the wisest and best; but it may be said to his credit that he did not feel constrained on every occasion to add to the harshness of the measures by railing accusations thrown in the faces of the people upon whom they were to be enforced.

This to them will be a bright spot in his memory and one which they will recall with grateful feelings. He was not revengeful in his nature. Hate and resentment found no resting place in his heart. Thank God, the hearts in which they still live are lessening in number day by day, and it is fervently hoped that the day is not distant when they shall wholly disappear, and from one end of the Republic to the other we shall feel the ties of fraternal affection binding us together in one indissoluble bond of family union.

During the long period of my service with Judge Kelley here I am glad to say that I can not recall an instance in this House or out of it where he ever uttered cruel or unkind words of the people among whom I live. Throughout his whole public life he was the advocate and defender of measures directly opposite to everything they held dear to them. He opposed slavery, and never for one moment let his opposition sleep. He urged its abolition. He favored the enfranchisement of the negro. He supported all the measures he thought were necessary to secure these ends, but in doing so he taught a lesson others might learn, that one could support harsh measures without using harsh words. He knew how to be severe when provoked. No man had better command of vigorous English than he. His abstaining from its use was not from want of capacity, but from want of inclination.

During his public life he spoke and wrote on all the great questions that came before Congress, but he will be especially remembered for his able advocacy of the restriction of foreign commerce and the protection of American manufactures against foreign competition. This was the thought that never slept in his brain. It accompanied him wherever he went and only left him when the lamp of life had burned down into the ashes of old age and was extinguished. He believed in it with all his heart. He accepted without reservation all the articles of faith embraced in its creed. To study it in all its phases and to support it in all its conflicts was to him a labor of love. He investigated it at home and abroad, and felt convinced that he could trace its results in home and foreign industrial development.

Everything he saw or heard or read was turned toward his favorite theory. It would be difficult to find anywhere another who had gathered so large a store of information about every branch of manufactures. He knew the materials entering into the manufacture of a great number of products, and the different processes they passed through in coming to the finished article. He was not only familiar with the tariff history of his own country, but of that of other commercial countries. He was a man of extensive reading, of good memory, of well disciplined mind, and a high order of ability. To these he added the accomplishments obtained by travel in foreign lands and familiar acquaintance with the character, habits, and business of foreign peoples.

My acquaintance with Judge Kelley began in the Forty-third Congress. He was then an able and aggressive debater, and stood easily among the ablest and best in the House. In his later years the infirmities of age and the depressing effects of disease made him averse to the struggles of the intellectual arena. As age and the feebleness that follows in its train grew upon him he became a silent member, rarely participating in debate, and confining his legislative work to casting his vote for such measures as met the approval of his judgment.

His work is now done. The trust which he kept so long is ended. The office which he filled for so many years, and with so much distinction, returns to his constituency, his body to the dust from which it sprang, and his spirit to the God who gave it. All that is mortal of William D. Kelley now peacefully sleeps in the midst of those whom he served so long and whose will and opinions he so faithfully represented.

As a Representative his continuous service surpassed that of any other member of the House from the organization of the body. I have served with him here nearly seventeen years. Eight years of that time we have been members of the same committee, and during all the time of our long acquaintance on terms of uninterrupted personal friendship. In politics we were opposites, but differences in political opinions were fought out in the political arena and never disturbed our social relations. We have often spoken of his long service in the House. Some years ago I said to him that I supposed then that no member of the House had served as long as he had. He replied that he had thought so himself, but on investigating the subject he found that Nathaniel Macon, of North Carolina, was ahead of him.

Mr. Macon was elected to the House for fourteen consecutive terms, but before he had served out the twenty-seven years he was chosen a Senator and continued his long service in the other branch of Congress. Judge Kelley lived to pass the term of three score and ten allotted to man and to go beyond the long period of service here by the illustrious citizen of North Carolina. The rolls of the House show that of the thousands of Representatives who have served in the House only Kelley, Macon, and Cox, among the dead, and RANDALL, O'NEILL, and HOLMAN, among the living, have held that high honor for a quarter of a century.

The long life of Judge Kelley was full of public service and public honors. Throughout the whole period of his public career he enjoyed the unshaken confidence and affection of the people among whom he lived and for whom he labored so zealously and so long. And now, when life's fitful fever is over, like a tired laborer after a long day's toil, he returns to his home in the gathering shadows of the evening, and lies down to quiet and peaceful slumbers.

Mr. MCKINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I can not refrain from claiming for a moment or two the attention of the House to bring my tribute of respect and affection to my old friend, for whom living I had the most affectionate regard and whose death takes from all of us an honorable associate, a wise counselor, and from some of us a very close and dear friend. I first met Judge Kelley in the Forty-fifth Congress. In the following Congress I was associated with him on the Committee on Ways and Means and from that time until the close of the last Congress I served with that distinguished statesman on the committee to which he devoted so much of the labor of his life, and with whose business, for almost a quarter of a century, he will be always remembered.

No eulogy which I will speak can do justice to the noble life which has closed. His life work is his highest eulogy; what he wrought for his fellow-men and the impress he made upon the legislation of the country will be his best and most enduring memorial. That which most impressed me in my long acquaintance with him was his thoroughness, his industry, his capacity for work, his sturdy integrity, his wide range of information. Every subject he touched he became master of; not content with scratching the crust merely, he penetrated the strata and foundation, and his public speeches and contributions to magazines evidenced a grasp of the subjects he was considering which few men possess. He was a great student and did his work with method, and therefore with dispatch. The long hours he gave to his public duties, to the critical investigation of the questions with which he was charged as a member of the House, will never be known, and they told awfully upon his strength. His work in his committee was of the most laborious character; the days were too short and the nights which should have been given to rest were exacted by the stern demands of duties placed upon him.

His intellectual resources were almost without limit. His knowledge of economic, financial, and scientific questions was vast and comprehensive. He was not only a reader of books and of current literature, but a keen and intelligent observer of forces, of causes, and events. Scarcely a subject could be discussed with which he was not familiar and which was not illuminated from his storehouse of knowledge. His work in the Forty-seventh Congress as chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means so drained his vital forces as to be the beginning of that physical impairment which ended in his death. It was a fearful draught upon his strength.

As a student and master of political economy he was probably without an equal in the present generation, and as the advocate of the doctrine of protection he was for twenty years the unquestioned leader, always in the very front rank and on the extreme outpost. He was devoted to the principle because it was a conviction with him and because he believed it would best subserve the interests of his fellow-citizens and secure the highest prosperity of his country. His name in that field of public duty will pass into history linked with the name of that other great protectionist, Henry Clay.

As an orator at his best he was powerful and persuasive. His voice was full and musical, his sentences were clear and rhetorical, his information and illustration striking and forceful. I recall some of his speeches in this Hall as the most impressive I have ever listened to; and whether on this floor or on the hustings, where vast crowds delighted to greet him, he carried his audiences by the irresistible force of his logic and the fervor of his eloquence.

He was an honest man, and that after all counts most and is best. Never did suspicion even fasten upon him; he was above it. For thirty years in public life, a member of the House of Representatives during the war, with its waste and destruction, followed by doubtful schemes and wild speculations; called upon as he was to deal with great public and private interests and much of the time in touch and control of legislation which affected vast enterprises, while others fell before the temptations of the hour, he passed through all unscathed and unswayed, uncorrupted and incorruptible, and leaves to his family and friends and his countrymen that highest of all honorable titles, an honest man.

He had a wonderful hold upon the people and upon his immediate constituency. For thirty years he represented the same district; fifteen times in succession he was returned to this House by an intelligent and discriminating constituency, and, while not at all times in accord upon every public question with those he represented, such confidence did his people have in his honesty and capacity and usefulness that they would elect no other Representative to displace him. This was a rare distinction, given, I believe, to no other man of the present or past, no other statesman living or dead; and at the end he was more firmly entrenched in the respect and affection of his people than at any other period of his career.

He devoted his whole life, his vigorous youth, his matured manhood, and his declining strength and energy to the public service, and his name will be associated with the greatest events of our national history. That public which he served so well owe him a debt which it can never repay. Men of all classes and conditions turned to him as their friend, and he served them faithfully and well. We shall miss him from these halls. We have already missed him.

We will honor him most by emulating his many virtues.

Mr. BINGHAM. He who took the harp of the North from "the witch elm that shades St. Fillan's Spring" has gone to sleep beneath "the pillared arches" and there is none left to wake the echoes of the vanished strains.

In the death of William Darrah Kelley there passed away to join the unreturning caravan, "to where, beyond these voices, there is rest," not only one of the most distinguished members of our body, but one of the most conspicuous figures that have stood in public life as a subject of popular attention during the last half of this eventful century.

Although his life was lustrous with grand achievements and his career masterful and almost matchless, it is not my purpose to review it in detail. His noble characteristics, his unremitting labor and tireless toil, a life work rounded, are better perpetuated in the lasting annals of our Government than I could preserve them in the most glowing rhetoric that faithful friendship could inspire or intimate association dictate.

Judge Kelley was in public life and wearing the deserved emblems of an honored position ere I had passed "the dreams of childhood days." He had conquered more than the ordinary obstacles of life ere I had mastered the common books of school-boy days. He had won grand triumphs ere many of us had put on the armor of warfare. He had abandoned a distinguished office ere many whom I address had aspired to the responsibilities of public avocation.

I might well say of him as the celebrated Talon said of the still more celebrated D'Anguesseau on hearing his first speech at the bar, "I would willingly end as that young man commenced."

He was of an ambitious, heroic, rugged, stern, and aggressive mold of character. "He wore the white flower of a blameless life," while but few roses made glad or marked his pathway of duty.

He preferred to sow with the sowers rather than luxuriate with the harvesters. He preferred to march with the plodding phalanx rather than rejoice with the happy victors. He had the courage to encounter the most valiant gladiators of the arena, and the ability to vanquish the grandest champions of the forum. With his native ability and his natural attributes it were impossible for him to be the inert observer when he had the opportunity of becoming the aggressive actor. He was, by his rich endowments, laborious training, and full learning, "the law's whole thunder born to wield."

But his restless genius and wise ambition prompted him to seek for greater laurels in wider fields. He was restless under the quiet duties which the functions of judicial life imposed. He doffed the spotless ermine, the noblest emblem that pertains to the dignified domain of jurisprudence, to don the buckler and contend for the more uncertain chaplets that crown the varied achievements of honorable statesmanship. He passed from the forum of the bar to the halls of legislation and, omnium assensu, became the head and front of those who professed to comprehend and control the legislation which involved the political economy of our Government.

The reputation he made in this field of strife and labor will survive untarnished by time as a lasting tribute to his memory and a living guide for his successors. He has hung along the highways of legislation no dim, flickering, or uncertain lights. His protracted experiences, large information, and tireless industry have and will illumine the paths he has traced for generations to come. They will ever exist as the tested and reliable pharos on the shores of the domain of legislation to point the inexperienced wayfarer and pilot even those who have encountered the shoals and quicksands that endanger the mariner on the sea of political life. He appreciated the full measure of public duty and official fidelity. He realized the great weight of every burden he had to bear. He shirked no peril, evaded no hazard, circumvented no risk in the line of duty and province of obligation, but conscientiously wore the insignia of appointed avocation, fearless of confronting obstacles, daring in resources, and hopeful in favorable results.

Let no impulsive flattery paint pictures to tint virtues, to mask infirmities, or exaggerate worth. But let us here in this Hall, where to all his face and form were so familiar, with bowed heads and reverent hearts, do full justice to the memory of one who has filled no small space in the world's history and who everywhere and under all circumstances, regardless of personal bias or partisan prejudice, has invoked by his illustrious and pre-eminent record, the homage of the faithful, the gratitude of the generation, and the tears of the loving to embalm a character that may well be our cloud by day and pillar of fire by night. He has passed to the sleep that knows no awakening and to the dreamless rest that furnishes no heralds. As he came from the unknown so he has journeyed to the inscrutable, playing his common part in the act of humanity which the great Jehovah permits in our brief earthly sojourn, which is but a flash of light between two great darknesses, the whence and the whither.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I shall not attempt to rehearse the life of Judge Kelley or to present an estimate of his services as legislator and statesman. Such a review and such an estimate come more appropriately and with far more authority from those who served longer with him in this House, or who were brought nearer to him in their service than myself. Indeed, I can not claim to have enjoyed more than the formal acquaintance that grows out of membership of the same body, until I found myself, at the beginning of the last Congress, seated just opposite to him, at the table of the Committee on Ways and Means. That association, or perhaps I should with more accuracy say that opposition, which brought us into constant antagonism in the work of the committee and in our views of the great public questions that occupied so much of the time of the Fiftieth Congress, gave rise, as frequently happens in this House, to a cordial and pleasant friendship that was never checked or strained by these open and avowed differences of political opinion.

In a large body like this, where the two parties not only sit widely apart but in semi-hostile array, close social intermingling is the exception rather than the rule. The free and intimate association of the committees, where most of the real work of legislation is done, plays a needed and useful part in tempering the asperities of partisan conflict and of individual antagonism.

Such close contact, even for a single Congress, is a test that settles forever our estimate of colleagues and opponents and sets in unchanging colors our feelings toward them.

If it occasionally confirms and hardens previous dislikes, it no less frequently replaces prejudice with warm and unfading friendship. I esteem it, Mr. Speaker, one of the most precious fruits of service here that I have garnered from my committee associations friendships which political concord does not enhance and political antagonism can not mar or destroy. It is to the memory of such a friendship that I bring a very humble but a very sincere tribute to-day.

From the beginning of my acquaintance with Judge Kelley he was an interesting personage to me. His name had been a prominent one in the proceedings of Congress from my earliest knowledge of those proceedings. He had been an actor, or at least the intimate associate of actors, in all the recent political history of the country.

However much advancing years and waning health had sapped the strength of the old warrior and compelled him, most reluctantly, as all could see, to resign to younger hands the leadership of battles he had so long gloried in fighting, they had not tamed his ardor for the fray nor had they clouded his memory of the past; and to hear him discourse of that past was like seeking history from its fountain-head, from one who had seen it all and his full share of it had performed.

It was in such recitals as these that a younger colleague like myself was wont to engage him, nothing loath, and in these recitals to see the kindly and genial side of a man habitually serious if not severe, who in the contests of the House used weapons on which there were no foils.

But, Mr. Speaker, it is not fitting that I should merely commemorate my own personal acquaintance with Judge Kelley. He was not only a leading and well known actor in the debates and proceedings of this House. He had for years past been a unique and interesting figure as one who had enjoyed a longer period of consecutive service than any other member here. To have served for nearly one-third of the life of the Republic, to have received fifteen successive elections from the same people, was enough to give him a prominence had he been in himself but a minor character and an obscure personage in our proceedings.

And no one, Mr. Speaker, will venture to assert that he owed this long service and this unwavering support of a single constituency to any servitude to a political machine, to any skill in political arts and management, still less by virtue of being what is unhappily becoming a somewhat familiar character in current politics, a party "boss." He held his seat upon the honorable terms of being the representative of definite and well known political ideas, which he was always ready to maintain, to defend, and to propagate, and which his political opponents thought he was only too successful in embodying into the laws and the fiscal policies of the country. In the advocacy of these ideas he represented, undoubtedly, the prevailing sentiment of his constituents, and they, having full confidence in his able and unswerving devotion to these ideas and in the purity and virtues of his private character, did not attempt to hamper, control, or criticise him as to his views and his action on other public questions.

Public service on such terms is an honor and a privilege so rare as to be coveted and to be held up to general commendation, for it is the only kind of public service that can produce statesmen or be highly promotive of the common welfare. We often witness the sudden and permanent disappearance from our legislative halls of men who are the ornaments of their parties and able, judicious public servants, because in some minor or unimportant question they have offended the whims, run counter to the private interests, or disregarded the unenlightened views of enough of their constituents to make a balance of power in a close district, while the main body of their constituents, and even the country at large, may bewail their disappearance as a public loss.

In other countries having the representative system, new constituencies are always ready and eager to take up such men and to continue them in the public service; but with us the highest ability, statesmanship, and merit are not able to lift a citizen into our Legislative Hall if a majority of the people of the particular district in which he happens to reside do not agree with him in all his political views. A great British statesman, one whose memory America delights to honor as sincerely as his native land, when importuned by his constituents to follow their wishes in a minor matter as the condition of their continued support, uttered these noble words:

I should only disgrace myself. I should lose the only thing which can make such abilities as mine of any use to the world, now or hereafter. I mean that authority which is derived from the opinion that a member speaks the language of truth and sincerity, and that he is not ready to take up or lay down a great political system for the convenience of an hour; that he is in Parliament to support his opinion of the public good, and does not form his opinion in order to get into Parliament or to continue in it.

The city of Bristol, not willing to allow Mr. Burke this honorable freedom, lost his services and passed over to another and nobler constituency the honor of being represented by so great a man.

The city of Philadelphia, or rather that section of it which he represented, was not so intolerant with Judge Kelley, and, having found him a faithful servant, enjoyed for the remainder of his life his able services and the distinction of being represented by one of the best known and most positive men in the Federal Congress.

Well indeed would it be if such instances were less rare than we must confess them to be; well indeed for the public and the highest welfare of the country, if the oath of office to be taken and faithfully and honestly to be observed by the members of both Houses of Congress were like that which an old historian tells us was prescribed in 1621 for members of the council of the Colony of Virginia:

You shall in all things to be moved, treated, and debated in that council, faithfully and truly declare your mind and opinion according to your heart and conscience.

It was doubtless the spirit of this oath that guided and illustrated the long public career of Judge Kelley. All honor to the generous and wise constituency that left him free to its guidance. All honor to the faithful servant who held and was willing to hold their commission upon no other terms. Having said this of Judge Kelley, it is not necessary that I should make a catalogue of his virtues or attempt an inventory of his deeds.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, William D. Kelley was a force in the country. He stood for an economic policy which affected the opinions of men, controlled their action, and in its operation reached the material interests of the citizen on the farm and in the factory, in the mine and in the forest, in the marts of trade, everywhere throughout the country where men followed gainful employment. Under all circumstances, at all times, in all places, he was true to his convictions as the needle to the pole.

Mr. Kelley was in his fifteenth term of continuous service in the House at the time of his decease, a length of continuous service rarely accorded to any man in Congress, especially in the popular body. I first made his acquaintance during the Forty-third Congress. He was then the Father of the House, and so remained until his decease. Serving with him for so many years and belonging to the same political organization, I saw much of him, felt that I was well acquainted with him, believed that I had his esteem, as he had mine, as well as my admiration. He was at that time but little past the meridian; always strong mentally, he was then strong physically. It was his fortune to serve during a period in the history of the country, measuring time by events, that lengthened his actual service of over twenty-eight years into a century.

During his service he measured arms and touched elbows with perhaps the greatest number of strong men that have been in public life in the same length of time during the existence of the Republic. The House of Representatives, at all times made up in the main of the picked men of the country, was never stronger continuously than during his service. There were SHERMAN, STEVENS, BANKS, the two HOBBS, BUTLER, FARNSWORTH, BINGHAM, MCCRARY, BLAINE, COLFAX, GARFIELD, KERR, BECK, HEWITT, POTTER, COX, LAMAR, RANDALL, MORRISON, DAWES, SHELLABARGER, and a host of others, veritable giants in the land, who placed the marks of their individuality, wisdom, and patriotism in the warp and woof which was woven into the history of the country. William D. Kelley stood during his long service the peer of his colleagues. No man could so stand at such a period and with men of such stature without having great strength, merit, and industry. He had all of these.

Nature did much for him. Industry, care, preparation did more. He rarely discussed public questions without the most exhaustive preparation. In his chosen specialty his speeches and sayings became the text-books in popular discussion of the school to which he belonged. I talked with him many times about his service in the House. He was especially proud of his constituency and of its approval, as evidenced by his long service. He believed in his country and its institutions, and held that Philadelphia was the typical American city. He gloried in her history, prosperity, and culture. It was especially a matter of pride to him that her artisans owned their own homes and that her system of common schools was such that all the children received a liberal instruction and training. He believed that the economic system of which he was so consistent an advocate was the foundation upon which the prosperity of the great mass of people securely rested.

I will not speak further of his public record. It needs no commendation from me. It is written in the march of the industrial prosperity of the Republic. Mistaken he may have been at times; sincere he always was. Few men in public life so rarely made mistakes.

In social life he was courteous, affable, bright. I have rarely met so companionable a man. For the last ten years of his life he had a constant conflict with disease, which, with age coming on, he was less able year after year to fight. Only his close friends knew how bravely he made the contest for life. He was a man who never complained or whined. He frequently expressed a desire to die in the harness. He died in the harness.

It was my privilege to be designated by the House as one of those who helped to bury his remains. We took all that was left of William D. Kelley after life departed to the modest church in his loved city where in life he had worshiped. Standing at the head of the casket containing his remains, his friend and pastor, Dr. FURNESS, himself full of years and almost ready to put his armor off, paid the most touching tribute to the memory of his dead friend and parishioner that it has ever been my fortune to hear. We then proceeded to the beautiful cemetery of Laurel Hill and laid him to sleep amongst friends and loved ones who had gone before.

As I stood over his grave I said, his life was a success. Comparatively poor in property, yet he had enough for comfort. In this respect he was above want and below envy. The loved ones and children who survive him, strong, vigorous, and willing to work honorably in life's contest, are rich in the heritage of a name made honorable in efficient service to the State. May the Republic in future be blessed by increasing numbers of public servants of the type of William D. Kelley!

Mr. McKENNA. Mr. Speaker, in the solemn ritual for the dead it is announced to the living that man's life is three score years and ten, and some by special strength may attain four score years. Judge Kelley had almost that special strength—lived almost four score years. But better, the strength he had was exerted for his country; the years he lived were filled with merit and distinction, impressing "the very age and body of the time."

Such lives supersede praise. We can recount their acts. It is useless eulogy to extol them. To summarize Judge Kelley's life would be to summarize the greatest period of his country's history. He was a potent factor in it, always in the front rank of men, a peer of the acknowledged strongest. Yet he was not "fortune's minion." His youth was one of responsibility and toil; his whole life one of unweary industry. He was a jeweler's apprentice in Philadelphia from his fourteenth to his twentieth year. He had no education and was debarred from the schools. It would not have been unnatural if he had remained in routine drudgery and mere bread-winning. His aspiring spirit could not be so restrained. His strength and distinctiveness of character could not be obscured or subdued by any situation or circumstance. For study, he plucked time from the night; for books, he organized with some companions the Youth's Library, afterwards the Pennsylvania Literary Institute. Such men help us when they help themselves; from them issue and grow institutions, instrumentalities of good.

He was a journeyman jeweler in Boston, and there, while faithful to his manual work, his ability strengthened and took form, and his biographer tells us he was associated in more than one programme of lectures with Channing and Emerson, then ascending to the zenith of a deserved fame. Back again to Philadelphia, he there becomes a lawyer, and thereafter, forgetting or overlooking his humble commencement as he ascends to and achieves fame, we think of him and speak of him as jurist, legislator, and statesman.

He was always a politician, but a politician in the best sense of that much-abused word. Politics engaged at once his energies and his sympathies. In them he had to do with mankind and for mankind. He was a natural leader besides. He was confident in opinion and vehement; but his reasoning was clear, consecutive, and proportioned. His physical characteristics assisted his mental characteristics. He was tall and impressive-looking, his voice was full, deep, sonorous, and musical, flexible to every purpose of persuasion, exhortation, and command.

In my boyhood days, in my home in Philadelphia, I heard Judge Kelley spoken of. In my manhood, in the distant West, I watched and applauded his fame as it became national. I have been his associate in Congress, and have witnessed the close of his noble and distinguished career—noble because its impulse and purpose was patriotic; distinguished because great qualities were displayed in it and great good was accomplished by it. He died a Representative of the Republic; he died in the country's service.

Mr. REILLY. Mr. Speaker, the very able, eloquent, and exhaustive tributes that have been paid to the memory and life of our departed colleague by the distinguished gentlemen who have preceded me, as well as the lateness of the hour, admonish me that I ought not to further trench upon the time of the House by indulging in any extended remarks, and that there is no necessity for it.

Besides, the public career of Judge Kelley is so well known, not only to the people of the great Commonwealth which he served so long and well, but to the people of the entire country, that, as has been so aptly said by the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McKINLEY], his life-work constitutes in itself his highest eulogy. Still, Mr. Speaker, the occasion inspires me to add my humble tribute.

I first became personally acquainted with the late Judge Kelley at the opening of the Forty-fourth Congress, since which time, although differing with him politically, our personal relations have been more or less intimate, and at all times and under all circumstances, in common with his fellow-citizens, not only of our native State, which I have the honor in part to represent on this floor, but with his fellow-citizens throughout the country, I have joined in admiration of his illustrious career and of the great services he rendered to the country and to the people.

Mr. Speaker, I can conceive of no greater responsibility that can be imposed upon any man than to seat him in this Chamber as a legislator for this great and mighty people. Under our form of government every other public official has a safe, plain landmark, a guide-post by which to direct him in the discharge of his public duties. To be the Chief Executive of this mighty and free people is an honor that is exalted above any other civic station that man can be called to fill anywhere on the face of the globe; but great as is the honor and great as is the responsibility, yet the duties of the Chief Magistrate of the nation are but to execute the laws of the land as he finds them laid down in the statute-books.

So also with the other co-ordinate branch of the Government, the judiciary. What more exalted tribunal can the imagination conceive than the Supreme Court of the United States, a tribunal in which we expect to look for and find the exercise of those attributes the perfection of which is alone to be found in the Deity? And yet they but administer the law, they but adjudicate the rights of the citizen involving life, liberty, and property, under and according to the written law of the land. But who, Mr. Speaker, who shall measure the responsibility of the lawgiver; he who sits clothed with the great power and responsibility of legislating for the welfare of a free and independent people; he who holds in the hollow of his hand, as it were, the destinies of a nation to be affected for weal or woe by the action of the legislative department?

But, looking back over the career of Judge Kelley, which, during three eventful decades in our country's history, had been devoted to the discharge of those great and grave duties, and to which he brought the highest and most conscientious convictions, what nobler tribute or greater eulogy, standing over his grave to-day, can we pronounce than to proclaim to the world that his life-work was well done?

This can be truthfully said of him, and his eulogy is written, not alone in his life-work, in the record of his membership in this body, but in the great services which he has rendered to the country and with which his name is connected, which will go down on the undying pages of history as a tribute to his memory, to be appreciated and admired by every American citizen.

Mr. Speaker, a great career has closed; a great statesman and patriot has gone from amidst scenes long familiar and congenial, but which will know him no more forever. As has been stated, Judge Kelley entered upon his career as a legislator on the 4th day of July, 1861, at a time when the very life of the nation trembled in the balance. But he entered upon his high trust with a stern sense of duty, and for more than a quarter of a century he has continued therein with the same fidelity, never faltering or wavering; and when at last his hour had come, the dread messenger found him, though feeble from the weight of advancing years and the ravages of disease, at his post of duty, nobly but vainly struggling against the inevitable. During the early days of this session we lodged at the same hotel. He was then ailing, but able to be about, and as I met him daily and inquired as to his health, he would answer by a despondent shake of the head and say, "Growing weaker and weaker."

He seemed, Mr. Speaker, to realize that his end was fast approaching; but with that spirit of industry and energy which characterized his life he made desperate battle. It was apparent that the sands of life were nearly run. It was his ambition to be called hence from the place where for nigh on to thirty years he had so zealously labored. Under the dispensation of a kind Providence he had passed the three score and ten allotted to man, and in the ripeness of a well rounded and fruitful life, and after devoting the best years of his mature manhood to the service of his country he calmly passed away. Peace to his ashes.

Mr. ATKINSON, of Pennsylvania. He who was the senior in point of service in this House and first in the affections of his colleagues has passed away. His venerable form has disappeared from our midst, and his voice so familiar to us all has been forever hushed. A seat long occupied by the acquiescence of his colleagues is vacant, and a name has been stricken from the roll of living Representatives which has been borne thereon for a longer period than that of any other who ever served in this Hall.

After a long life, spent mostly in the service of the people of his native city and of this nation, William D. Kelley has gone to his final rest. Could he have chosen the circumstances of his death they would not have been different. Here in the performance of his duty as a Representative, surrounded by his family and friends, he gave back to his Creator the life which had been given him. Others who knew him longer will tell of his earlier career, of the qualities which made him an object of interest, of respect and veneration; but I can not refrain from stating the impressions which he left upon me during an acquaintance extending through more than three terms of Congress. Kind, considerate, and genial, he freely advised with me when as a new member I sought his wise counsel, and he never seemed to weary in placing his time at the disposal of his friends or in opening his rich treasure-house of learning for their benefit.

Although suffering from a malady which at last ended his life, he knew but one measure of duty and he never left it unfulfilled. No important measure was presented to this House that his vote was not recorded upon it, and few great problems were presented here that were not illuminated by his learning and influenced by his eloquence.

He entered Congress with the advent of the civil war, and for almost thirty years his influence was felt upon this floor. Always ready, able, and fearless, his convictions were known of all men, and his views upon the great questions discussed were impressed upon his party, adopted in its councils, and indorsed by the country. A student and disciple of Henry C. Carey, the principles of the great American political economist found no abler advocate; his earnest and tireless advocacy of protection placed him foremost among the distinguished men who have maintained the duty of developing and fostering the industries of the United States.

No cynical maxim ever fell from his lips. He believed and he taught that it was the duty of the Government to support the people in their business enterprises, to aid them in developing the marvelous resources of this our common country, and to shield them from foreign industrial assaults. A friend of the workingman, he never ceased to plead for that policy which he believed would lighten the burdens of the toiler and uplift him to the highest and most solid prosperity.

No sectionalism clouded his vision, but his comprehensive mind contemplated the prosperity of the South as well as the North, and no State lines contracted his statesmanship. He viewed with honest pride the possibilities of the South under the policy of protection, and anticipated the time when the vast cotton production of that section should be distributed in beautiful fabrics, instead of in a crude form. He contributed his full share to the growth of the iron interests of the South and never ceased to encourage the full development of that section so highly favored by nature. His closing years saw, if not the full fruition of his hopes, at least the light of that morning which precedes the advent of the great industrial day that will bring wealth and activity to the business centers of that portion of our common country.

He was a man of strong convictions, and heart and soul a Republican. He believed in his party and its principles. A model of industry, his attention to his legislative duties is shown by the records of the House of Representatives of which he was so long a member. But the services rendered by Judge Kelley while in office do not measure the value of his life to the country. His views were impressed upon the people by his speeches and his writings and influenced the action of others upon many important public questions.

He had outlived detraction, the shafts of envy had long ago fallen harmless at his feet, and opposition to him was unthought of because it was known to be futile. Against him the defamer was powerless and calumny exhausted her resources in vain.

His long and patriotic career, his rugged honesty and unflinching directness of purpose, had disarmed enmity, and he was one of the few men in public life who lived unassailed. He leaves a stainless name and an unblemished reputation.

A living example of purity and devotion to duty, when death came it found him not unprepared. His career was complete, the affection of his countrymen secured, full of years and honors he passed into the night of death to emerge, as we believe, into that shining realm where sorrow and darkness are unknown.

There is no death! What seems so is transition;
This life of mortal breath
Is but a suburb of the life elysian,
Whose portal we call death.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, the greatest of all human arts is the art of governing; the noblest of all secular enterprises is the experiment of free institutions. Statesmanship requires the exercise of the nobler qualities of mankind and elevates and dignifies them. It is that single pursuit which, earnestly and honestly and conscientiously followed, gives to every part of this complex nature of ours a chance for its highest development. That a man shall devote his life with unceasing industry and ceaseless love for mankind to the well-ordering of the greatest free nation that the world has ever seen is the very highest pursuit which any man could possibly follow.

However erroneous may be the opinions of such a man and however he may be mistaken in the policies which he advocates, if he did believe those opinions and was convinced of the wisdom of those policies, his life could not but be fruitful. However thoroughly we may disagree in this Hall with our colleagues who pass from it to that greater and eternal country to which we are traveling, however fierce these contests may be (and the measure of their fierceness is frequently the truthfulness and intensity of our respective convictions), yet we can not but recognize in our hearts that where our opponents are honest they deserve our respectful commendation.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, there is not so much difference between us as we sometimes think. Out of these conflicts, which seem to be bitter, emerges that compromise which one of the greatest of essayists said was "the wisest statesmanship for the given day in which it was enacted."

These differences produce their legitimate fruits; not by the conquest of one side over the other, but by the concessions that are made that legislation may become practical. And, perhaps, the best evidence of the growth of a free people is that out of these conflicts of the past have grown compromises, where neither side feels that defeat has been his portion, and where the victorious side may feel that the victory that is accomplished has to be maintained by concessions in the future.

Judge Kelley's life was singularly fortunate in the apparent victory which his policies met. He was an intense anti-slavery man. He lived to see slavery abolished; the negro not only freed, but a voter. Yet, who can say that the end has been reached; for it but changed the relations of the races and the conditions of the problem; and that very victory has left the most momentous question, not only in the South, but in other States, that the future has for our children to answer. Judge Kelley believed in the doctrine of protection, and advocated it through a series of years, not only with entire persistency, but with unusual and conspicuous ability.

He died soon after a national victory based upon a platform of the great party of which he was one of the leaders, more nearly in accordance with his extreme views than any platform ever adopted in America. He died after the organization of a Congress organized in consonance with his opinions, and the chief committee of that Congress presided over by the ablest scholar and pupil whom he had probably had in his Congressional career; and yet who will be bold enough to say that the victory is complete, that there is no further battle for the advocates of protection? Who will say that the problems which were in dispute can be solved on the principles to which Judge Kelley's life was devoted? In a sense that is personal to him his life was a series of victories. He was for more than thirty years on the winning side. He knew no defeat from the time he was elected to Congress until his death.

Temporary obscurations in certain sections of the country of his party's victories had occurred; but nothing that may fairly be called disaster had ever occurred during his political career to the party of which he was a member. During that long period he was the recipient of its honors, and, what was dearer to him than mere honors, he was the recipient of its praises and of its plaudits until he became nearly the type of its belief and its principles.

This is a rare fortune to happen to a statesman. My friend from Ohio [Mr. MCKINLEY] connected his name this afternoon with the name of the great Kentuckian who filled the seat that I have been commissioned to sit in—that great, illustrious, and majestic leader of men who, in a long and illustrious life, met only honor and encountered only defeat. This never happened to him whose memory we celebrate to-day, and in that sunshine of constant victory it is not too much to say the qualities of Judge Kelley took on a brighter hue and became more vigorous than they might otherwise have done.

We can not estimate the power of development that resides in the educational influences of this House, especially to one who has gained leadership upon this floor. If Judge Kelley had dropped out after four, or six, or even eight years of service here he would have been a comparatively obscure man; but as he staid here he gained in power, his power grew as his reputation extended; and it is a proof of the value of service on this floor.

Philadelphia has not only been generous, Mr. Speaker, but she has been wise. She has not only been a model of generous confidence in her public servants, but she has been an exemplar of worldly wisdom in her political adherence to those who represented her here. Who can estimate how much of Philadelphia's wealth, of those great blocks of buildings, and of that accumulated capital the evidences of which enchant the eye wherever you go in Philadelphia—who can estimate how much of that has come from the devoted service, the intelligent co-operation, the constant fidelity to her interests of those gentlemen whom she has kept in this Hall for the last quarter of a century or more?

Mr. Kelley and Mr. RANDALL might fight about other things, but to each of them Philadelphia was the prime object of affection; and by their efforts, with the aid of their colleagues, who have also been kept here for nearly a quarter of a century, whatever could be gotten was gotten for Philadelphia. I do not begrudge it to her. Standing, as it were, by the grave of her conspicuous son, hoping for the recovery of her living and stalwart son who, in his power, had the will of Jackson and the incorruptibility of the honest public servant, I do not begrudge anything that has happened of good to Philadelphia. I only wish that from this day out not only may she but all the country have a succession of such faithful public servants securing peace within her borders and prosperity beside her firesides.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I am glad to be permitted to pay a tribute to the memory of the distinguished statesman who for so many years honored the State of Pennsylvania and the whole country by his service in this body. Of the men who were members of this body when that service began only three now occupy seats in this Hall, the distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. VANDEVER], the distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], and the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BANKS].

William D. Kelley was a type of the statesmen more common in this country than elsewhere, who have come from the ranks of common life and who by profound study, untiring energy, and unwavering devotion have been able to secure and retain the confidence of the people and thus be enabled to imprint their views on the policy of the nation. Thoroughly devoted to the fundamental principles of our Government, an ardent believer in the inalienable rights of man without regard to race or creed, he became an equally firm believer in the doctrine that the preservation and the prestige of our system depended on the policy of protection as a means of securing proper remuneration to labor and of elevating American character, and in the application of these principles he was broad and liberal in his views and rejoiced in the prosperity of his countrymen without regard to State or section.

I think no man in the country took a greater pride than the deceased statesman in the marvelous development that in the last few years has transformed the sunny South. Few men in this country have ever so fully enjoyed the confidence of their immediate constituents. The recognized Father of the House, he was trusted by his constituents as a kind and loving parent is trusted by his children. I had the pleasure in the last session to sit near him and to observe with what pleasure he read to the circle round him a letter from his home announcing his renomination, coupled with the statement that the writer was for William D. Kelley for Congressman during his natural life. Those of us who had observed how his robust mind contrasted with his feeble frame even then feared that his service in this body would soon draw to a close, and when we assembled at the beginning of this session and welcomed the kindly old gentleman to these halls, we felt that hovering over him was the shadow of impending death.

Perhaps no two men of opposite political views have had greater political influence than the two distinguished men whose places have been rendered vacant since the close of last Congress—the distinguished statesman from New York, Mr. Cox, and the statesman from Pennsylvania whom we mourn to-day; and no man on this side of the House, as I think, has borne a more conspicuous part in shaping the policy of this country than our late honored associate.

I was very much impressed a few weeks since by the classic address of the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi on the occasion of the memorial services in honor of the late Mr. Townshend, of Illinois, in which that gentleman referred to the sentiment of dread with which the human soul shrinks from death. But, Mr. Speaker, I think as the human mind accepts the grand truths of the christian faith we become more reconciled to this inevitable step in human destiny and accept with a calmness unknown before the transition to the great loving heart of the Infinite.

Death comes at last to all. When it strikes down the warrior in the full tide of victory or the statesman in the triumph of his ideas, when his theories are in the ascendant, when his country is prosperous and triumphant, when he sits in the highest places enthroned in the confidence of the people, it soothes the anguish of bereavement. Our friend had achieved a high renown, and yet how slight and unsatisfying are all human glories.

Oh, if there were not brighter hopes than these,
Were there no palm beyond a feverish fame,
If joy and hope and all the charities of life
Must fling their withered wreaths into the tomb,
If beyond this earth there is no heaven
In whose wide air the spirit may find room,
And in the converse of whose bright inhabitants
The lavished heart may spend itself,
What thrice-mocked fools are we.

It is only when a well-spent life fades away at evening, like that of our friend, in the calm promise of an eternal day, when life's titful fever is over, that we attain the full fruition of human hopes and can say with the poet—

There is no death! The stars go down
To rise upon some fairer shore,
And bright in heaven's jeweled crown
They shine forever more.

Mr. REYBURN. A few weeks ago, on a busy street of one of our large cities, groups of men were to be seen here and there coming together with quiet demeanor and strong grasp of hand, then separating and entering a low but massive structure; inside this a room, the light of heaven softened by windows of glass picturing the divine love and goodness of the God of all nations, with bowed heads the people wait. The strains of gentle music fill the air, a procession of the grief-stricken clad in habiliments of woe follow their dead; from above, as if from angelic regions, a sweet voice is heard chanting forth a song of tender words of consolation; a man feeble from ripeness of years, but with a nobleness of bearing born of much good-doing and the teaching men to love one another, speaks words of encouragement to the weeping ones of that higher, better, purer life assured to mortals through the tender mercy of an all-wise Father who gave his only begotten Son that the dead might rise again; then gives the assurance to the sorrowing wife and children that though the form lay cold before them he knew that, chastened by the struggles and temptations of a stormy life such as few men live through, the dead husband and father clung to his belief in his God and his Savior.

To the others assembled he spoke of the more than fifty years he had known the dead, and in words eloquent with truth, tempered by the softening of time, told of the fierce conflicts with the prejudices and passions of men; of the battles for principle and humanity; of the shock and horror of civil war and the troublesome times that followed its ending; of the strength of will and mind of the dead one before them; the prophetic foresight, the wise, the patriotic protests against the prejudices of old systems; the firm, unfaltering belief in the greatness of his native land, its progress and final leadership in the mighty development going on among the nations of the earth; then of the suffering, the gradual weakening of the bodily strength, of the flashes of the old fire, fitful but deceptive, presaging the end which came easily, peacefully, hushing forever the voice of the statesman and the citizen, who, born of the people and from the people, must live on and whose achievements must bear witness in the time to come, more eloquently than tongues can speak, of the fitness of men to govern themselves. No eulogy of mine can add glory to the luster of the name of William D. Kelley, the statesman, the friend we are now called upon to mourn.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I move, as a further mark of respect to my deceased colleague, the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE AND OTHER COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, the following resolution was delivered to the Speaker and referred as follows:

By Mr. DORSEY:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the House of Representatives 20,000 copies of the report of Commercial Agent Hawes, of Reichenberg, on the sugar-beet industry of Bohemia;

to the Committee on Printing.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, reports of committees on bills of the following titles were filed, ordered to be printed, and referred as follows:

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE, from the Committee on Commerce, reported, as a substitute for the bill (H. R. 7794) to amend chapter 418 of the acts passed at the second session of the Fiftieth Congress, a bill (H. R. 8239) to amend section 4488, Title LII of the Revised Statutes, as amended by chapter 418 of the acts passed at the second session of the Fiftieth Congress; which substitute was read twice, and referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. CASWELL, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported, as a substitute for the bill (H. R. 530) to require the United States circuit and district judges to instruct the jury in writing in certain cases, a bill (H. R. 8246) to require the United States circuit and district judges to instruct the jury in writing when requested; which substitute was read twice, and referred to the House Calendar.

He also presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of St. Cloud, Minn., praying for the construction of a public building at that place; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. COKE. I present a petition of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Utah, praying for the passage by Congress of a bill reported from the Committee on Commerce, making an appropriation of $6,200,000 for the improvement of Galveston Harbor. The resolutions are signed by James Sharp, speaker of the house of representatives; Franklin R. Richards, president of the council, and Richard L. Thomas, governor of Utah Territory, and are certified by Elijah Sells, secretary of Utah Territory.

I ask unanimous consent that, without reading, the petition, being that of a Territorial Legislature, be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas asks unanimous consent that the petition be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. SHERMAN. I object. I have no objection to its being printed as a document, if the Senator wishes that done.

Mr. COKE. I did not hear the remark of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. HARRIS. I think it has been the uniform custom to print resolutions of Legislative Assemblies in the RECORD.

Mr. SHERMAN. I beg pardon. Is this the resolution of a Legislative Assembly?

Mr. VEST. It is the memorial of a Territory.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks that the unanimous consent to which the Senator from Tennessee refers has been confined to memorials of State Legislatures, though Territorial memorials have occasionally been printed in the RECORD. Is there objection to printing the petition in the RECORD? The Chair hears none.

The petition was ordered to lie on the table, and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Whereas the growing necessities of the West demand a first-class harbor on the Gulf coast, in the State of Texas, in order that the surplus products of the State of Texas and neighboring States and Territories may find an outlet to the markets of the world by a shorter route than is now open to them, and at a vast annual saving to the producers; and

Whereas the annual surplus tonnage of farm and manufactured products of the West amounts annually to many millions of tons; and

Whereas the Congress of the United States did, at its last session, provide for the appointment of a special Board of Engineers whose duty it was to report to the present Congress the most eligible point or points upon the Gulf coast of Texas for a deep harbor, to be of ample depth, width, and capacity to accommodate the largest ocean-going vessels and the commercial and naval necessities of the country; and such special board of engineers, having been appointed as provided by said act of Congress, did, after due examination of the harbor of Galveston, among other things report in favor of Galveston as such point, and recommend the appropriation by Congress of the sum of $6,200,000 for the improvement of that port and harbor; and

Whereas the Committee on Commerce in the United States Senate has reported to the Senate a bill making an appropriation for the purpose aforesaid, of which the following is a copy: "Be it enacted, etc., That for the purpose of securing the work of improving the entrance to Galveston Harbor, Texas, the Secretary of War, upon the application of the Chief of Engineers, is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to draw his warrant or requisition from time to time upon the Secretary of the Treasury for such sums as may be necessary to do such work, not to exceed in the aggregate $6,200,000, the amount estimated as necessary for the completion of the same, as shown in the report of the Chief of Engineers for the year 1890: Provided, however, That the amounts so drawn from the Treasury shall not exceed $1,000,000 in any one year, and that an itemized statement of said expenditures shall accompany the Annual Report of the Chief of Engineers. The amount required for the completion of this work as herein proposed is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated." Therefore,

Be it resolved by the governor and Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Utah, That the Congress of the United States is hereby earnestly requested to pass the bill now pending in the Senate above referred to.

JAMES SHARP, Speaker of the House of Representatives.

FRANKLIN D. RICHARDS, President of the Council.

ARTHUR L. THOMAS, Governor of Utah Territory.

I hereby certify that the foregoing is a true copy of the original on file in my office.

Given under my hand and the seal of the Territory of Utah, this 12th day of March, A. D. 1890.

[SEAL.]

ELIJAH SELLS, Secretary of Utah Territory.

Mr. TELLER presented a petition of the county commissioners of Arapahoe County, Colorado, praying that an appropriation be made for a deep-water harbor at Galveston, Tex.; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. VEST presented a memorial of the North American Turnerbund (Gymnastic Union), of St. Louis, Mo., remonstrating against the passage of any and all measures now before Congress to change the present laws on immigration and naturalization; which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. COCKRELL. I present a memorial of the Brewers and Maltsters' Union, No. 6, of St. Louis, remonstrating against the ratification of the extradition treaty between the United States and Russia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks that had better be presented in executive session.

Mr. VEST. Has it been the rule to present such matters in executive session?

Mr. COCKRELL. It is a public memorial, as a matter of course. Still, if the Chair thinks it should be presented in executive session I suppose I should withhold it here.

Mr. VEST. I think the question ought to be determined by the Senate. I have received a large number of memorials similar to the one presented by my colleague, and before bringing them to the attention of the Senate I consulted with the Senators who had been longest in service here (amongst whom, by the way, is my colleague, but he was not present at the time), and there was a general consensus of opinion that such memorials ought to be presented in executive session. I therefore pursued that course.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would hold that petitions or memorials relating to business pending in executive session should be presented in executive session, in the absence of instructions from the Senate to the contrary.

Mr. COCKRELL. These are public memorials. There is no secret about them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator desires, the Chair will submit the matter to the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think they ought to be presented in open session, but I shall not appeal from the decision of the Chair. I think they ought to be presented so that the parties who make these protests against certain proceedings of which they can have no knowledge, the proceedings taking place in executive session, will know that their memorials have been presented to the Senate, and will be considered in executive session.

Mr. PLATT. I rose for the purpose of making the suggestion which the Senator from Missouri has already made. Of course these memorials go upon the idea that there is an extradition treaty pending between this country and Russia. The newspapers have published what purported to be such a treaty or the substance of such a treaty. I do not remember particularly what the publication in the newspapers has been. That of course has called forth these remonstrances. I do not see that any harm results from presenting them in open session. It seems to me that people exercising the right of petition ought, unless some harm is to come from it, to be permitted to see, if they examine the Journal or RECORD, or that they should be permitted to be told, that their petitions or memorials have been presented to the Senate.

It was with that idea I rose. If the right of petition extends to subjects of this kind, it seems to me the people who have the right to petition ought to be informed in some way that their petitions or memorials have been presented.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are there further petitions or memorials?

Mr. COCKRELL. I have great respect for and confidence in the decisions of the Chair, but when a petition is in printed form, has been published in the papers of the country, I presume (I do not know that fact), is addressed to the Senate, and states that the petitioners respectfully ask the Senate not to ratify the pending or any other treaty between the United States and the Emperor of Russia, and they then give their reasons for this prayer, I think such a petition should be presented in open session, and should be received by the Senate, and then considered in connection with any such treaty, if there be such. If there be no treaty, what would be the necessity of referring it to an executive session? I do not know that there is any treaty now pending in executive session between the United States and Russia, and this memorial is a remonstrance against any treaty which may be pending or any treaty which may hereafter be made. It protests against the making of any such treaty. If it is not made, then they protest against the making of any such treaty. If there is no treaty pending (and I take it there is none), then why shall this be presented in executive session when there is nothing before the executive session of the Senate to consider? It seems to me perfectly appropriate that the memorial should be presented in open session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will submit the question to the Senate, if the Senator from Missouri desires.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like the question to be settled by the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the petition be received in legislative session?

Mr. HARRIS. What is the nature of the petition?

Mr. COCKRELL. It is a petition of the Brewers and Maltsters' Union, No. 6, of St. Louis, Mo., praying the Senate of the United States not to ratify the pending or any other extradition treaty with the Emperor of Russia, for the reasons stated.

Mr. HARRIS. Clearly it is an executive matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the petition be received in legislative session? [Putting the question.] By the sound the ayes have it. The ayes have it. The Senator from Missouri, under the order of the Senate, can present his petition.

Mr. COCKRELL. I present the petition to which I have referred, and also a similar petition of the Bakers' Union, No. 15, of St. Louis, Mo., and also a similar petition of the German Arbeiter-Bund, of St. Louis and vicinity, and ask that they be received and appropriately referred.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petitions will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. VEST. Under the decision of the Senate I present a memorial of the Wood-Working Machine Hands' Union, No. 1, of St. Louis, Mo., remonstrating against the ratification of the Russian treaty. I move the reference of the memorial to the Committee on Foreign Relations. The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB presented a resolution adopted by old soldiers, residents of Cowley County, Kansas, praying for certain pension legislation; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a resolution adopted by Vicksburg Post, No. 72, Grand Army of the Republic, of Humboldt, Kans., favoring the passage of a law to pension army nurses; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Bluff Creek, Lyon County, Kansas, praying for the free coinage of silver; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Kansas, praying for the passage of a national bankruptcy law; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented resolutions adopted by Hays's Farmers' Alliance, No. 238, praying for certain financial legislation; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution of the Wichita (Kans.) Board of Trade favoring an appropriation of $6,200,000 to construct a deep-water harbor at Galveston, Tex.; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of Wilderness Post, No. 116, Department of Kansas, Grand Army of the Republic, of Delphos, Kans., praying for the passage of certain pension legislation; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a memorial of citizens of Maricopa County, Arizona Territory, remonstrating against the establishment of a court for the settlement of land titles in that Territory; which was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. GEORGE. If in order now, I should like to be excused from further service on a committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will receive the request of the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. GEORGE. I ask to be excused from further service upon the Committee on Immigration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi asks to be excused from further service upon the Committee on Immigration. Unless objection be made, the request will be agreed to.

Mr. CALL. I ask to be excused from further service upon the Committee on Immigration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida asks unanimous consent that he may be discharged from further service upon the Committee on Immigration. Unless objection is made, the request will be agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3162) to provide for the examination of certain officers of the Army and to regulate promotions therein; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. EVARTS, it was Ordered, That George McCredy be permitted to withdraw from the files of the Senate the petition and accompanying papers in his behalf, subject to the rules of the Senate.

DEPRESSION OF AGRICULTURAL INTERESTS.

Mr. VOORHEES submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Whereas the deep and widespread depression and decay of the agricultural interests of the American people, the enormous and appalling amount of mortgage indebtedness on agricultural lands, the total failure of home markets to furnish remunerative prices for farm products, the palpable scarcity and insufficiency of money in circulation in the hands of the people with which to transact the business of the country and effect exchanges of property and labor at fair rates, are circumstances of the most overwhelming importance to the safety and the well-being of the Government: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That it is the highest duty of Congress in the present crisis to lay aside all discussion and consideration of mere party issues and to give prompt and immediate attention to the preparation and adoption of such measures as are required for the relief of the farmers and other overtaxed and underpaid laborers of the United States.

Mr. VOORHEES. I ask that the resolution may be printed and lie on the table; and in that connection I give notice that at the close of the morning business day after to-morrow, Wednesday, I shall ask the permission of the Senate to submit some remarks in regard to it.

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not understand that the resolution points out any remedy at all. It does not suggest any remedy.

Mr. VOORHEES. I was saying that I should seek the floor to address the Senate upon the subject of the resolution day after to-morrow, at the close of the morning business. If the Senator from Oregon will be in his seat and will listen, there will be some measure pointed out which I hope will have his support.

Mr. MITCHELL. But in the resolution there is nothing suggested. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. BLAIR. I desire to suggest to the Senator from Indiana that by unanimous consent the vote upon the school bill is to be taken on Thursday. Public notice was given of the fact that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] was expected to speak on the bill to-day, the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] to-morrow, and on Wednesday the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS] will close the general discussion.

Mr. VOORHEES. That measure comes up at and after 2 o'clock, I believe?

Mr. BLAIR. Yes.

Mr. VOORHEES. The morning business is usually terminated by half past 12, and I can conclude what remarks I have to make by 2, or closely about that hour, so that I shall not trench much on anybody's time.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 3365) approving, with amendments, the funding act of Arizona;

A bill (H. R. 3934) to authorize the board of supervisors of Maricopa County, Arizona, to issue certain bonds in aid of the construction of a certain railroad;

A bill (H. R. 6474) to submit the location of the county seat of Shoshone County, Idaho Territory, to a vote of the people of said county; and

A bill (H. R. 7170) to authorize the city of Ogden, Utah, to assume an increased indebtedness.

The message also announced that the House had concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the following bills:

A bill (H. R. 4130) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at the city of Pierre, in South Dakota; and

A bill (H. R. 7616) to authorize the Oregon and Washington Bridge Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Columbia River between the State of Oregon and the State of Washington, and to establish it as a post-road.

The message further announced that the House had non-concurred in the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5179) fixing the rate of interest to be charged on arrearages of general and special taxes now due the District of Columbia, if paid within a time specified, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. GROUT, Mr. BURTON, and Mr. HEMPHILL managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 895) to provide a temporary government for the Territory of Oklahoma, with amendments in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 5825) prescribing the times for sales and for notices of sales of property in the District of Columbia for overdue taxes; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are there further resolutions, concurrent or other?

Mr. HALE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maine rise to morning business?

Mr. HALE. If the morning business is ended, I desire to ask the Senate to take up the urgent deficiency appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The business of the morning hour being concluded, the Senator from Maine moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7496) to provide for certain of the most urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 15th instant approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 2994) to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Arkansas River, in the Indian Territory;

An act (S. 1297) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a wagon and foot-passenger bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Lyons, Iowa;"

An act (S. 1858) to shorten the terms of imprisonment in the jail and in the work-house of the District of Columbia on account of good conduct during confinement; and

An act (S. 1905) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the building of a railroad bridge at Fort Smith, in the State of Arkansas," approved July 19, 1888.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills, received from the House of Representatives, were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Territories:

A bill (H. R. 3365) approving, with amendments, the funding act of Arizona;

A bill (H. R. 3934) to authorize the board of supervisors of Maricopa County, Arizona, to issue certain bonds in aid of the construction of a certain railroad;

A bill (H. R. 6474) to submit the location of the county seat of Shoshone County, Idaho Territory, to a vote of the people of said county; and

A bill (H. R. 7170) to authorize the city of Ogden, Utah, to assume an increased indebtedness.

PROPOSED CHANGE OF RULE.

Mr. CALL. On Friday last I submitted a notice, and I again present it this morning. I ask that it be read and submitted to the Senate. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The paper will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

I give notice that I shall move on to-morrow to amend and modify clause 2 of Rule XXXVIII, as follows:

"All information communicated or remarks made by a Senator when acting on nominations concerning the character or qualifications of the persons nominated, also all votes upon any nomination, shall be kept secret."

Also, so much of Rule XXVI, clause 2, as follows: "When acting upon confidential or executive business, unless the same shall be considered in open executive session, the Senate Chamber shall be cleared of all persons, except the Secretary, the Chief Clerk, the Principal Legislative Clerk, the Executive Clerk, and such officers as the Presiding Officer shall think necessary shall be sworn to secrecy."

The object of this motion for change of rule is to allow the consideration of the nomination of Charles Swayne and Joseph N. Stripling in open executive session.

WILKINSON CALL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair holds that any motion to consider executive business must be made in executive session, and he can not now, therefore, entertain the motion of the Senator from Florida.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I also submitted a resolution, which I now ask to have read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has examined the resolution to which the Senator from Florida refers, and he thinks it is obnoxious to the same objection, and therefore he does not regard the resolution as in order under the rules of the Senate with open doors.

Mr. CALL. I submit to the Senate whether or not the Chair has the right to decide that a resolution can not be considered. There is no rule, I submit, by which the Presiding Officer can arbitrarily exclude a resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is the duty of the Chair to pass upon all resolutions that may be offered or motions that may be presented under the rules of the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think the question now presented is a proper one for a secret session, and I move, therefore, that the doors of the Senate be closed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio moves that the doors of the Senate be closed. Is there a second?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I second the motion, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont seconds the motion of the Senator from Ohio. The Sergeant-at-Arms will clear the galleries and close the doors of the Senate.

Mr. CALL. I raise the point of order—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair can not entertain the point of order.

Mr. CALL. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair can not entertain the appeal. The Sergeant-at-Arms will execute the order.

The doors of the Senate were thereupon closed; and after fifty minutes the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business; and after twenty minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 1332) granting to the city of Colorado Springs, in the State of Colorado, certain lands therein described for water reservoirs.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 1477) to increase the appropriation for the erection of a public building at Sacramento, Cal., with an amendment in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 833) providing for the erection of a public building at Paris, Tex.;

A bill (H. R. 7166) to amend section 3 of an act entitled "An act to amend the act dividing the State of Missouri into two judicial districts, and for other purposes;" and Joint resolution (H. Res. 119) requesting the Secretary of War to cause a further report to be made as to the practicability and approximate cost of tunneling the Detroit River at or near Detroit, Mich.

TERRITORY OF OKLAHOMA.

The President pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 895) to provide a temporary government for the Territory of Oklahoma; which were, on motion of Mr. PLATT, ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. REAGAN subsequently said: Has the Chair made any disposition of the Senate bill which came back with an amendment in relation to the Territory of Oklahoma?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was ordered to lie upon the table and be printed with the House amendments, at the request of the chairman of the Committee on Territories.

Mr. REAGAN. I shall desire to submit a few remarks upon the bill before it is disposed of.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 833) providing for the erection of a public building at Paris, Tex., was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The bill (H. R. 7166) to amend section 3 of an act entitled "An act to amend the act dividing the State of Missouri into two judicial districts, and for other purposes" was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 119) requesting the Secretary of War to cause a further report to be made as to the practicability and approximate cost of tunneling the Detroit River at or near Detroit, Mich., was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SACRAMENTO, CAL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1477) to increase the appropriation for the erection of a public building at Sacramento, Cal.; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

RATE OF INTEREST ON TAX ARREARAGES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5179) fixing the rate of interest to be charged on arrearages of general and special taxes now due the District of Columbia if paid within a time specified, and a king a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment and agree to the conference asked by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. McMILLAN, Mr. FARWELL, and Mr. HARRIS were appointed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumes the consideration of the unfinished business, being the bill (S. 185) to aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, when the doors of the Senate were closed a motion which I had made to take up the urgent deficiency bill was pending. I am very desirous that the bill should have a speedy passage by the Senate, and I do not expect it to take much time. I should be glad to go on with it now. I am told the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] desires to speak at the present time upon the educational bill, and I ask the Senator whether he is ready to go on now or will yield some time for the consideration of the appropriation bill.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, if it does not interfere with the Senator I should be glad to go on now, especially as I am under the constraint of an engagement which may possibly take me away.

Mr. HALE. I do not want to interfere with the convenience of the Senator from Virginia, but I will give notice that, unless some other Senator desires to speak upon the pending bill, at the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from Virginia I will move to take up the appropriation bill, and, if I do not to-day, that to-morrow morning after the routine morning business I shall ask the Senate to consider and dispose of the bill.

Mr. McPHERSON. I did not understand what the appropriation bill was.

Mr. HALE. The urgent deficiency bill.

DISPOSITION OF EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Mr. PLUMB. In relation to certain executive documents transmitted to the Senate on Friday last in my absence, I move that the communication from the Secretary of the Interior relative to the membership of the Sac and Fox Indian tribes, with the accompanying papers, be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I also move that the communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitted to the Senate on the same day, relative to the cause of withholding patents for lands within the grant of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, with the accompanying papers, be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Chair be authorized to fill the vacancies in the Committee on Immigration made by the resignation of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] and the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri moves that the vacancies in the Committee on Immigration caused by the resignation of the Senators from Florida and Mississippi be filled by the Chair. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Chair appoints the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS] and the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL].

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 389) to construct a road to the national cemetery at Port Hudson, La.; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 4130) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at the city of Pierre, in South Dakota; and

A bill (H. R. 7617) to authorize the Oregon and Washington Bridge Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Columbia River between the State of Oregon and the State of Washington, and to establish it as a post-road.

RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH THE INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] is entitled to the floor on the unfinished business.

Mr. VEST. With the consent of the Senator from Virginia, as I expect to be absent from the city for a few days, I desire to call up House bill 346, Order of Business 478, which will give rise to no debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Virginia yield for that purpose?

Mr. DANIEL. Yes, sir; I yield for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title of the bill will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 346) to extend "An act to grant the right of way to the Kansas City and Pacific Railroad Company through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes."

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments, in line 6, before the word "company," to strike out "railway" and insert "railroad," and in line 10, after the words "of its," to strike out "railway" and insert "railroad;" so to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of an act approved May 14, 1888, granting the right of way through the Indian Territory to the Kansas City and Pacific Railroad Company, and for other purposes, shall be extended for a period of two years from May 14, 1890, so that said company shall have until May 14, 1892, to build the first 100 miles of its railroad, and two years thereafter to build the remainder thereof and branches.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT TO A BILL.

Mr. SPOONER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the urgent deficiency appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed.

AID TO COMMON SCHOOLS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 185) to aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, the subject under consideration is the measure generally known as the Blair educational bill. It is a subject which has been under discussion for six or seven years, and I can not hope to throw any new light of constitutional law upon it or to add much in the way of facts; and I shall therefore seek for my part simply to give an outline of the considerations which lead me to cast my vote in its favor.

In the first place, however, I think it proper to throw out of the discussion the declaration that this can be looked upon in any light as a bill of mendicancy. I can see no more propriety in declaring that a bill to appropriate public funds for the purposes of education is a bill to fill the hands of beggars than of so declaring as to other appropriation measures which may come before the Senate. It is a little curious that while one class of debaters, in the press, upon the hustings, and in legislative halls, declare that it is a bill of mendicancy another class oppose it upon the opposite ground that nobody has asked for it. Thus we heard a few days ago the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], when he made a strong and able argument clustering together with great power these considerations which have been stated against it and said therein that one of the two reasons why he would not vote for this bill of so-called mendicancy was that nobody had asked for its passage.

The passage of the bill—

Said he—has not been asked for. At the time it was first introduced by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAINE] I think there had been no public expression of opinion in its favor anywhere in the United States.

No State—

He added—

ever asked for it. * * * A majority of the Southern people and their representatives do not want it.

So then, sir, this bill stands opposed before the Senate as an appropriation which beggars cry for and as an appropriation that nobody wants. Between these extreme statements of the question I think there is to be found the "golden mean" of truth. It is not a mendicant's bill any more than an application for an appropriation for a public building is a mendicant's bill. It is not a mendicant's bill any more than the application of a wounded soldier for a pension is a mendicant's bill. It is not a mendicant's bill any more than the bill making appropriations to rivers and harbors is a bill of mendicancy.

But neither is it true in point of fact that no one has asked for it. The State which I have the honor in part to represent upon this floor has asked for it by every channel of communication that a Commonwealth can employ in making known its wishes to the Federal Government. It has asked for its passage in the repeated platforms of the Republican party; it has asked for it in the repeated platforms of the Democratic party; it has asked for it in public meetings and it has asked for it by the unanimous, or nearly unanimous, voice of its General Assembly. The candidates before the people for governor, for Congress, and for the place which I have the honor to occupy have proclaimed that if they were elected they would support it. So there is one State at least which, in unequivocal language, has said that it desired the passage of this bill. And that there are others also is well attested by the records.

For my part, sir, whatever might be my personal predilections upon the question, I should feel constrained to do either one of two things: to resign my seat in this body and retire to my constituents and permit them to send some one here who would fittingly declare their voice or to cast my vote and give such influence, humble as it may be, as I may possess in favor of this measure. If the measure was one which, perchance, violated any fundamental principle of government, if it stripped any one of his right of trial by jury or his writ of habeas corpus, if it trench upon any of the cardinal institutions of liberty which I feel that the citizen should everywhere protect and defend at the risk of his political as well as of his mortal life, I would certainly resign my seat in the Senate before I would support it, for, if perchance, instruction from constituents should violate cardinal principles they could not bind the agent unless he were willing to surrender his convictions of right and wrong to his people.

But I do not find, however gentlemen may differ as to constitutional construction, that there is anything in the Constitution as it has been construed by many of the wisest and best of American statesmen to constrain me to the conclusion that this bill should not be supported. I am candid to say that if we were debating this subject in 1790 rather than in 1890 I should have great doubts whether or not the fathers of this Republic, who formulated the instrument which we have sworn to support, had contemplated giving to Congress the power to pass such a measure as is involved in the bill before us.

But, Mr. President, the discussion as to the construction of that Constitution is not a new one. It began almost co-ordinately with its existence, and there is a broad, beaten road in which many statutes have trodden, year after year and decade after decade, which has blazed the way for the passage of this bill, and if to-day, in the great floods which are now transpiring in the Mississippi Valley, the Mississippi River were to change its bed from its present course and run into Mississippi or into Arkansas, I should fancy myself as much of a cavalier to object to following the course of the stream in a steamer that might float upon its surface, because it did not follow its convolutions according to the territorial boundaries that had once been established, as to refuse at this date in the history of our Government and of accepted constitutional interpretation to vote for a beneficent measure because it might be criticised as not within the language of that instrument as it had been at one time construed or as some might yet construe it.

We have before us in section 8, Article I, of the Constitution the language that—

The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States; but all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States.

Then there follows this broad declaration of the power to lay and apply the taxes, an enumeration of additional and specific powers, which are also conferred upon the Federal Congress, as follows:

- To borrow money on the credit of the United States;
- To regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several States, and with the Indian tribes;
- To establish a uniform rule of naturalization, and uniform laws on the subject of bankruptcies throughout the United States;
- To coin money, regulate the value thereof, and of foreign coin, and fix the standard of weights and measures;
- To provide for the punishment of counterfeiting the securities and current coin of the United States;
- To establish post-offices and post-roads;
- To promote the progress of science and useful arts, by securing for limited times to authors and inventors the exclusive right to their respective writings and discoveries;
- To constitute tribunals inferior to the Supreme Court;
- To define and punish piracies and felonies committed on the high seas, and offenses against the law of nations;
- To declare war, grant letters of marque and reprisal, and make rules concerning captures on land and water;
- To raise and support armies, but no appropriation or money to that use shall be for a longer term than two years;
- To provide and maintain a navy;
- To make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces;
- To provide for calling forth the militia to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrections, and repel invasions;
- To provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining the militia, and for governing such part of them as may be employed in the service of the United States, reserving to the States, respectively, the appointment of the officers, and the authority of training the militia according to the discipline prescribed by Congress;
- To exercise exclusive legislation, in all cases whatsoever, over such district (not exceeding ten miles square) as may, by cession of particular States, and the acceptance of Congress, become the seat of the Government of the United States, and to exercise like authority over all places purchased by the consent of the Legislature of the State in which the same shall be, for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dock-yards, and other needful buildings; and
- To make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers, and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any Department or officer thereof.

Mr. President, in the construction of that Constitution, I conceive that the statesman and the citizen who desires to tread in the path of truth and justice may accept as his guides both the language of the instrument and the logic of facts which has been applied to its interpretation. If we look at the naked instrument itself, standing out before us in the form of a mere literary composition, it can not be said with clearness or with emphasis that its mere statement carries the light of conviction to the mind that it was not intended by that instrument that the power to lay and collect taxes should be co-equal with the power to apply them for any substantive thing which was comprehended in the idea of the common defense or the general welfare of the United States.

In grammatical construction the specific powers which are afterwards enumerated were not necessarily appended as a modification of the general power to "provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States;" and the imagination must connect the main proposition with the declared modification by general theories as to the powers both of the Government and the relation of the States, in order to deduce the argument that the enumerations were made to limit the methods of providing for "the common defense and the general welfare." Therefore, whosoever stands upon a strict construction of the constitutional document must confess that there is at least a broad and a general doubt as to what was the original intent and meaning of those who fashioned this instrument in that form.

Now, then, how are we to interpret the question when we find a subject-matter of construction laid before us out of which we wish to follow the divining rod which shall guide us towards the truth? We must look, as I conceive, to the opinions of those who were the contemporaneous expounders of the instrument and who have been its expounders from time to time in the application of its doctrines to the circumstances which were brought within its jurisdiction.

I find in the speech of my distinguished colleague, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES], a very luminous statement of the views of James Monroe, of Virginia, and I will read from them, as they formulate, in my judgment, a clear exposition and constitutional construction of this language:

Speaking of the general grant of power to Congress contained in the "general welfare" clause, Mr. Monroe said:

The grant consists, as heretofore observed, of a twofold power: the first to raise and the second to appropriate the public money, and the terms used in both instances are general and unqualified. Each branch was obviously drawn with a view to the other, and the import of each tends to illustrate that of the other. The grant to raise money gives a power over every subject from which revenue may be drawn, and is made in the same manner with the grants to declare war, to raise and support armies and a navy, to regulate commerce, to establish post-offices and post-roads, and with all the other specific grants to the General Government.

In the discharge of the powers conveyed in any of these grants there is no other check than that which is to be found in the great principles of our system, the responsibility of the representative to his constituents. If war, for example, is necessary, and Congress declare it for good cause, their constituents will support them in it. A like support will be given them for the faithful discharge of their duties under any and every other power vested in the United States. But should the Representative act corruptly and betray his trust or otherwise prove that he was unworthy of the confidence of his constituents he would be equally sure to lose it and to be removed and otherwise censured according to his deserts.

Again:

Had it been intended that Congress should be restricted in the appropriation of the public money to such expenditures as were authorized by a rigid construction of the other specific grants, how easy would it have been to have provided in it by a declaration to that effect. The omission of such declaration is therefore an additional proof that it was not intended that the grant should be so construed.

The substance—

Says Mr. Monroe in the conclusion of his views—

The substance of what has been urged on this subject may be expressed in a few words. My idea is that Congress have an unlimited power to raise money and that in its appropriation they have a discretionary power, restricted only by the duty to appropriate it to purposes of common defense and of general, not local, national, not State, benefit.

I will also read from the speech of Mr. John C. Calhoun, of South Carolina, made in the year 1817, from which I take this extract:

If the framers had intended to limit the use of the money to the powers afterward enumerated and defined, nothing could have been more easy than to have expressed it plainly. I know it is the opinion of some that the words "to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare," which I have just cited, were not intended to be referred to the power of laying taxes contained in the first part of the section, but that they are to be understood as distinct and independent powers granted in general terms, and are qualified by a more detailed enumeration of powers in the subsequent part of the Constitution.

If such were in fact the meaning intended, surely nothing can be conceived more bungling and awkward than the manner in which the framers have communicated their intention. If it were their intention to make a summary of the powers of Congress in general terms which were afterward to be particularly defined and enumerated, they should have told us so plainly and distinctly; and if the words "to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare" were intended for this summary, they should have headed the list of our powers and it should have been stated that to effect the general objects the following specific powers were granted.

Again he says:

But suppose the Constitution to be silent, why should we be confined in the application of moneys to the enumerated powers? There is nothing in the reason of the thing that I can perceive why it should be so restricted; and the habitual and uniform practice of the Government coincides with my opinion. Our laws are full of instances of money appropriated without any reference to the enumerated powers. We granted by a unanimous vote, or nearly so, $50,000 to the distressed inhabitants of Caracas, and a very large sum at two different times to the St. Domingo refugees. If we are restricted in the use of our money to the enumerated powers, on what principle can the purchase of Louisiana be justified? To pass over many other instances, the identical power which is now the subject of discussion has in several instances been exercised. To look no further back, at the last session a considerable sum was granted to complete the Cumberland road. In reply to this uniform course of legislation, I expect it will be said that our Constitution is founded on positive and written principles, and not on precedents. I do not deny the position; but I have introduced these instances to prove the uniform sense of Congress and the country (for they have not been objected to) as to our powers; and surely they furnish better evidence of the true interpretation of the Constitution than the most refined and subtle arguments.

If our laws were then, in 1817, "full of instances of money appropriated without any reference to the enumerated powers," how much fuller are they of such instances now in 1890! If the "uniform sense of Congress and the country" had already gathered the force of precedent, how much stronger now are the accumulated precedents of many years!

Mr. President, I might follow the example of other Senators and read, from the writings of many eminent statesmen who have figured in public affairs, some statement of views on this subject which would look to the one side or to the other of this general proposition; but when I look to the practice of the Government which has been paralleled with their interpretation of the Constitution for nearly a hundred years, I find that the bed of the stream is so broad and deep that at this stage of the controversy he would be a bold man who would attempt to maintain that the construction which is contended for by the supporters of this bill was an unjust, an unwise, or an unprecedented one.

It was the remark of Sir James Mackintosh that "constitutions grow." In so saying he simply announced that general principle of evolution as applied to constitutional construction that applies to all created things that have within them either animal life or that artificial life which is imparted to them by the brains and hearts of men.

I have before me a striking illustration in the way of literary criticism and of constitutional declaration as to how the instrument which binds us to-day has grown. I read in the Life of Mr. Webster, by H. CABOT LODGE, a scholarly gentleman of the city of Boston, who now represents a constituency in Congress, this comment upon the construction of our Constitution at the time it was adopted:

When the Constitution was adopted by the votes of States at Philadelphia and accepted by votes of States in popular conventions it is safe to say there was not a man in the country, from Washington and Hamilton on the one side, to George Clinton and George Mason on the other, who regarded the new system as anything but an experiment entered upon by the States, and from which each and every State had the right to peaceably withdraw, a right which was very likely to be exercised.

Now, here is the critical exposition of the Constitution by a student of history who is now representing a Republican constituency in the Halls of Congress, who gives it as his deliberate judgment that at the time this instrument under which we are now sitting was adopted there was not a man in all the country, from the extreme Federalist on the one side to the extreme State-rights man on the other, who did not regard it as a simple experiment of Government from which any State had the right to retire at any time peaceably. If I were to utter on this floor that doctrine now I should be looked upon as an antediluvian. I should be regarded as throwing into the debate a question which had been settled by the force of events and which had been stricken from the docket of open controversies.

Therefore, it does not become us to contend, as I conceive, that these principles of government, which have been settled by the habitual practice of legislative bodies, by Commonwealths, by popular assemblies, by political conventions, and by general acceptance of the people, are longer open matters of controversy further than this, that, while the one side or the other side is certainly open to criticism, it is evident that the final determination of the points which are raised upon the one side or the other of the question can find no conclusion until the supreme tribunal of this country has pronounced upon them.

Then, when I come to contemplate this measure, whatever might have been the predilections of constitutional construction which I received from education, from hereditary direction, from local surroundings, I am obliged to recognize as a fact of our political existence that the question has been passed upon by those who were competent to consider it and to determine it, and that it does not to-day operate as a fair and just impediment to the exercise of such views of public policy upon the subject as our minds might bring us to the conclusion was right and proper.

Now, then, laying aside that question as one which has been sufficiently discussed, and as to which I have given but a suggestion and an outline of my own deliberations, the next question presents itself: Is this a wise and proper measure?

Mr. President, this measure was not the offspring of the solicitations of the Commonwealths of the South. It was, in my judgment, the offspring of a generous and philanthropic feeling on the part of those statesmen who first suggested it, and, in my judgment, it is the first measure of general and comprehensive legislation since the unhappy period of 1861 to 1865 in which the members of that great political organization which has, in the main, controlled the legislation of the country have proposed to apply liberal methods to the solution of those questions that were left as the aftermath of a bloody struggle.

In my opinion there is not an illiberal word nor an illiberal statute upon the statute-books of the United States which was not a profound mistake of statesmanship. I do not believe that there is a single disfranchisement, a single penalty, a single harsh word spoken in the laws of the United States since the last gun was fired at Appomattox that has not retarded, instead of aided, the processes of healing and reconstruction which have been at work.

Mr. President, we belong to a race of people who are easily led by proper persuasion addressed to self-respect, but whom it is difficult to drive, and the man who does not understand the people whom he deals with is groping in utter darkness when he applies towards their government statutes which are inconsistent with their character and with their history. If you will look into your own hearts you will see that God Almighty has written on them that truth, and if you would consistently treat others as you would have them treat you about subjects on which we differ, you would have given to your minds a legend that would guide us out of the wilderness of difficulty and controversy.

On the other hand, I do not believe that any illiberal treatment of any of these subjects from the Southern side of this controversy has had any beneficent influence in solving them. The people of one side of the Potomac River are very much like the people on the other side of the Potomac River in the bottom traits of character which control and govern their political conduct. They are different in their surroundings and they have a diversity of things to deal with, but in the habits of mind and in the principles of action which control they are not so widely apart; and you will find an interpretation to it—of the influences which will control others—if you will consider how you would yourselves be controlled.

In the contemplation of this educational bill there is presented to my mind the first measure which had its origin in the generous and philanthropic modes of the North for dealing with the great issues which we have to solve at some time or other in the Southern country.

I do not doubt the truth of the statements made a few days ago by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] that in the breast of the Northern people—behind the voices of contention—there is generosity and magnanimity. They belong to a race of people who have the seeds of generosity and magnanimity in their breasts, and the difference between the great segments of people who inhabit the American Republic is not so much the difference of intuition as it is the difference of local surroundings.

You will see that in the sphere of action that this race has occupied here in America they have dealt with each other very much as our forefathers dealt with us. Look at England, for instance, and see how she treated the American colonies which were the children of her loins and whom she had every prompting of nature to treat with the utmost generosity and magnanimity. How did she treat them? She treated them very much as any man two or three thousand miles away from the subject which he has to deal with is apt to treat it; that is, with ignorance of the actual conditions which he attempted to deal with. Therein arise the principle and the necessity for local self-government. I think you may trace the great calamities which have befallen successive portions of the great family to which we belong to their failure to apply to others who were under their jurisdiction the principles of action which they would have demanded for themselves.

In the year 1787, Lord Mansfield, sitting in the Court of King's Bench, rendered what was welcomed in many parts of the Christian world as a great judgment. It was a judgment in the case of Somerset, the black, in which he pronounced, in a style becoming a great tribunal, that the air of England was too pure to be breathed by any one but a freeman, and so discharged Somerset from slavery. Yet the very crowned heads of that great Government which had placed him upon the bench to pronounce that declaration had filled the American continent, and the islands of the sea, and every place that their slave-ships could reach, with slaves. In other words, in England, where they had no use for Somerset, the black, the air was too pure for him to breathe in any other capacity than as a freeman; but in effect England had said, "You colonists in America, 3,000 miles away and half barbarians, as we choose to contemplate you, here is black for you until your gorge rises against it; and when you, Virginia, and you, Georgia, and you, South Carolina, and you, little colony here and there, stand up and say to me, 'Don't send any darkies here,' we, the King and the Queen, have an interest in the slave trade, and we will appoint Mansfield chief justice to say there shall be no slaves here, but we will fill the world with them, to the utter repudiation of every moral sentiment upon which our judgment at home is predicated."

Mr. President, there is no room for the Pharisee to stand up in American politics and say, "I am holier than thou." What England did toward her weaker colonies our Northern brethren have done toward us; and they will find, if they pursue that experience, that they will always reach a vain result in working out the problem they have to deal with.

A man in England does not know how to govern the American continent. A curious thing happened in English history which you would see repeated in American history if you were to accept it as your example. There was a time when England almost despaired of retaining possession of Canada, of Australia, of New Zealand, and of her other colonies. She thought that that local spirit of freedom which had risen here so fiercely in America would be widespread, and that her great empire would in many places go to pieces. Bowing to what she regarded as the inevitable, she passed measures which gave her colonies local representative governments, with their parliaments and other attributes of autonomy. The very reverse of the effect which she anticipated befell. That was what they wanted, and when they received it they no longer had that impulse to separate themselves from the mother country which before had actuated them. The integrity to-day of the British Empire in many parts of the world where her flag still flies is due to the liberality of measures which sprang out of her despair.

Froude, the historian, commenting on her policy, says:

Events mock at human foresight, and nothing is certain but the unforeseen. Constitutional government and an independent executive were conferred upon our larger colonies with the express and scarcely veiled intention that at the earliest moment they were to relieve the mother country of responsibility for them. They were regarded as fledglings who are fed only by the parent birds till their feathers are grown, and are then expected to shift for themselves. They were provided with the full plumage of parliamentary institutions on the home pattern and model, and the expectation of experienced politicians was that they would each at the earliest moment go off on their separate accounts and would bid us a friendly farewell. The irony of fate has turned to foil the wisdom of the wise. As far as our own colonies are concerned it is clear that the abandonment by the mother country of all pretense to interfere in their internal management has removed the only cause which could possibly have created a desire for independence.—The English in the West Indies, Froude, page 2.

When I take up this Blair bill I see in it not bayonets, not banners, but I see in it an appropriation for the enlightened agencies of peace. Some very powerful and fundamental consideration would have to stand in my path before I ever voted against any well-devised measure for education.

I had the honor to be a member of the Virginia Legislature in 1868, when it assembled under a constitution which required that our free schools should be put in operation within a certain time. I voted with those who went ahead of the constitution and said, "Here and now let us start out upon this new régime of enlightening the people." Any one who had any divination of what lay in the nature of things could see that it was going to be a difficult thing to preserve free government and pure government with two races lying side by side, the one illiterate, the other learned; the one poor, the other richer; the one without prestige and power, the other with them; the one emerging from bondage, the other free in every instinct; but, more than all this, the one black, the other white.

You may preach as much as you please, you may theorize to the world's end, but you can not alter the facts as God has created them, that there are lines of division—of prejudice, if you so please to call it—between these two races. My friend from New Hampshire may say it is nothing but a prejudice. Be it so. A prejudice is a fact, and you can not alter the fact by calling it by one name or another. His people have got it just as strong as other people of the same race, and it will show itself whenever they are in a position to have it presented to them in the same attitudes and bearings which others have before them. It is the same in the State of Ohio, where the white people are struggling to prevent mixed schools; it is the same in Illinois, where they refuse mixed schools; it is the same in Oklahoma, where new parties of the different races are now being brought together and old-time frictions are not brought with them that it is to-day in Virginia, or in South Carolina, or elsewhere. It may be unconsciously to you; it may be that you look in the glass of legislation before your eyes and straightway forget what manner of men you are; but what did the President mean when he said that the people in Indiana would not like to have a colored postmaster sent there?

What do you mean when you sit here day after day, year after year, and never make a Supreme Court judge of a colored man, or a district court judge of a colored man, or a circuit court judge of a colored man? Although you say that you recognize the fact, as presented to you by the Senator from Massachusetts, that he has been here time and again with able colored men who served in the Senate and who served in the other House, how is it that you have never yet sent one of them abroad to represent the people of whom he is the type except when you found a black republic to send him to? How is it that in the Cabinet of your President, how is it that in all the Departments, while you proclaim that that race has an abundance of men who are down-trodden and oppressed, who are fit to be judges of our courts, are fit to be Congressmen of our constituencies, never anywhere, at any time, in any year, have you proved the faith of your declaration or indicated to the country that you are sincere by taking up one of them in your own midst and sending him here to represent you in the House of Representatives or in the Senate? An ounce of practice, Mr. President, is worth a hog's-head of preaching.

Mr. President, going on further in the trend of my argument as to the Congressional practice in legislation about this measure, I herewith present a list of no less than twenty-five or thirty measures, cases where relief has been granted by Congress to sufferers by fire, floods, earthquakes, and in the extermination of diseases.

What difference is there—constitutionally speaking—in the passage of this bill and in the passage of such bills as those which are here referred to? They are all, or nearly all, based on the constitutional prerogative to provide for the general welfare.

But it has been urged that the appropriations in this bill are more for the benefit of the South than of the North. I acknowledge it. The beds of illiteracy are more in the South than in the North, because the percentage of illiteracy is so great amongst the colored people. If you will look, for instance, to the State of Virginia you will find that the illiterates among the colored people who can not write are 19 per cent., while the illiterates of the white people who can not write are only 13 per cent. So then the appropriation in the bill is measured by the evil which that appropriation is applied to cure; and if it happens that that predominates in one section of the United States it has so happened by the common action of the whole country, and not of the Southern people alone.

When the Constitution of 1787 was formed it may suit the Fourth of July speaker of the present day to proclaim the fact that the North was the great section of freedom and that the South was the section of slavery; but the historical fact is contrary to the declaration. The republic that was formed in 1787 was a slave republic, and if those who inhabited its northern portion were opposed to the formation of a slave republic, then, when the Constitution was being framed, was the time for them to enter the caveat and to maintain their stand against it. But they came into the Constitutional Convention, entered the Union, and swore to maintain the constitution of slavery.

I know that in the partisanship of debate it is sometimes thrown up to the Southern people that they, or some of their representatives, held lightly their oaths to support the Constitution of the United States.

It must be an exceedingly bigoted and narrow mind that does not perceive that if that kind of crimination and recrimination is in order there would be just as much force in it from the one side as the other. The men who believed in the doctrine of secession, whatever may be your construction of the Constitution, did not have upon their minds and consciences the idea that they were violating an oath. They thought, as Mr. CABOT LODGE has said in his calm and deliberate criticism, as the fathers thought, that they were but exercising a right. So should all presume; for we should much prefer to put any question of issue between any part of the people of this country upon a ground which would make us feel that we were dealing with high-minded and worthy men than upon a ground which would attribute to any a dishonorable and ignoble action.

Suppose in reply to those who would criminate us it were to be said, "You abolished slavery; you had sworn to support it; it was a violation of your oaths." You would answer at once that you did it as a matter of war and that war suspended the Constitution. If war can suspend a constitution for one conscience it can suspend it for another; and as soon as men perceive and realize and apply the doctrine that they are dealing with a people who are actuated by as high and noble sentiments and who are seeking the right and to follow the truth with as earnest an ambition and as sincere an intention as they, they will then meet upon the ground where parley will be fruitful of wisdom.

Mr. President, in the State of Virginia, which I have the honor here in part to represent, I do not conceive that, so far as her colored people are concerned or any portion of her population is concerned, considering the interest of the Federal Government in the elevation of its constituents and in the enlightenment of its people, there will be any undue share of this appropriation. If I were to look beyond the surface view of the matter I could show by figures that that Commonwealth had richly contributed out of the pockets of her people to this very surplus which she asks may be thus in part dispensed. Since the year 1870 no less than $114,000,000, an amount five times the whole public debt of that Commonwealth which has lain upon it like a nightmare, has gone out of the pockets of her people to the internal-revenue coffers of the United States.

It will be said to me, perhaps, in reply, "Ah! Virginia and her people do not pay that. We pay it who use tobacco, who use whisky, who use any of the various articles upon which that tax has been levied." That is but a partial truth. To a certain extent taxation does diffuse itself and its burdens through a community, but you would not permit that argument to be carried very far if the retort were made to you that in the heavy tariff taxation which intercepts the imported goods the people of Virginia and the people of the whole country were paying, by that very principle of diffusion, a much mightier tribute than that paid into the Federal Treasury from internal taxation.

I would also point the Senate to the fact that a great work is being done, not only in Virginia, but in all the Southern States for the elevation and enlightenment of the colored race. I have a table before me showing what the Southern States have done since 1870. It shows that in the sixteen Southern States, beginning with Delaware (which should hardly be counted as a Southern State in this relation) and Texas, $252,000,000 have gone out of the pockets of its people for the purposes of education, and the State which I represent is the fourth State in the list in the magnitude of its donations and appropriations.

I will append the table to my remarks, as it contains an imposing statement.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the Senator from Virginia allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. DANIEL. Certainly.

Mr. MORGAN. Does the Senator from Virginia desire to increase that enormous amount of taxation upon his people in time to come during the next eight years covered by this bill?

Mr. DANIEL. I do not wish to increase that tax in the form in which it has there been drawn from the people. If my distinguished friend from Alabama was upon the floor instead of myself, I would ask him how long he had been here trying to get rid of excessive Federal taxation, and if he could point to a time now, after his many years of service, in which he could foresee that either he or any of his colleagues could dispense with it.

Mr. MORGAN. I will answer that question. I have tried for thirteen years in this body to reduce Federal taxation because I knew that my people had as much taxation, or more, in proportion to their ability to pay than the people of richer communities in different sections.

I should like to say in this connection, if the Senator will permit me, that while he seems to treat this as a bill to dispose of a surplus in the Treasury, it is a bill that runs over a period of eight years and requires an annual average taxation of the people of the United States of $8,777,000 for all that period of time. I therefore think that whatever effort I might be disposed to make (and certainly I shall make all I can while I remain here) to relieve the people from taxation would amount to nothing if we saddle upon this country a debt which will average $8,777,000 a year and to run through eight years. This bill does not deal with a surplus in the Treasury at all except the amount that may now be in it for the first payment. It is a bill for taxation for eight years, amounting in the aggregate to $8,777,000 for school purposes and $2,000,000 for school-houses.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, there are two ways of dealing with every subject. The one is to deal with it abstractly and imagine ideal things which may possibly, under some conditions, be brought about. The other is to take the thing as you find it and try to get the best out of it that is attainable.

My distinguished friend has been here thirteen years. It is no reproach to him, neither is it a reproach to the party of which he is a member (I am not arguing, however, the question now of reproach to any one), but it is the fact that you have been upon this hunt for thirteen years, and at the end of thirteen years you do not see that you are a bit nearer than it seemed when you started. Every year there has been in the Treasury a surplus which had much better been applied to education than to many of the things that it was applied to.

I do not believe that the question as to whether we shall vote for this bill is going to have allied to it the question whether that much money will be realized by excessive taxation to meet it or not. It is in the Treasury now. It was there last year. It will be there next year. If we are depending upon the political organization of which we are members to get rid of it, the attitude of affairs which we face to-day in this very body is not one that would lead even so sanguine a statesman as my friend to anticipate that he will have that difficulty relieved at any very near date. But, be that as it may, if in a year or two, or after awhile, the necessary appropriations for other things shall be so close as possibly to interfere with the carrying out of this bill, I think we might as well wait until we get to the impediment before we say that it is insuperable. We are not at it now. In the mean time, after an experiment of one or two years, it may be discovered that this bill has been so beneficial that we had better have a little lower tower on a public building and a little more school-house. It may be that at the end of that time we shall cut off extravagances in some other things in order to make way for light and knowledge. On the other hand, it may turn out that the beneficial results anticipated do not flow. If so, it would be very easy, under a constrained Treasury, to stop the evil.

So then, at last, the difficulty which my honorable friend suggests is not a present difficulty. It is not a difficulty which is likely in all probability to confront us at a very early day, and sufficient to that day when it comes be the evil thereof.

Another objection which has been made to this bill is that it has a tendency to be destructive of local self-government, that it tends against the integrity and independence of the State governments. I look upon local self-government as the most precious of all the legacies we have inherited from our fathers. I look with extreme jealousy and apprehension upon, and with a disposition to combat, anything that takes out of a locality the power to administer its local affairs according to its will. I believe that the preservation of the principles of local self-government are essential to the progress, to the happiness, and to the perpetuity of the free institutions which here spread over a continent.

The difficulty which we have in dealing with the local affairs from a central standpoint is not the difficulty of the inferior intelligence nor the difficulty of inferior disposition, but the difficulty inherent in time, place, and circumstance of knowing and understanding the thing that is to be dealt with. We saw that illustrated time and again during the war when there was a Commander-in-Chief of the armies seated in Washington who had half a dozen lieutenants out in the field dealing with crete things in the concrete. An editor, a critic, a commander here could very easily perceive how, according to the rules of war as laid down upon a map or sketched on a piece of paper, armies could be hemmed in and destroyed, but the general who was in a marsh or in a pass of a mountain, who had heat and cold and obstacle and danger to deal with, was under very different conditions. There was the same kind of experience on the other side of the river.

When Thomas J. Jackson one year was roaming about in Northwest Virginia he was so berated with criticism or restraint that he tendered his resignation. The next year his name was upon every man's lip. When General Lee was out in Western Virginia he was unsuccessful in his plans and the critics retired him. When opportunity came he showed what metal he was made of. When Albert Sidney Johnston was devising schemes of a campaign he was so bounded that when he did finally set his army in motion he rode, in the eager spirit of victory, to his death. When Joseph E. Johnston was confronting, with the remnants of a command which had been time and again cut to pieces, one of the ablest generals and one of the greatest armies the United States ever sent to the field, public criticism was such that he was taken away from the head of the army. Scarcely was he taken away when the army went to pieces. He was sent back to it too late to restore a field now lost. It was simply the difference between local government and distant government. The men who were far from the battle could see exactly how it ought to be waged, but the men who were there face to face with difficulty had things to deal with that they wot not of.

Now, Mr. President, that is the Southern difficulty, and the impossibility of its intelligent treatment from a distant standpoint. The people who live in remote parts of our country can not understand all the conditions and situations of the problem we have before us. Yet we wish not only by our own example in the State Legislatures and in State policy, but here and everywhere to follow the lines of enlightenment and of Christian influence wherever they are held out. The times of force have logically ended. The time to apply reason, and system, and persuasion, and encouragement, and liberality, and magnanimity, and open and generous dealing is here and now. I find them in this bill. It will be an assurance to the people of the South that the Federal Congress holds them and their conditions in considerate remembrance. It will be an indication to the colored people of the South that those who preach generosity are willing to practice it.

Nor will your generosity be any greater than that now practiced by their Southern neighbors and friends. Not 10 per cent. of the taxation of the Southern people, or but a little more, that goes to the education of the colored people comes from the colored people's pockets. It comes from the property-holding and from the intelligent classes. But they have not flinched from it. No man can read the educational reports or credit the accounts that come up from a thousand witnesses in the South without seeing that everywhere in that country, from the Potomac to Texas, the process of educating and elevating is going on in a healthy and in a commendable way. There is no more generosity in this bill than there is in the bills which pass their Legislatures year after year and day after day.

It may be said indeed that the Southern people owe something to the colored man. So they do. At the same time the colored man owes something to them. He worked for them without wage; but what have they made of him? He came to them speaking a gibberish; they gave him a language. He came to them naked; he is now clothed with civilization. He came ignorant; and yet ere they had finished with him even in a condition of slavery he was declared intelligent enough to become an American citizen and to be invested with the full rights and prerogatives of a sovereign under our Constitution. He is the only man on the face of this earth to-day who had liberty given him as a precious gift. Every other race has won it by the flash of the sword and at the point of the bayonet.

If you were to sum up now the balance of account between the North and South and between white man and colored, the colored man would have the largest balance to his credit in what he has gained through his American civilization. We all realize and know that he is a weaker brother. How strong he may become no man can surely tell. There is scarcely one of us who has not in one thing or another been disappointed by the event as fulfilling our prophecies. It was thought at the North during the war, and was thought at the South, that the colored man would rise in revolution. He did not rise. It has been thought since the war that he was not capable of this or that and that the enlargement of his rights in one particular or another would lead to conflict. In some respects these anticipations have not been fulfilled. But looking at the whole subject in a broad way, not belittling the observation to pick out a sample fact here and there, and say this specimen indicates the character of the whole, no man who has broad comprehension of the drifts of history can deny that taking into the account all the items, little and big, not only has the progress of the colored man in the South been rapid, but that the progress of the whole Southern people has not only been rapid but marvelous, considering the conditions they were under in 1865.

Mr. President, I believe from the limited sphere of my own observation and reading that the grandest history which was ever written in America or in any country is the history of the Southern people since the war. It is not brilliant, it is not illustrated by the rise of men overshadowing their neighbors in greatness of intellect or in splendor of achievement, but it has been the calm, equable movement of the whole people up out of the slough of despond into restored prestige and power and the reacquisition of wealth and influence.

The State of Virginia happened to be the very focus upon which the lines of battle poured their fire. Its banking institutions, its insurance companies, its homes, its property, the accumulations of wealth of over two hundred years, were swept away as a piece of paper would be swept away in a flame. Yet that Commonwealth, though cut in twain, has paid since 1870 $114,000,000 through one source of taxation to the Federal Government and has spent some $25,000,000 in the education of her people.

The condition there to-day has been described to you by my worthy colleague [Mr. BARBOUR]. Sir, I do not consider that it is a condition at all peculiar to that State, but one which is shared in by nearly every Commonwealth in America. You see a certain degree and character of prosperity there, but it is not a prosperity which spreads itself with an equal hand all over the Commonwealth. The agriculture of the State is deeply depressed. I do not attribute it in any degree whatsoever to any inferiority of her people, to any indisposition on their part to labor, for they are full of energy, pluck, and aspiration, but to conditions which apply in every part of the American Union and which are working out their results to-day, North, South, East, and West. Yesterday I picked up the New York Times and I read there about the condition of agriculture in New Jersey and in Ohio.

The decadence—

Says the Times of Saturday—

of agricultural industry in New Jersey has been called recently in a variety of ways to the attention of the State authorities. The report of the Agricultural Bureau, just presented, presents the facts in a strong light.

Then, turning to Ohio, the Times says:

In the last six years the price of farm lands has fallen from 20 to 35 per cent. and is still falling, with no signs of the bottom being near. Hundreds have been forced to sell their homes and seek cheaper homes far from markets in the West, and thousands of others are to-day hopelessly embarrassed, barely able to keep themselves and families and pay their taxes, to say nothing of paying the interest on their debts. Never, except after a failure of crops, has such widespread depression prevailed among the farmers. The crops were up to the average last year, but they brought no relief to the tariff-ridden farmers. In one of the best agricultural counties of North Central Ohio, a county that stands among the first three in the State in wheat-raising, I know from personal observation and acquaintance that nearly one-fourth of the farmers are in financial straits and that farm lands are a drug on the market at a price 25 per cent. lower than they were held at ten years ago. Yet this county is traversed by five railroads, five of them trunk-lines, and is settled by as economical and thrifty a class of people as can be found in the State.

I had no idea of introducing even the name of the tariff in this discussion, neither shall I, as matter of illustration or argument. But the fact is, Mr. President, let it come from one source or another, the depressed condition of agriculture in the States of Virginia and Maryland, as pointed out by my colleague, is not a local depression, but one that is as widespread almost as the map of the Republic. If you will go to the State of my honorable friend from New Hampshire, if we may believe the reports of its commissioner of agriculture, you find deserted homes and the continuous tread of its ingenious youth towards the West. If you go to Massachusetts you see the same thing. Yet when the facts are suggested our friends will tell us that the workmen of New England have got large sums in the savings-banks. That very fact is one which indicates that something is wrong. Men do not put their wealth in savings-banks on small interest when their communities are prosperous and when they want to acquire more enlarged homes and grounds and have the temptation to invest in profitable transactions.

Mr. President, this is the condition in the State which I represent, and which I think will be found to be a type of many other States. There is a spotted and a striped prosperity. Go along the lines of the great trunk railroads, from the mineral regions of Southwestern Virginia to the harbor at Norfolk, or from Iron Gate, in Alleghany County, to Newport News, and you will find that an industrial movement unprecedented in the South is going on. You will find that you will have to get a new geography every two or three months to keep up with the new towns that are located and the new communities which are organized. There is the town of Roanoke, in the district which I had the honor to represent in the Forty-ninth Congress, which had 500 inhabitants when I came here, and which has 20,000 now. There are other new towns up and down the line of that great trunk railway, the Norfolk and Western, and still other new ones springing up on the Chesapeake and Ohio. Northern capital and Northern immigration are pouring in there in an unprecedented stream. But it is not true that Northern capital and Northern industry are doing all or more than a large, substantial percentage of this great work. The mind of the people of our State is moving in these industrial directions. Its cultured men and men of intellect and wealth are active in the line of mineral development and in the establishment of industries; and the masses are energetically pressing forward.

But the moment you leave the great railway lines, where prosperity has fallen in great big drops and larded the lean earth with aggregations of industry and capital, and go out into the country side, you will find depreciated lands in Virginia and the farming class are undergoing depressed conditions in many if not in all parts of the State, just as you will find the case to be in Maryland, in Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Ohio, New York, and all the way up to New Hampshire, and in the West, as we hear, also.

Mr. President, do these classes of the community desire the passage of this bill? They do. They are under a weight of taxation, not only in my State but in others, which they can but illy bear under the circumstances of their situation. They would welcome a well directed appropriation from the Federal Treasury which would give enlarged school accommodations, which would carry the school-house, as King Alfred carried justice, to every man's door, and which would indicate the disposition of the Federal Government to share with their State governments the burdens which the Commonwealths have to bear, and to assist them in solving the great issues upon which the welfare of themselves and of this whole country depends.

Mr. President, when I take up this bill, although there are some things in it which I would have different if I were the author of it or chief director of its language, it is as unobjectionable a bill as ever has been here upon this subject. No State is required to accept this money unless it desires it. The Federal Government does not undertake to prescribe school-book or name the teacher. It simply turns over this fund, which it holds in trust for all the people, to the State government, to be administered by it on certain well defined lines of appropriation, and its supervision of that appropriation is like its supervision of every other appropriation, a supervision simply to see that the money is guided to the goal at which it is directed.

Mr. President, neither is there anything in this bill that would tend to sectarian, sectional, or race attrition. It is provided that these schools shall be non-sectarian, so that religious liberty in them will be absolutely preserved. It is provided also that white and colored schools may be conducted separately, so that it leaves the two races to seek out their own destinies without having the one push upon the other in any hostile manner. Then, furthermore, in the regulation of those things which shall be taught there is liberality in this bill. I appreciate what was said by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] when he declared that "the three R's" were the great things to be considered in public schools, reading, writing, and arithmetic, and this bill provides for the instruction in "reading, writing, speaking the English language, arithmetic, geography, the history of the United States, and such other branches of useful knowledge as may be taught under local laws."

There then is the hand of the Federal Government fixing justly the limits of "must" and the limits of "may." If there be local idiosyncrasies or local practices or local customs, which ought to be respected in the observance of education, they are respected; but the line of demarkation in what must be placed, as I conceive, exactly where it should be placed, education in "reading, writing, arithmetic, speaking of the English language, geography, and history," alone to be required.

I know that there was at one time a disposition to prescribe by this bill that "copies of all school-books authorized by the school boards or other authorities of the respective States and Territories, and used in the schools of the same," should be "filed with the Secretary of the Interior." I believe that that provision was originally inserted from a sensitive feeling upon the part of some Senators or Representatives that there were occasionally used Southern school-books in Southern schools which commented upon political affairs and historical events in a manner which was calculated to make the rising generation in the South form opinions and generate feelings which were antagonistic to the Federal Government and to the results of the war.

Mr. President, whether from the North or from the South, no patriot and no wise man would, in my judgment, ever desire to see written in any school-book to be used anywhere in this Republic those diatribes which belong to the hustings and which would be calculated to make any one portion of this Republic hate the people of another. I would not have written in a Southern school-book, if I were the Czar to dictate what should be written in any one of them, those things which would preserve the animosities and revive the hates that belong to a period which we should leave behind us. Neither would I have written in them anything that would hold up to public opprobrium or scorn those who were of our own blood and bone, and if the Southern people were willing to do that they would be utterly unworthy to be American citizens or to share with any worthy companionship the dignity of conducting the affairs of a great and free republic.

The Southern people are not so sensitive about these matters as to prevent them from desiring the pouring of liberal and generous thought into all the channels of their public education. I do not wish to teach my children or that any man should teach them to hate the Government of which I am a citizen and a loyal and firm friend, to be counted upon in a day of difficulty; but neither do I wish any man to teach them, nor shall he with my consent or without my protest, to look upon me or mine or my people with aught but those feelings of veneration and respect which are due from the child to the ancestry from which he sprang.

Mr. President, I believe that we may attain liberal results better by saying nothing on some subjects than by commanding things which must rest within disposition and discretion. I recollect to have seen a picture on one occasion in a picture-store of a little French girl who was looking at a glass of water sparkling in front of her, who said: "Oh! how delicious it would be if it were only bad!" Mr. President, human nature is that way constituted, that if you try to make it do a thing it has a disposition to decline, not because it is unwilling to do it, but because you have tried to force it.

You may remember the story of Andrew Jackson when he was President, and a letter came to him written in French in which was used the word "demande." He broke out in a passion, and used some very uncomplimentary terms towards the French minister who had written it, and said he would see him somewhere else first! [Laughter.] Happily at that juncture the interpreter came in, who explained to Andrew Jackson, who was not much of a French scholar, that this word "demande" in French did not signify what it seemed to signify in English, "demand," but was merely the French synonym for the word "request." "Ah! If that be so," replied Old Hickory, "it is all right, and I will do it with pleasure."

Mr. President, that is human nature in its highest and best form, not in its erratic and eccentric forms, the world over. Try to boss and compel, and it kicks. Meet it civilly, and it follows. Now, if this bill is passed without exactions, without things that are calculated to irritate and revive unpleasantness, it will be received in the cordial spirit in which it was tendered.

I was about, in speaking of the subjects to be taught in the public schools, to say something in regard to the prescription that history should be taught, and to add, in connection with that thought, what were the views of Thomas Jefferson upon that subject. To my mind Thomas Jefferson saw the map of the nineteenth century in prevision more plainly than any statesman of his time. Read his writings, his predictions, his injunctions as applicable to the century of our growth, and you will scarcely find a suggestion which he made which, had it been adopted, would not have resulted in boundless good, nor will you scarce find a departure from his advice which did not result in difficulty, in embarrassment, and in disaster. He saw the necessity for education in this Republic when he stood upon the threshold of its being, and, within the confines of the State which gave him birth, he dedicated his best talents and writings to the building up in that Commonwealth of a great and comprehensive system of free schools. He would have had, according to his conception of that democracy of enlightenment which he would have founded, free schools in the hundreds or thousands and then academies. The University of Virginia was to be the great capital of education in that Commonwealth. It was a long time coming, but even now it has come. The University of Virginia is the crown of our free educational system; and a noble crown it is, worthy of him. The Virginia Military Institute and the Blacksburgh College are also parts of that system, to a degree, and the closing scenes of the education of those who may start with the common school, go to the high school, and finally wind up fairly armed and equipped for the battles of the world before them.

Now, Mr. President, I will conclude my remarks by reading a page—

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from Virginia allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. DANIEL. Certainly.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator refers to Mr. Jefferson. I ask the Senator if it is not true—I am not sure whether it was in his farewell address, in an inaugural address, or in a message—that Jefferson suggested that when there was a surplus in the Treasury, by a constitutional amendment moneys could be taken from the United States Treasury and granted to educational purposes and to the improvement of roads, and perhaps some other objects; but did he not suggest that it would require an amendment of the Constitution to do it?

Mr. DANIEL. It is my recollection that he did; and yet, Mr. President, I have a page of history before me which is scarcely less instructive than the declaration of Mr. Jefferson. I have a page of history before me in a Synopsis of the American Almanac for 1884. It is a page that belongs not to the logic of language, but to the logic of facts. There are two kinds of logic we have to use in dealing with practical subjects: the one is the logic of language and the other is the logic of fact. Now, then, here is the logic of fact. I will gladly answer the question of my distinguished friend by conceding fully what he says and by saying here is the reply: Here is the State of Tennessee, which has received from the Federal Government grants for schools and universities of 100,000 acres of public land. This page of the almanac is an answer.

This table shows the area of the several States and Territories containing public lands, and the quantity donated for educational purposes by Congress from 1789 to June 30, 1878:

The editor of the Almanac (Mr. A. R. Spofford) adds in a note to this table the following comment:

Under an act of Congress approved September 4, 1841, each State thereafter admitted to the Union was granted 500,000 acres of land for purposes of internal improvement, 46,080 acres (72 sections) for a State university, 32,000 acres (50 sections) for the purpose of erecting public buildings at the capital, and 32,000 acres for a penitentiary or State prison. The same grant of 500,000 acres was extended to the States of Alabama, Arkansas, Illinois, Indiana, Louisiana, Michigan, Mississippi, and Missouri. The quantity of land thus granted is estimated at 9,000,000 acres.

By act of July 2, 1862, each State, old or new, was granted 30,000 acres of the public domain for each Senator and Representative in Congress (or land scrip to that amount) for the purpose of endowing a college of agriculture and the mechanic arts in each State. Of the 9,600,000 acres estimated to be due the States under this munificent land grant, about 8,200,000 acres have already been located.

Mr. HARRIS. A very different thing from moneys in the Treasury, the Senator will observe.

Mr. DANIEL. Only different in this degree, that the States took the appropriations without waiting even for it to go into the Federal Treasury. It was a short cut from substance to recipient without being liquidated through the process of a Treasury warrant, and I should like to know where the distinction can be found between the power to give away real estate, which is generally encumbered with more formalities of conveyance the world over, and giving away personal estate, which is everywhere recognized as a more trivial consideration and of a lighter and more negotiable character.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator from Virginia is an able historian as well as statesman, and he surely has not forgotten the fact that in every one of the concessions of the public domain made by the different States to the Congress of the United States, or to the United States en masse, an express trust was reserved in those lands for the benefit of the States. In the very language of every conveyance that was made it is a trust held by the Congress of the United States for the State governments, to be administered for the benefit of the States, and that has been the ruling upon it by the Supreme Court of the United States, and it is also the history of that process of transferring the public domain belonging to Virginia and other States into the custody of Congress for the benefit of the States.

Mr. HARRIS. And then the constitutional provision gives unlimited power to dispose of the public land in any way that Congress may choose.

Mr. REAGAN. I should like to suggest two things in answer to the interrogatory. First, that the public lands of the United States are under the exclusive jurisdiction of Congress, and it may do with them whatever it pleases. The next distinction is that in giving this land to the States it was given to them to be administered by the States, and in this bill the gift is to be followed by Federal legislation to execute the law in the States and to bring persons within the jurisdiction of the United States.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, it is not necessary for me to consider these tendrils of technicality which shoot out from the root of an old tree. I can not see the substantial difference between the power of the Federal Government to take a piece of land and appropriate or give it away and the power to take money which is in the Treasury and appropriate or give it away. The distinction is slender, it is refining, and it has not been the distinction which has governed and controlled legislation in its practical acts.

Why, Mr. President, here is the State of Tennessee that received 100,000 acres of land for schools and 100,000 for universities. Is there anything in the Constitution of the United States which authorizes the Federal Government to appropriate land that is held in trust for all the States to a university in Tennessee and prohibits it from appropriating the money for which it has sold the land or money otherwise obtained to a common school in Alabama or in Virginia?

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator will allow me to answer. I will say that in respect to the disposition of the public lands the Constitution gives to Congress absolute and unlimited power. Where do you find the power that authorizes you to levy taxes and put the money into the Treasury and take it out to donate it to any such purpose?

Mr. MORGAN. Or to a State.

Mr. HARRIS. Yes, or to a State.

Mr. DANIEL. Am I to understand, if the Senator will permit me to ask him a question, that the public lands of the United States may be disposed of otherwise than for the general welfare? Is not the general welfare clause of the Constitution your only limitation as to the disposal of the public lands, or do you contend that there is no limitation? If it is the only limitation as to the disposal of the public lands, who will show me another and different limitation as to the disposal of the public money?

Returning to the Constitution, about the public lands the provision is:

The Congress shall have the power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States.

If my learned friends will allow me to ask them a question I will ask them whether or not they consider money in the Treasury "other property" or not?

Mr. REAGAN. I have no idea that money was meant to be embraced in that suggestion, but it meant the general control of property. Other clauses of the Constitution control the disposition of money.

Mr. COKE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT protempore. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. DANIEL. Certainly.

Mr. COKE. The term "other property" used in the Constitution refers to the property in the possession of the Government at the time of the adoption of the Constitution, ships, arms, and all property which was in the hands of the Government at that time. The power of Congress to dispose of property subsequently acquired requires no constitutional provision, because the power to acquire it carries with it the power to dispose of it.

Mr. DANIEL. Now, Mr. President, I will answer my learned friends, in the first place, by an argumentative denial of what they say, and then by an admission, and I think that both the denial and admission will leave us exactly in the same place, that it is a question for Congress to judge of, and that there is no other or general limitation in the Constitution for either but the general welfare:

The Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States.

The "territory" applied to the real estate; the "other property" must have meant the personal estate. Now, if you exclude money, it must be because you have got some peculiar technical light upon that subject which shows that the term "other property," meaning by it personal estate, was intended to exclude money from being considered in that connection as personal estate. If that be so, I will then make the argument from analogy upon the theory and ground that the Constitution here intended simply to refer to Congress the absolute power to dispose of its whole "territory," and all its "other property," except money.

Would it not have been singular indeed, and contradictory of a correct contemplation of business relations, to give to a body the absolute power to dispose of all the territory of the country and all the property of the country, and then to say to it, "But you must not so dispose of the money which is specially confided to you to raise by taxation and to bring within your jurisdiction?"

So I say, admitting you are correct in that view of these specific words, does not the fact that the Constitution has been so clear and positive in putting those terms there show that when it gave power to collect the money and apply it to the general welfare it intended that power to roll along as the co-equal of this?

Mr. REAGAN. The Senator from Virginia will allow me. The power to appropriate money is derived from other clauses of the Constitution. This clause in reference to "the territory or other public property" was intended to give the Government the control of the territory and of any property, such as public buildings, fortifications, arms, ships, and the like, which it might possess. This was for a special purpose; but the general power to appropriate money is found under other clauses of the Constitution.

Mr. DANIEL. I do not doubt that it was intended to give Congress control, but what I contend is that Congress has got it because it was given control.

Mr. FAULKNER. I should like to ask the Senator from Virginia a question.

Mr. DANIEL. Certainly.

Mr. FAULKNER. I should like to ask whether the Senator regards the public-school system as now organized in the States as a matter of State or national cognizance, and when he answers that question I should like to ask him another question.

Mr. DANIEL. I must answer in my own way. I would like the Senator to discharge both barrels at once.

Mr. FAULKNER. I was going to say that I should like an answer to the question, and then it may not be necessary for me to ask him any further question.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, that page of history answers all these questions. There it is. If this was a new question and I was in a debating society a hundred years ago, I should feel at liberty to exercise my own fancy about these things and would exercise it according to the bent of my mind and education; but the current of history has gone that way. It is a finished fact. And the Senator will stand here and vote to-morrow for something that involves this same broad, general principle upon which I stand.

Why, these appropriations for education in Alabama, Alaska, Arizona, down to Wyoming, of thirty States, have already answered that question. We have had it in Virginia in the time of my father and grandfather and of the Senator's father and grandfather; and our predecessors have all been over this ground, up and down and all around, over and over and over again, and the question is wound up by the States taking the appropriations; and it is wound up by coming here and voting for appropriations, traceable to the like authority; and when the whole country has gone that way and political parties and legislatures and senates, what is the use of my coming here and saying, "Gentlemen, there is my opinion of the Constitution; it ought to have been interpreted differently;" we can not do it. One man is not so much of a factor in the concerns of millions and millions of men that he can stand up and say, "This is my ipse dixit, and the world has all gone wrong."

Whether wrong or otherwise, it has gone along and we can not bring it back to where we would have it and start it afresh. So, not in any spirit of demagoguery, but proclaiming it to be a just, conscionable, honest, and proper view of constitutional construction which should control the highest and most dignified of bodies, I say that when a whole people have interpreted their Constitution by every agency in which they can express their will in regard to it, and their laws have been passed in consonance, one man can not come and say, "That is not the Constitution, and I will not march along in the procession of events, because I think differently from that."

Mr. FAULKNER. I want to see if I understand the Senator from Virginia. I understand him to reply to my question that the appropriations made by Congress for educational purposes in the form of lands, etc., amount to a declaration on the part of the legislative body, an interpretation of the Constitution of the United States, which means that the school system of the States is a subject of national as well as State cognizance. Am I correct?

Mr. DANIEL. I did not mean to answer the Senator in that way, for I do not think so.

Mr. FAULKNER. If it is not so, I would ask the Senator from Virginia how he can avoid the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, delivered by Marshall, C. J., unanimously given, in the case of Gibbons vs. Ogden, in which the Supreme Court decided that under the power to tax the Federal Government has no constitutional power to levy and collect a tax except for Federal and national purposes, and not for State subjects.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, I do not expect that anything I may say on this subject will be the finality of it. I do not expect to conclude debate finally and forever by my reply to the Senator's question. I think I shall leave it pretty much where it was when I got up, and therefore I am not as particular to satisfy him in the logical sense, nor have I the pride of opinion to attempt refinements in order to convince him. What I simply say is in explanation and justification of the course which I see proper to pursue as a Senator; and while I am candid to confess—for there is no reason why we should not state our candid views about things in every way in these conferences with each other—that, if we were back to a former period in our Government, I would incline to think that this language or that was intended differently, I see the fact that the statesmen of this country and the constructors and makers of its laws have for half a century, ay, and longer, accepted a different interpretation. And I say that the interpretation which they have put upon it is to be accepted as a fact of parliamentary history. And I submit to it just as I would if I had a case in court against my friend which I knew to be right, as litigants always know whatever they claim is right, and the judge should say, "You are wrong," I would say "We have had this out, and I bow to the result."

Mr. FAULKNER. If the Senator will allow me, I should like to ask him one more question.

Mr. DANIEL. Certainly.

Mr. FAULKNER. This is really for information. I ask any Senator, as well as the Senator from Virginia, whether there is any precedent in the history of this Government which can be brought to sustain the present bill which pledges the Government for eight years to appropriate money on the basis of taxation, to supply the appropriations for that period? I know of none and never heard of one.

Mr. DANIEL. I am very much honored by the attention my friends on either side have given me, but I feel that I have already inflicted upon the Senate a much lengthier discourse than I had any idea of delivering. It only shows we do not know where we shall end when we begin. I hope gentlemen will allow me to retire as soon as possible.

I was about to say that I wish to read a page of comment about Mr. Jefferson in relation to historical reading in the public schools, and it is from a volume published by our Government under the general-welfare clause of the Constitution. But for the fact that the general-welfare clause is in our Constitution we should never have had a Commissioner of Education, and we should never have had this volume for our enlightenment; and as I know the scrupulous and sensitive character of the gentlemen who oppose that idea, I suggest to them that, as the receiver of stolen goods is as bad as the thief, perhaps, instead of sending their volumes to their constituents, they had better send them back to the Government and let those receive and distribute them who have not those scruples. In that volume on "Thomas Jefferson and the University of Virginia" I read this:

Jefferson's original bill, in 1779, provided not only for the popular foundation of common schools but for the free training of all children, male and female, for three years in reading, writing, and arithmetic. The proposed admission of girls was a step in advance of the times, for not until the year 1789 did Boston allow the female sex to attend her public schools. Most remarkable, too, was Jefferson's idea, that reading in the common schools should be made the vehicle of historical instruction. The bill enjoins that "the books which shall be used therein for instructing the children to read shall be such as will at the same time make them acquainted with Grecian, Roman, English, and American history." Jefferson elsewhere maintains that, in common schools, where most children receive "their whole education," it should be "chiefly historical." This was very advanced ground for an eighteenth century educator; indeed, the nineteenth century is likely to pass away before all American teachers reach any such rational standpoint.

Jefferson regarded language simply as an instrument for attaining knowledge; and, in his opinion, a knowledge of what men have actually done in this world is a most important educational and moral force. Jefferson wished to have children's minds stored with useful historical facts. He said: "History, by apprising them of the past, will enable them to judge of the future; it will avail them of the experience of other times and other nations; it will qualify them to act as judges of the actions and designs of men." Such an historical idea of popular education, if introduced, not by wretched manuals, but by happily illustrated, well selected historical reading books, in the hands of intelligent, enthusiastic teachers, capable of telling now and then a good tale not in the book, would revolutionize common-school education in America. The idea of making reading the avenue to intelligence has already begun to dawn in our modern text-books, but it was suggested more than a century ago by Thomas Jefferson. The idea is, however, capable of a special and most useful application to the teaching of history. The writer has seen tried with great success the experiment of reading history to children in a Baltimore kindergarten, and he has great faith in that method for all grades of education. Jefferson proposed that a "general plan of reading and instruction" should be recommended by the college of William and Mary, and introduced by a county superintendent or county overseer of education in the local hundreds.

Therefore, Mr. President, under the like considerations which actuated this great apostle of Democracy a century ago, I would like to see the study of history required in our public schools, because I believe that the study of history is the greatest of all studies to which mankind can bend its attention. I believe it is not only true, as said in the lines quoted by my friend from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR], that—

Error is wrought
By want of thought
As well as by want of heart.

The case is stronger than there stated. Nine-tenths of the errors of this world in the progress of civilization are not wrought by want of heart, but by want of thought and intelligent understanding.

I have no doubt that if that Confederate army which once stood across the Potomac River menacing this Capital had thrown away their arms and had been permitted to march as on a holiday to New York and to Boston and to come back home down the valley of the Mississippi, and mingling daily with the people at their firesides and seeing what manner of men and women they were, and what manner of country this was, and if you could have suspended hostilities for one month and taken the Army of the Potomac and marched it all the way down South and back again until the two columns met here again without weapons, you could not have had any war declared in this country. They would have settled the thing then and there, because they would have understood what manner of country they lived in and what manner of people they had to deal with, and that every question which was at issue between them was capable of being solved by wise, and brave, and true men, with comprehensive and enlarged understanding.

Mr. President, I see down in this Southern country of ours coiled up that which may untwine itself as a great national calamity. I wish as far as I can, in the short time that I shall occupy the stage of human concerns, to exercise every considerate feeling of forbearance, of patience, of courage, of intelligence, to wear away the inevitable frictions of contact between different races and let the race problem work out itself as christianity and enlightenment would lead it. I invoke from you, who contemplate it from a different standpoint, the exercise of the highest faculties of statesmanship and reason which you can summon to your aid. I pledge the people whom I have the honor here in part to represent to continuously address themselves to it as they have done bravely and heartily in the right spirit, and if we can continuously meet and confer in the high spirit of justice and of honor and of cordial friendship, I believe it is in the power of the American people so to solve it that blood will not be shed and that lands will not be wasted and that the generations that shall come after us shall not reap from us a heritage of sorrow and calamity and woe. It is for that reason, sir, that I overcome whatever of predilection I might have as to the construction of the Constitution. I feel justified in conscience and in honor in waiving such predilections as I might have to the weight of public thought in this great Republic in order to obtain what I believe is to be a great beneficence.

Mr. President, I do hope that the United States Senate will this year, as last year and the year before, pass this bill, feeling that, while we have not yet solved the problem we have before us, we will be in this act traveling towards the light. I do not believe that education is to be the sole solvent, for we must realize its limitations as well as realize its benefits. The poet has said that man must mourn forever—

O'er the fatal truth,
The tree of knowledge is not the tree of life.

But, Mr. President, if knowledge does not absolutely heal, it goes towards healing. Judging things generally, you will find that the most enlightened nations have the highest moral ideas; that the most enlightened men develop the highest characters, and while crime will not depart from the world nor other ills that human flesh is heir to, yet when the light falls in upon the subject, where there is wiser understanding, the elements of solution will be better presented.

I vote for this Blair bill, Mr. President, not because I think it will be an absolute cure of the difficulties. There are other difficulties which will arise and are to be encountered. It is not the education of the school-book alone that you must depend upon; it is the education of society; the education of history; the education of tradition. But all these come more easily when you have the book as a guide to them. While I sometimes feel appalled as I stand before the problem which my Southern countrymen have to deal with, I see that in this measure we are moving towards the light. I would deal with it just as a shipwrecked sailor who landed upon the shore in the night-time. If he were looking around him to a murky sky and to a darkened and weary land, and saw a taper glimmering in the distance, whither would he go? A marsh might lie between him and it; there might be a hill to climb or a river to cross; but just as sure as fate he would rise up and travel towards the light. So in this case. Here is light set in a dark place, and for myself I say, let it shine.

* Estimated.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I have had the opportunity on three occasions before of discussing this measure in extenso, and I have no disposition to add anything to the remarks I have heretofore submitted to the Senate and which are recorded in the proceedings of Congress. But as this debate will be conducted by gentlemen who expect to speak at large about the measure I desire to put upon the record some statements which I think it is very necessary that we should pay attention to in the consideration of this bill; and particularly is that duty incumbent upon the gentlemen from the States of the South, where large amounts of money, it is said, are to be expended under this measure for the benefit of education. The bill provides that—

If any State, by its Legislature, shall decline or relinquish its share or proportion under this act, or any portion thereof, the sum so relinquished shall be covered into the Treasury—

The bill having first provided—

That no money shall be paid to a State, or any officer thereof, until the Legislature of the State shall, by bill or resolution, accept the provisions of this act.

When the Legislature of a State accepts the provisions of this bill it binds itself, not in honor merely, but in law, to provide all the State funds that may be necessary to comply with the measure in its terms and in its spirit also. In other words, the States that receive $77,000,000 under this law during its operation must tax their people $77,000,000 during that time in order to be entitled to receive it; and where the taxes now imposed upon the different States, particularly those of the extreme South, fall short of the quota and allowance that will come to them under this proposed act of Congress, having accepted the measure the Legislatures will be bound to make up the deficit. They will be bound to raise their standard of taxation, so that the sum which shall be realized under the State tax-laws shall annually be equal to the sum which will be applied under the bill to educational purposes coming from the Treasury of the United States. I suppose that proposition will scarcely be denied either as a matter of fact or in respect of the question of honor which the State would impose upon itself, the obligation of duty which it would necessarily assume when it had accepted the provisions of the bill.

In 1888, when this measure was before the Senate, I made up a computation, which is exact, and which no man, I think, ever has disputed or attempted to dispute, in reference to my State and in reference to some other States of the Union. That computation was based upon the amount of money that the State raised by taxation in that year and applied to the purposes of education. Alabama now expends $527,319.88 for school purposes annually. That, of course, does not include the colleges; it does not include the academies or private schools which are being conducted and supported by communities; it is the expenditure for the public-school system. There has been a little increase in the amount of the appropriation in Alabama since that time for school purposes, which increase implied the necessary increase of taxation upon the people.

But I assume the figures as they existed in 1888 as being a proper standard of taxation in respect of the amounts of money to be taxed out of the people under the local laws for the purposes of education, and the amount that will be required to be taxed out of them in order to provide a sum equal to that which should be apportioned to them under the act of Congress when this bill becomes a law.

The first year under the bill the State tax will be $527,319.88, the figures I have just stated; the United States fund received will be $486,240.84—making an aggregate of expenditure in that State for that year of $1,013,560.72.

The second year the State tax will increase to $694,598.81; the United States fund will be the corresponding amount—making a total for school expenses of $1,289,197.60, quite double all the other expenses of the State government in Alabama, including the payment of interest on her public debt.

The third year, the culminating year, the tax will be $1,041,876.55;

the United States will give the same amount, and the total expenditure for educational purposes in the State in the third year of the reign of this bill will be $2,083,753.10; and that in a State which finds itself comfortably off and well officered and well cared for by an expenditure of less than $600,000 a year in the payment of all its State expenses, including the interest on the public debt.

Now, I proceed further. When this bill has reached its culmination, the amount of money expended by the State of Alabama, whether derived from her own taxes or jointly from her own taxes and the Treasury of the United States, will be $2,083,753.10. Of course, having once accepted the law, the States would be bound in honor and by their own enactments to tax themselves to keep up to that plan; and how would it then run? The fourth year the State tax in Alabama would be $1,180,752.97, the United States fund being $903,000.13. The fifth year the State tax would be $1,319,672.73, the United States fund being $764,080.37. The sixth year the State tax would run up to $1,458,592.50, the United States fund being $625,160.60. The seventh year the State tax would be $1,597,512.26, and the United States fund would decrease to $486,240.84. The eighth year the State tax of Alabama would be $1,736,475.37. The United States fund would then have shrunk to $347,277.73. The ninth year, the year after the bill had accomplished its operation, the State taxation of Alabama would be $2,083,753.10, and the United States fund would simply be wanting—no help; and then what would become of your system? You would be obliged from that time forward either to witness the wreck and destruction of your school system or you would have to raise the standard of taxation in Alabama to $2,083,753.10. During the period from the second to the sixth year the increase of taxation in five of the Southern States—Alabama, Georgia, Louisiana, North and South Carolina—would be as follows: In Alabama, $1,392,115; in Georgia, $1,591,994; in Louisiana, $721,447; in North Carolina, $1,654,482, and in South Carolina, $1,309,702.

Mr. BLAIR. Will the Senator allow me to ask him the basis of his calculation as to the taxation which Alabama would pay?

Mr. MORGAN. It was the sum appropriated in the year 1888.

Mr. BLAIR. But I speak of the contribution from the national Treasury and the taxation that they will pay by reason of the enactment of this bill into a law. Does he make his assessment and his calculation per capita, or in what way?

Mr. MORGAN. I take the sum of money that is raised by taxation each year in the State of Alabama and then take the amount of money that is coming into the State of Alabama upon the basis of this bill. Of course she is bound under the bill to tax herself equally, a sum equal to the amount she will receive under the bill.

Mr. BLAIR. There is no State that is not doing that in full now.

Mr. MORGAN. I know of no State that is not doing it. I am not speaking of the effect of it upon the rich State of New Hampshire, but upon poor States.

Mr. BLAIR. But I wish to ascertain, if I can, the basis upon which the Senator supposes the taxation in his State which goes into the national Treasury is levied. Is it per capita?

Mr. MORGAN. I take the sum of money levied by the State of Alabama in the year 1888, and I find the amount of money that would go into the State treasury or the State school system from this bill, and I carry it on through each successive year, including the increase, up to the third year of the bill, and then I ascertain that you have got the State of Alabama to a maximum of taxation, which the State is obliged to adhere to unless it dishonors itself; and when this aid is withdrawn, if it should ever be withdrawn, when this bill expires by its own terms, you have left upon the State of Alabama the necessity of providing for a system which has been sustained by the taxation I have referred to annually of $2,083,753.10.

Our people can not stand that. There is no occasion in this world for Congress to impose upon Alabama the duty of providing three times as much for the education of her children as is necessary for the maintenance of the entire State government and the payment of the interest on the public debt.

This is a bill, sir, for taxation. Not only so, but it is a bill for double taxation; it is a bill for compulsory double taxation. The object and purpose of the bill is to compel certain States of the Union to tax themselves more than they are doing for the benefit of public education.

First of all, we assume (and I think we are not at all wrong in the assumption) that we pay our pro rata of the expenses of this Government, because we are very large consumers in proportion to our wealth in the South. What you derive from the tobacco and whisky tax certainly is paid in a larger degree by the Southern States than by the Northern States, taking them according to population. What you derive through the tariff taxation is paid also in a larger degree per capita by the people of the Southern States than it is by the people of the Northern States. So I am not in error in assuming that in proportion to our population we are contributing to this fund to be brought into the Treasury during the next eight years as much as any other people of the United States.

The money must be raised by the people or else it must be borne by the Government. Tariff taxation, direct taxation, any form of taxation, may be resorted to that is essential for the purpose of raising the money to meet this debt which we put upon ourselves for eight years to come, amounting to $77,000,000, and the people of Alabama contribute as much of that as any other people in the United States in proportion to their numbers.

Now, then, having done that, you compel them to contribute three times as much as the entire State government costs, including the interest on the public debt, annually, for the maintenance of public schools whenever they have accepted this bill. Having accepted it, they are bound to make the contributions.

Sir, I do not like the idea of the Congress of the United States forcing the people of Alabama to tax themselves over $3,000,000 a year for the benefit of public schools when their public debt and all else that concerns them amount to little short of $800,000 a year. We are an economical people down there. We have been poor enough to understand the value of economy in public affairs, and we are not disposed to draw upon the poor people of that State to pay heavy taxes. We would rather leave the money in the pockets of the people.

They are as much interested as I am, or the Senator from New Hampshire, or any one else, in the education of their children. They understand their Christian and moral and social duties as well as anybody. Black and white, they understand them; and you can not present a subject to a citizen of Alabama, black or white, which touches his conscience, his manhood, his pride more tenderly and more quickly than the subject of the education of his children. Sir, there is not a man in that State, unless he is some poor cripple or diseased man, who has not the ability to educate his children just as well as he can clothe them and feed them.

So this bill can not be regarded justly in any other light than as a bill to raise $8,777,000 (if I have the figures right) annually from the people of the United States for the next eight years, the people of my State contributing their quota to that taxation. Then you put on them exactly double the amount that you compel the Legislatures of the different States to tax out of the people by their local laws. You compel every State that accepts this bill (and in consequence of an illiteracy that existed eight years ago some States get more than their just proportion out of this measure) to raise the standard of local taxation just to an equilibrium with the contributions from the public Treasury.

It will not do in a law that contains these provisions to talk about the appropriation of money now in the Treasury, property that we now own. Sir, there is not the tenth dollar in the Treasury of the United States to-day that will be expended under this measure. The money that will meet the requirements of this bill is money that will flow into the Treasury of the United States during the next eight years after its passage, simply from taxation, unless we get into a war or something of that kind and are compelled to borrow it. It is a debt fixed upon the Government, a debt of duty and honor which we can not repudiate. We invite the States to rearrange their educational systems with a view of having this subvention from the Congress of the United States, and having done so, and they having accepted the measure, what else than a debt does it become, this $77,000,000, on the part of the United States Government? It is a debt that we are as much bound to provide for as we are to protect the credit of the United States by paying the bonds and the interest upon them. It is not an appropriation of money to take effect now upon a surplus now in the Treasury, property now owned by the Government of the United States. It is a measure to enhance taxation.

While Senators get up here and complain about the poverty of the farmers of the land, the embarrassments under which they are living, the threat of penury and bankruptcy that seems to hang over the farming interests in every part of this country, they still insist upon loading the farmers with an additional incumbrance, a debt of $8,777,000 a year. That may suit some; it may suit those who are particularly benefited by the high protective tariffs which are requisite to bring treasure into their pockets, or which, at least, exist here for that purpose; but it can not suit me as the representative of a farming constituency. Every dollar of debt that I load upon the people of my country is a dollar loaded upon the shoulders of the farmers. They are already in poverty and in distress, and I do not propose to increase that burden by $77,000,000 or $79,000,000 in the next eight years through Federal taxation, and another $79,000,000 through local taxation. That is what it comes to. The people have to foot these bills after all, if Congress had to pay this debt it would not be so anxious about voting the money. The hard-laboring people of this country will have to find the means of paying this double and coerced taxation.

Sir, this bill is a threat. It is not a threat merely, but it is the execution of a threat against the States. "You shall tax through your Legislature to educate these people; otherwise, the money in the Treasury of the United States will be taken and turned over to other communities that are willing and able to do it."

That is all I desire to say about this measure, but I should like Senators who have anything further to say in favor of the bill to answer whether these facts and figures are true.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, I will answer. They are not true, as I understand the matter. I will read the seventh section of the bill in reply to the last point made by the Senator, the one that he makes most emphatically:

That the design of this act not being to establish an independent system of schools, but rather to aid for the time being in the development and maintenance of the school system established by local government, and which must eventually be wholly maintained by the States and Territories wherein they exist, it is hereby provided that no greater part of the money appropriated under this act shall be paid out to any State or Territory in any one year than the sum expended out of its own revenues or out of moneys raised under its authority, including interest money from any source, in the preceding year for the maintenance of common schools, not including the sums expended in the erection of school buildings.

So after the State has accepted the provisions of this bill she may raise just whatsoever sum she sees fit. The guard for the malappropriation or disproportionate expenditure of national money in the State is this: that if she lessens her own taxation she receives a less amount than what she otherwise might receive from the funds of the United States, and in no event can she receive any more than the amount which appears apportioned in the table which is before the Senate. The State is not obliged to tax herself any more than she is now. She can let her school system become an utter ruin, as she can now; but if she does reduce her appropriation for the maintenance of her schools, by just so much she reduces the assistance she might receive from the Government of the United States.

As a matter of fact, there is not a State in the Union to-day which is not raising voluntarily a larger amount in support of its schools than it will receive under the provisions of this bill. So it does not propose any increase of burden beyond that which the States are already bearing.

In the Southern States, which we point at so often, they are to-day raising $20,000,000 for the maintenance of their schools, and in the rest of the country $102,000,000. In the Southern States they are raising at least $20,000,000 at the present time. Alabama is raising her proportion with the rest. It is not so large as some others, but her average proportion is nearly or quite as large. Under the provisions of this bill at no time would the entire South receive more than $10,000,000 or $11,000,000. So the South is to-day raising far beyond the amount of money which it is necessary to raise in order to avail herself in the completest sense of the provisions of this measure. Immediately the South, by the first year's appropriation, will not receive more than $5,000,000. The entire amount for the whole country the first year is but $7,000,000. The South, raising $20,000,000 now, would receive under the provisions of this bill not more than one-fourth of that which she is now expending, in addition to what she is now raising. So she is not called upon in the least to increase her taxation, and no additional burden is imposed upon the South. It is simply something to assist to prolong the schools and to give some equality in the school privileges in the remoter sections, in the rural sections, where money is scarce and where the privileges exist in next to no degree at all.

The Senator read a table. I am entirely unable to comprehend the significance of that table. I understood the purpose of the Senator to be, when he began, to show that in some way by the provisions of this bill, if they were accepted and its full benefits were realized in the State of Alabama and other States, there was to be some increase of actual taxation on the part of the States enforced by the acceptance of the provisions of the bill; that is to say, in making up the national fund which is to be distributed among the States the Southern States were to pay more to the national Treasury than they would receive back from it. That is of course an absurdity. Nobody can contend that, because they receive in proportion to their illiteracy, which as compared with the rest of the country is immensely greater, as shown by the census itself, and in no view is the South called upon to bear taxation except it may be in the proportion of her relative assessable property as compared with that of the rest of the country. Although by the latest estimates she has nearly 24,000,000 people (it is apprehended that her population will be shown to be 24,000,000 under the next census—24,000,000 of the 65,000,000—considerably more than one-third, three-eighths of the population) she has only about one-fourth of the taxable property of the country. So if the money in the national Treasury was raised by actual taxation upon assessable property she would pay only about one-fourth while she is receiving this large proportion, two-thirds or more, of the fund which is redistributed under the provisions of the bill.

The money in the national Treasury is not obtained either by taxation of assessable property within the States or in any other way which imposes upon the South relatively so large a burden as falls upon the North. It comes from the consumption of the country. I notice that my friend is ready to take this distinction now which demolishes the table of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] that has been the great stock in trade in misrepresentation all through the North. This money in the Treasury comes from the luxuries of life, from tobacco and whisky, and from the high customs duties upon those articles of luxury which wealth enjoys and which common people do not. That is the rule; and the common people who are to receive the benefits of this bill in the education of their children pay almost nothing of that which finds its way to the national Treasury. If they do so it becomes a tax upon habits, upon a form of consumption which it is better that they should dispense with, and which the increase of taxation has a tendency to induce them to dispense with.

So there is no view in which any remark of the Senator from Alabama, as I have been able to understand him here this evening, is truthful as a criticism upon this bill. I do not say that it is untruthful in any offensive sense, but it is not a fair, just criticism, I mean to say, of the provisions of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is still open to amendment as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HAWLEY. I desire to speak upon this question, but not at very great length. I prefer not to speak to-night.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President—

Mr. EVARTS. It will be my wish, if it should meet the indulgence of the Senate, to speak upon the bill on Wednesday at the hour the bill shall be taken up. I mention that in order that so far as I know the time on the bill will be taken up by the Senator from Connecticut to-morrow, and other business may intervene.

Mr. HALE. I should like the Senate to take up the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, not with the purpose of occupying the Senate with it to-night, but that it may be before the body, giving notice that I shall ask the Senate to consider it in the morning after the routine morning business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It would obtain no precedence by being taken up to-night, because it could not be the unfinished business in the morning hour to-morrow.

Mr. HALE. I am aware of that. I do not want to displace the bill in charge of the Senator from New Hampshire, but if by unanimous consent it could run on for a few minutes we might make some progress with it to-day.

Mr. BLAIR. Let the unfinished business be informally laid aside.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be informally laid aside to enable him to move the consideration of the urgent deficiency appropriation bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 6420) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for taking the eleventh and subsequent censuses," approved March 1, 1889; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 389) to construct a road to the national cemetery at Port Hudson, La., was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill (H. R. 6420) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for taking the eleventh and subsequent censuses," approved March 1, 1889, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Census.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter of the Secretary of War, transmitting, in compliance with the resolution of January 28, 1890, a report from the Adjutant-General of the Army concerning the seizure and imprisonment of Chatto and other Apache Indians, etc.; which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7496) to provide for certain of the most urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the formal reading be dispensed with, and that the Senate consider the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations as they are reached in order in the reading of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read, and the amendments reported by the committee will be considered as they are reached in the reading of the text, if there be no objection.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill. The first amendment was, in section 1, page 1, after line 7, to insert:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

International Marine Conference: For an additional amount to pay the necessary expenses of the International Marine Conference authorized by the act approved July 9, 1888, to be disbursed as provided by said act, $35,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was, in section 1, page 2, in the appropriations for the "Coast and Geodetic Survey," in line 8, before the word "thousand," to strike out "four" and insert "twelve;" so as make the clause read:

Office expenses: For copper-plates, chart-paper, printers' ink, copper, zinc, and chemicals for electrotyping and photographing; engraving, printing, photographing, and electrotyping supplies; for extra engraving and drawing, and for photolithographing charts and printing from stone or copper for immediate use, $12,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was, in section 1, in the appropriations for "Coast and Geodetic Survey," after line 12, on page 2, to insert:

For miscellaneous expenses, contingencies of all kinds, office furniture, repairs, and extra labor, and for traveling expenses of assistants and others employed in the office sent on special duty in the service of the office, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was, in section 1, at the top of page 3, to insert:

REVENUE-CUTTER SERVICE.

For additional amount for maintenance of a refuge-station at or near Point Barrow, Alaska, on the Arctic Ocean, $8,000, to be available during the fiscal year 1891.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "Fish Commission," on page 3, line 14, before the word "thousand," to strike out "ten" and insert "twenty;" so as to make the clause read:

Propagation of food-fishes: For the introduction by the United States Fish Commission into and the increase in the waters of the United States of food-fishes and other useful products of the waters, including lobsters, oysters, and other shell-fish, and for such general and miscellaneous expenditures as the Commissioner may find necessary to the prosecution of his work, including salaries or compensation of all necessary employes, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was, in section 1, page 4, under the head of "Public Buildings," after line 1, to insert:

Treasury Building, Washington, D. C.: For plumbing, painting, plastering, carpentering, and general repairs to the Treasury and Winder buildings, $3,000.

To complete the work of replacing the disintegrated slate roof of the Treasury building with a copper roof, $6,450.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was, in section 1, page 4, after line 18, to insert:

For court-house and post-office at Leavenworth, Kans: For completion of building and payment of outstanding liabilities, $7,394.62.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was, in section 1, line 5, under the head of "Miscellaneous objects, Treasury," after line 22 of page 5, to insert:

Contingent expenses, Treasury Department: For rent of additional room required by the Bureau of Statistics for months of April, May, and June, 1890, at $60 per month, $180.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, page 6, after line 3, to strike out:

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. The next two amendments of the Committee on Appropriations, in relation to experimental stations and location for artesian wells, may be passed over until to-morrow morning, when there will be some amendments to be offered to them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CULLOM in the chair). The amendments referred to will be passed over for the present, if there be no objection. The next amendment will be stated.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in section 1, on page 17, after line 20, to insert:

SENATE.

For salaries and mileage of Senators, $17,000.
For salaries of officers, clerks, messengers, and others in the service of the Senate, $9,000.

For stationery and newspapers, $600.
For expenses of maintaining and equipping horses and mail-wagons, $3,500.
For fuel, oil, and cotton-waste, and advertising for heating apparatus, exclusive of labor, $2,500.

For packing-boxes, $100.

For miscellaneous items, exclusive of labor, $30,000.

For expenses of inquiries and investigations ordered by the Senate, $30,000.

For expenses of inquiries and investigations ordered by the Senate, fiscal year 1889, $8,000.

To enable the Secretary of the Senate to pay the expenses of the investigation concerning immigration ordered by concurrent resolution of the two Houses of Congress, dated —, $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be disbursed upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the Senate Committee on Immigration and the chairman of House Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

Mr. HALE. I move to fill the blank in line 22 by inserting "March 12, 1890."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "House of Representatives," in section 1, on page 27, line 9, before the word "thousand," to strike out "ten" and insert "twenty;" so as to make the clause read:

For miscellaneous items and expenses of special and select committees, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was, in section 1, on page 21, after line 9, to insert:

PUBLIC PRINTING AND BINDING.

To supply in part and up to April 1, 1890, a deficiency in the appropriation for the public printing, for the public binding, and for paper for the public printing, including the cost of printing the debates and proceedings of Congress in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and for lithographing, mapping, and engraving for both Houses of Congress, including salaries or compensation of all necessary clerks or employés for labor (by the day, piece, or contract), and for all the necessary materials which may be needed in the prosecution of the work for the fiscal year 1890, $200,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, on page 21, after line 21, to insert:

For printing and binding for the Department of Agriculture, $7,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, on page 21, after line 23, to insert:

To enable the Public Printer to continue the operations under joint resolution approved February 6, 1883, for removal and storage of certain property of the Government mentioned therein, $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was, in section 2, page 22, line 12, after the date "1890," to insert "the sum of $200,000, or;" so as to read:

SEC. 2. That for payment of amounts for arrears of pay of two and three year volunteers, certified to be due by the accounting officers of the Treasury, as set forth in House Executive Document No. 144, Fifty-first Congress, first session, $284,090.25, and for the payment of such amounts additional thereto as may be certified to be due by said accounting officers on this account during the fiscal year 1890, the sum of $200,000, or so much therefor as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, on page 22, line 24, after the date "1890," to insert "the sum of $175,000, or;" so as to make the clause read:

For payment of amounts for bounty to volunteers and their widows and legal heirs, certified to be due by the accounting officers of the Treasury, as set forth in House Executive Document No. 144, Fifty-first Congress, first session, $243,893.11, and for the payment of such amounts additional thereto as may be certified to be due by said accounting officers on this account during the fiscal year 1890, the sum of $175,000, or so much therefor as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, on page 23, in line 12, after the date "1890," to insert "the sum of $15,000 or;" so as to make the clause read:

For payment of amounts for bounty under the act of July 28, 1866, certified to be due by the accounting officers of the Treasury, as set forth in House Executive Document No. 144, Fifty-first Congress, first session, $33,926.77, and for the payment of such amounts additional thereto as may be certified to be due by said accounting officers on this account during the fiscal year 1890, the sum of $15,000, or so much therefor as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, on page 23, line 23, after the date "1890," to insert "the sum of $22,000, or;" so as to make the clause read:

For payment of amounts for commutation of rations to prisoners of war in rebel States, and to soldiers on furlough, certified to be due by the accounting officers of the Treasury, as set forth in House Executive Document No. 144, Fifty-first Congress, first session, $31,023.11, and for the payment of such amounts additional thereto as may be certified to be due by the accounting officers of the Treasury on this account during the fiscal year 1890, the sum of $22,000, or so much therefor as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, on page 24, line 6, after the word "cents," to strike out:

And for the payment of such amounts additional thereto as may be certified to be due by said accounting officers on this account during the fiscal year 1890, so much therefor as may be necessary is hereby appropriated.

So as to make the clause read:

For payment of amounts for horses and other property lost in the military service by officers and enlisted men during the late war, certified to by the accounting officers of the Treasury as set forth in House Executive Document No. 144, Fifty-first Congress, first session, $118,706.51.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Maine now to allow this bill to be laid aside until to-morrow.

Mr. HALE. I do not propose to proceed further with the bill now. There are certain amendments which have been passed over, and other amendments will be offered in the morning. I give notice that I shall ask the Senate to take up the bill to-morrow immediately after the routine morning business. I am willing that it shall go over now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT CEDAR RAPIDS, IOWA.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent to take from the table the bill relative to the public building at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, in order that I may ask the Senate to concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the bill will be considered as before the Senate.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 903) for the erection of a public building in Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. The House of Representatives struck out "$200,000" and inserted "$150,000;" and also struck out, after the word "alleys," in line 19, to and including the word "Treasury," in line 23.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the House amendments.

The amendments were concurred in.

Mr. ALLISON. There is still one other amendment, I believe.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Both amendments have been reported and concurred in.

Mr. ALLISON. Is there not another amendment besides that read?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised that there are no other amendments.

Mr. ALLISON. Is there not an amendment striking out the appropriation?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments were to strike out "two hundred thousand dollars" and insert "one hundred and fifty thousand dollars," and after the word "alleys," in line 19, to strike out down to and including the word "Treasury," in line 23.

Mr. ALLISON. That means to strike out the words making the appropriation. I only wanted to ascertain the fact.

Mr. PADDOCK. That is the limit of cost.

Mr. ALLISON. Please read the words proposed to be stricken out.

The CHIEF CLERK. The words stricken out of the Senate bill are as follows:

And for the purposes herein mentioned the sum of $200,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. SPOONER. I suppose the appropriation will be taken care of in one of the general appropriation bills.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope to call the attention of the Senate to that later on. I do not desire in this bill to establish any precedent upon that subject, although I understand there is a contest somewhere on the question as to whether these public building bills carry an appropriation. This is a Senate bill that carried an appropriation. The House of Representatives reduced the amount $50,000 and struck out the provision making the appropriation. I wish to say that the friends of this measure desire that the House amendments shall be concurred in, and I do not feel at liberty to make any contest about them.

Mr. MANDERSON. I should like to ask how the building is to be erected without an appropriation. If it is not the purpose of the Senator from Iowa to place the appropriation in this bill, I am afraid this town will go without a public building.

Mr. ALLISON. It is the custom of the Committee on Appropriations to recommend to the Senate appropriations for every purpose required by law previous to the passage of the general appropriation bills; so that I will say to the Senator from Nebraska that I shall endeavor to call the attention of the Senate to an appropriation for this building at a later stage of the session.

Mr. SPOONER. As a friend of this bill I have no doubt the Senator from Iowa will not forget it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments of the House of Representatives have been concurred in.

AID TO COMMON SCHOOLS.

Mr. PADDOCK. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. BLAIR. Let the unfinished business be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Before submitting the motion, the Chair will lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which is the bill (S. 185) to aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. PADDOCK] that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 34 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, March 18, 1890, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, March 17, 1890.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. G. H. COREY, D. D. The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SACRAMENTO, CAL.

Mr. McKENNA. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill S. 1477, and that it be immediately considered by the House.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (S. 1477) to increase the appropriation for the erection of a public building at Sacramento, Cal.

Be it enacted, etc., That the amount heretofore fixed as the limit of cost for the erection of a public building by the Government of the United States at Sacramento, Cal., be, and the same is hereby, increased to $300,000, and that the same is hereby fixed as the limit of cost of the erection of said building, including site.

SEC. 2. That the officers of the United States Government having charge of the erection of public buildings are authorized and required to be governed by the limitations hereby prescribed in making contracts for the erection of said building.

SEC. 3. That the additional sum of $150,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be used and expended for the purposes provided in this act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. McKENNA] that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and that it be now considered by the House? The Chair hears none.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. The question is now upon ordering the bill to a third reading.

Mr. CANNON. But I rose for the purpose of making objection, subject to a question that I desire to ask the gentleman from California.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not hear the gentleman from Illinois make any objection.

Mr. CANNON. But I rose for that purpose, and commenced speaking just as the Chair spoke.

Mr. CULBERSON, of Texas. I hope that the gentleman from Illinois will not object.

Mr. CANNON. I desire to ask the gentleman from California a question. Has the foundation of this building been laid?

Mr. McKENNA. No, sir; it is not started yet.

Mr. CANNON. Has the site been obtained?

Mr. McKENNA. The site has been obtained.

Mr. CANNON. And paid for?

Mr. McKENNA. Yes; paid for.

Mr. CANNON. What amount is desired to be expended on this building in the coming year?

Mr. McKENNA. I can not say what amount is desired for expenditure during the coming year. What is desired is to start the building and carry it as rapidly toward completion as possible.

Mr. CANNON. And to extend the limit of cost?

Mr. McKENNA. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON. I simply suggest to the gentleman that he strike out the appropriation of $150,000, making the bill conform in this respect to other Senate and House bills of this character which have been passed here.

Mr. McKENNA. This is a Senate bill.

Mr. CANNON. I know it is; but clauses of that kind have been struck out in Senate bills.

Mr. McKENNA. I do not know that I have any special objection to the gentleman's suggestion, except that this matter has been pending ever since the Forty-eighth Congress, and the building is not yet started.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely; but it is evident there is no necessity for an appropriation of $150,000 for the coming fiscal year.

Mr. McKENNA. Probably not.

Mr. CANNON. I see no reason why this bill should not go on all fours with other bills of similar character.

Mr. McKENNA. I have no objection, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. CANNON. Then let the amendment be made; let the appropriation be struck out.

Mr. McKINLEY. It seems to me the gentleman makes a mistake in striking out the appropriation. The question of the amount has already been considered by the committee, and there is no reason why we should not act now upon the appropriation.

Mr. CANNON. What new light has dawned upon the mind of my friend from Ohio as showing why we should now appropriate $150,000, when the construction of this building has not been commenced and the amount will not be required during the next fiscal year?

Mr. McKINLEY. If it be not required, it will not be expended; it will simply lie in the Treasury.

Mr. CANNON. Certainly; and the same remark might be made as to appropriations for every purpose; we might just as well make appropriations four or five years ahead.

Mr. McKINLEY. If we know this is the amount required and the committee has considered the question, there is no reason why it should not now be appropriated.

Mr. CANNON. The policy of this House with reference to Senate bills as well as House bills has been to strike out the appropriating clause, with a view of getting later on an estimate of the amount that can be expended profitably during the coming year and limiting the appropriation to that sum. Why, in respect to these bills, should we make fish of one and fowl of another?

Mr. McKENNA. Will the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] make the motion to amend?

Mr. CANNON. I understood the gentleman to assent that the appropriation should go out.

Mr. McKENNA. Will the gentleman make the motion? I will not press any objection.

Mr. CANNON. No, sir; I will not make the motion. I will take my chances in the Committee of the Whole unless the gentleman desires to make the amendment.

Mr. McKENNA. I will allow the clause to go out, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. I move to strike out the appropriating clause.

The SPEAKER. The question is, first, whether there is objection to considering the bill in the House at the present time?

Mr. CANNON. There is no objection, provided the gentleman will assent to striking out the appropriation.

Mr. McKENNA. I have assented.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. I now move to amend by striking out the third section of the bill—the section making the appropriation of $150,000.

The SPEAKER. The first question is upon agreeing to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time.

The question being on the passage of the bill,

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for a division.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 103, noes 5.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. McKENNA moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT PARIS, TEX.

Mr. CULBERSON, of Texas. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 833) providing for the erection of a public building at Paris, Tex.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase a site for and cause to be erected thereon a suitable building, with fire-proof vaults therein, for the accommodation of the United States courts, post-office, and other Government offices, at the city of Paris, Tex. The plans, specifications, and full estimates for said building shall be previously made and approved according to law, and shall not exceed, for the site and building complete, the sum of $125,000, which sum is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That the site shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire in adjacent buildings by an open space of not less than 40 feet, including streets and alleys; and money appropriated for this purpose shall be available until a valid title to the site for said building shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Texas shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of any civil process therein.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill in the House?

Mr. CANNON. I will object unless the gentleman from Texas consents to amend the bill by striking out the appropriation.

Mr. CULBERSON, of Texas. I am willing to conform to the usage in that respect.

Mr. HOLMAN. I believe the bill is reported with amendments.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the amendments proposed by the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, in line 11, the words "and twenty-five;" so as to make the amount of the appropriation $100,000.

After the word "shall" in line 17, insert "not;" so as to read "money appropriated for this purpose shall not be available until a valid title," etc.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, and the amendments recommended by the committee were adopted.

Mr. CANNON. I now ask the gentleman to move the amendment.
Mr. CULBERSON, of Texas. I shall not object to the amendment.
Mr. CANNON. I will move to amend the bill by striking out the appropriating clause, which I ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Which sum is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. CANNON. It was agreed that those words should be stricken out. I therefore make the motion.
The amendment was adopted.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CULBERSON, of Texas, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TUNNELING DETROIT RIVER, DETROIT, MICH.

Mr. WICKHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution (H. Res. 119) requesting the Secretary of War to cause a further report to be made as to the practicability and approximate cost of tunneling the Detroit River at or near Detroit, Mich.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas there have been commissions of army engineers appointed in the years 1873, 1879, and 1889 to investigate and report upon the necessity and practicability of the proper means of crossing the Detroit River at or near Detroit, Mich., by bridge or otherwise; and

Whereas said commissions have limited such investigations more particularly to the question of bridging said river: Therefore,

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of War is hereby directed to have the said board of engineers appointed by the Secretary of War in 1889 to more fully report upon (at the earliest time practicable) the advisability, practicability, and approximate cost of tunneling the Detroit River at or near Detroit, Mich., in such a manner as to accommodate the large trade and commerce crossing the river at that point, without permanent obstruction of any kind whatever to the navigation interests of said river, with a view to the passage of said commerce through said tunnel from the United States into and through the Dominion of Canada and return, such report to be based upon the examination already made by said board, or, if necessary to a compliance with this resolution, to make such report after further inquiry into the subject.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered, ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WICKHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PRINTING, ETC., FOR COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged report from the Committee on Printing. I am directed by the committee to report back the resolution I send to the desk and recommend its adoption.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Agriculture be authorized to have printed and bound for its use such papers and documents, etc., relating to matters pending before it, as the committee may deem necessary, provided that the cost of said publication shall not exceed the sum of $500.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. RUSSELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

GRANT OF LAND TO COLORADO SPRINGS.

Mr. PAYSON. I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill (S. 1332) granting to the city of Colorado Springs, in the State of Colorado, certain lands therein described, for water reservoirs, and put it upon its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following-described tracts of land, situate in the county of El Paso and State of Colorado, namely, that part of Pike's Peak military reservation described as follows: Beginning at station "O," as designated in the field-notes of the said United States military reservation survey, and running thence north 18° 54' 45" west 1,320 feet, along the east boundary-line of said reservation; thence south 65° 39' west 8,012 feet; thence at right angles south 20° 21' east 2,595 feet to a point on the south boundary of said reservation; thence north 63° 39' east 6,512 feet, along said south boundary-line, to station "1" of said reservation survey; thence north 19° 31' 30" east 1,330 feet to station "O," the place of beginning; also, lots numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5, and the north half and the southeast quarter of section 28, lots numbered 3 and 4 and the east half and southwest quarter of section 22, all in township 14 south, range 68 west of the sixth principal meridian, containing 764.48 acres, more or less, be, and the same are hereby, granted and conveyed to the city of Colorado Springs, in the county of El Paso and State of Colorado, to have and to hold said lands to its use and behoof forever, for purposes of water storage and supply of its water-works; and for said purposes said city shall forever have the right, in its discretion, to control and use any and all parts of the premises herein conveyed, in the construction of reservoirs, laying such pipes and mains, and in making such improvements as may be necessary to utilize the waters contained in any natural or constructed reservoirs upon the said premises.

Sec. 2. That if the city of Colorado Springs shall at any time after the construction of reservoirs on the land described in section 1 of this act abandon the same or cease to use the same for water storage, the land herein described shall revert to the Government of the United States. The survey of the lands so granted shall be made under the direction and approval of the War Department.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I rose to call for the regular order.

Mr. PAYSON. I hope the gentleman will not insist on that.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. This seems to be just giving away 700 acres of land.

Mr. PAYSON. If the gentleman will hear me a moment, I think he will withdraw his objection.

The report embodies the language of the city engineer of Colorado Springs, who says in reference to this land:

The capacity here, while not very large, will meet all demands for years to come; the water is clear, pure, and cold, and the altitude (10,108 feet above sea-level) is such that it will not be contaminated by decomposing organic matter, as is the case at a lower altitude; and still further, the stream (Ruxton Creek, or South Fork of the Fontaine qui Bouille) leading out of the basin is the same from which the present water supply is taken, and, together with the minimum cost of construction, are the points of superiority over any other site found.

This lake and basin are situate in the Pike's Peak United States military reservation, as shown upon the accompanying plats, which are copied from those furnished by the United States surveyor-general's office of Colorado, the same being compiled from United States Government surveys.

That portion marked by parallel lines, relieved by yellow margin (see accompanying plat), includes the basin and lake alluded to, and also a greater portion of the streamlets emptying into this basin, and should your honorable body pray Congress to grant the right to construct this reservoir it should also ask that this tract be included, in order to have control of and prevent any pollution of the water at or near the reservoir.

The land is utterly worthless and unfit for cultivation, or in fact for any purpose whatever, excepting the basin alluded to, and this is fit for nothing but a storage basin, as the marshy nature of the ground will not admit of its being used for grazing purposes to any great extent.

The country north of this basin is very steep and rocky, while that on the south is also rugged and covered with dead and fallen timber. And were the surface such that cultivation could be carried on, the altitude is so great that no crop could be grown, being from 10,109 to 11,100 feet above the sea-level.

This piece of land is situated in the mountains of Colorado, 10,400 feet above sea-level. It is a pond in the midst of a marsh from which the city of Colorado Springs gets its water supply. The title, however, is not in the city. It is utterly valueless for any other purpose, and has been withdrawn from purchase, nobody desiring it, indeed, except for speculative purposes, for years. The bill passed the Senate twice and was recommended by the Committee on the Public Lands of the last Congress and this.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Is this a part of the Cheyenne Cañon?

Mr. PAYSON. No; it is a piece of marsh ground on the summit of the mountain, not available for any other purpose than that designated.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Has this been reported from your committee?

Mr. PAYSON. It has been reported three different times favorably. This is the third report.

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PAYSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, Mr. McCLAMMY was granted leave of absence, for eight days, on account of important business.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. This day being set apart by the rules for suspensions on motions of committees, the Chair will proceed to call the committees for that purpose.

CONTESTED ELECTION—MUDD VS. COMPTON.

When the Committee on Elections was called,
Mr. COOPER said: I will call up for consideration, after the morning hour on Wednesday, the case of Mudd vs. Compton.

The SPEAKER. This call is for motions to suspend the rules.

Mr. COOPER. I desire to give that notice, Mr. Speaker, anyhow.

JUDICIAL DISTRICT, MISSOURI.

The Committee on the Judiciary was called.

Mr. ROGERS. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary to move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 7166) to amend section 3 of an act entitled "An act to amend the act dividing the State of Missouri into two judicial districts, and for other purposes."

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3 of the above-entitled act is hereby amended by striking out the words beginning with the word "except," in the third line, and including the word "created," in the fifth line; also, the words beginning with the word "except," in the seventh line, and including the word "year," in the eighth line, and also the words beginning with the word "that," in the fifteenth line, and including the word "proceedings," in the twenty-second line; so that when amended it shall read as follows:

"Sec. 3. That there shall be, and there are hereby, established a district and circuit court of the United States in each of the several divisions of the said eastern and western districts herein created. That in each division there shall be held two terms of the district and circuit courts in each and every year. The time of holding said terms of court in the city of St. Louis, the city of Kansas City, and the city of Jefferson shall be held at the time now established by law, and in the other divisions herein named the time of holding said terms of court shall be at the city of Hannibal on the first Monday in May and November; at the city of St. Joseph on the first Monday in April and October; at the city of Springfield on the first Monday in February and August. The district judges for the eastern and western districts of Missouri, each in the divisions of proper district, and the circuit judge of the United States for the eighth judicial circuit, are hereby required to hold the courts aforesaid. Juries shall be summoned for the courts hereby created as now provided by law for the summoning of juries in the said districts, and whenever the circuit and district courts in either of said districts or divisions shall be held at the same time and place, jurors shall not be summoned for each of said courts, but for both said courts, and they shall act accordingly as grand and petit jurors for both said courts."

The motion of Mr. ROGERS was agreed to (two-thirds voting in favor thereof); and accordingly the rules were suspended, and the bill passed.

ABOLITION OF COMPULSORY PILOTAGE.

The Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries was called.

Mr. HOPKINS. On behalf of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, I ask a suspension of the rules to pass the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Thursday, March 27, after sixty minutes of the morning hour have expired, be fixed for the consideration of a bill (H. R. 1003) exempting American coastwise sailing vessels, piloted by their licensed masters or by a United States pilot, from the obligation to pay State pilots for services not rendered, and from day to day thereafter until disposed of, not to interfere with prior special orders or the consideration of revenue and general appropriation bills.

Mr. FITHIAN. On that I demand a second.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask that a second be considered as ordered.

Mr. DAVIDSON. I object.

Mr. SPRINGER. I object; and demand the reading of the resolution, so that we may understand it.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the resolution. The House must be in order. The resolution can not be read until gentlemen cease conversation and take their seats.

The resolution was again reported.

Mr. SPRINGER. I withdraw my objection to considering a second as ordered.

The SPEAKER. There are other objections.

Mr. SPINOLA. Is the resolution debatable now?

Mr. ROGERS. Parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ROGERS. I want to inquire whether under this rule it is in order for the bill to be read to which it is sought by this special order to set apart a day for consideration, in order that we may know what the bill is?

The SPEAKER. It is not in order.

Mr. SPINOLA. Is the resolution now debatable?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. FITHIAN. Is it proper to state what the bill is?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

The question was taken on ordering a second; and there were—ayes 87, noes 86.

The SPEAKER. A second is ordered; and there are forty minutes for debate.

Mr. SKINNER. I desire to vote.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, this is simply a proposition reported by the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries to set apart a day for the consideration of this bill. It is not for the purpose of determining the bill to-day upon its merits at all; but the friends of the proposition, to do away with compulsory pilotage, desire to set aside a particular day so as to give full opportunity for the discussion of this question, and give to the opponents of the bill all the time that may be necessary to urge objections they may have to the bill. In my judgment, it is perfectly fair and proper; and I can not understand how any gentleman would desire to object to setting apart a day for this purpose. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FITHIAN] is recognized in opposition to the resolution.

Mr. FITHIAN. I do not desire to debate the resolution.

Mr. SPINOLA. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. Does any other gentleman in opposition desire to discuss the proposition?

Mr. SPINOLA. I desire to speak. [After a pause.] No. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. FITHIAN. I yield my time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SPINOLA].

Mr. SPINOLA. I think we had better take a vote. I do not think the House is going to be insane enough to pass this bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon suspending the rules and passing this resolution.

The question was put; and the Speaker announced that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Several MEMBERS. Division.

The House divided; and they were—ayes 75, noes 99.

Mr. HOPKINS. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. Speaker, can the question be stated again?

The SPEAKER. The resolution has been read twice.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 111, nays 122, not voting 96; as follows:

Mr. MORSE with Mr. GOODNIGHT, on all political questions until further notice, reserving the right to vote to make a quorum; that is, if Democrats fail to vote, Mr. MORSE reserves the right to vote to make a quorum.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the recapitulation of the vote.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent (pending the announcement of the above vote), leave of absence was granted to Mr. EDMUNDS, for three days, on account of important business.

ENUMERATION OF CHINESE.

Mr. McKENNA. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Committee on the Eleventh Census I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk, being an act (H. R. 6420) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for taking the eleventh and subsequent censuses."

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the seventeenth section of an act entitled "An act to provide for taking the eleventh and subsequent censuses" be so amended as to authorize and require the Superintendent of Census to enumerate the Chinese population in such manner and with such particulars as to enable him to make a complete and accurate descriptive list of all Chinese persons of either sex who may be found in the United States at the time of taking the census, and that the said Superintendent of Census be, and he is, further authorized and required to give to each Chinese person so enumerated in the census an engraved certificate, to be duly numbered and registered in the Census Office, which shall contain all the particulars necessary to fully and accurately identify the Chinese person to whom such certificate shall be issued, and such certificate, when produced by any Chinese person found to appertain and belong to the holder thereof, shall be the sole evidence of the right of such Chinese person to be and remain in the United States: Provided, That said certificate shall under no circumstances be evidence in favor of any Chinese person to enter the United States. A duplicate record of said certificate shall be filed and permanently preserved in the Census Office. Chinese children shall be enumerated and certificates of identification prepared and issued to parents or other person having such children in charge in such manner as may be prescribed by the Superintendent of the Census.

SEC. 2. That for the purpose of obtaining the particulars necessary for the registration and the issuance of the certificates herein provided for, the Superintendent of Census, if he shall deem it expedient so to do, may withhold the schedules of inquiries relating to the enumeration of the Chinese from the enumerators of the several subdivisions and may charge the collection of this information upon experts and special agents without respect to locality, in the same manner as is provided for in section 18 of the aforesaid act, both as to their authority and the rates of compensation.

SEC. 3. That any Chinese person subject to enumeration on the 1st day of June, 1890, who shall fail or refuse, for the period of ninety days from said 1st day of June, to comply with the provisions of this act in submitting himself for such enumeration and in obtaining the certificate of identification herein provided, and all Chinese persons found thereafter in the United States without such certificates of identification, shall be deemed to be unlawfully in the United States, and may be arrested upon a warrant issued upon a verified complaint filed by any party on behalf of the United States by any justice, judge, or commissioner of any United States court, returnable before any justice, judge, or commissioner of any United States court, or before any United States court, and when convicted upon a hearing and found and adjudged to be one not lawfully entitled to be or remain in the United States, such person shall be removed from the United States to the country whence he came or be imprisoned in a penitentiary for a term not exceeding five years. A certified copy of the judgment shall be the process upon which said removal shall be made, and it may be executed by the marshal of the district, or by any officer having authority of a marshal under the provisions of this section: Provided, That the court may imprison any Chinese person against whom a judgment of deportation has been rendered until such judgment can be executed as herein provided. And in all such cases the person who brought or aided in bringing such person into the United States shall be liable to the Government of the United States for all necessary expenses incurred in such investigation and removal; and all peace officers of the several States and Territories of the United States are hereby invested with the same authority, in reference to carrying out the provisions of this act, as a marshal or deputy marshal of the United States, and shall be entitled to like compensation, to be audited and paid by the same officers.

SEC. 4. That any person who shall sell, transfer, or otherwise dispose of his or her certificate, or knowingly and falsely alter or substitute any name for the name written in any certificate herein required, or forge such certificate, or knowingly utter any forged or fraudulent certificate, or falsely personate any person named in any such certificate, and any person other than the one to whom a certificate was issued, who shall falsely present any such certificate, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in a sum not exceeding $1,000 and imprisoned in the penitentiary for a term of not more than five years.

SEC. 5. That the preceding sections shall not apply to Chinese diplomatic or consular officers or their attendants, who shall be admitted to the United States under special instructions of the Treasury Department, and be entitled to remain without production of other evidence than that of personal and official identity, when such identification is required.

SEC. 6. That any Chinese person enumerated and furnished with a certificate as provided in section one of this act, who wishes to depart from the United States, shall surrender to the collector of customs, at or near the port or place of his or her departure, the certificate issued to such person as aforesaid, and the certificate so surrendered shall be immediately canceled and transmitted to the Census Office, where the same shall be filed and recorded in such manner as to show such cancellation on the duplicate record of such certificate. The collector of customs to whom such certificate is surrendered shall allow the party surrendering the same to depart from the United States, and, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, he shall issue to such departing Chinese person a departure permit, to be taken up and returned to said collector by the person or company transporting such Chinese person from the United States.

SEC. 7. That in case any departing Chinese person is unable to produce his or her certificate by reason of the loss of the same, the collector of customs, upon being satisfied of such loss by competent proof, shall allow such person to depart, in the manner prescribed in section 5 of this act, and he shall report such departure to the Census Office, with such particulars of identification as will enable the proper officer in charge of the Census Office to show such departure on the duplicate record, as in the case of the cancellation and return of a certificate as hereinbefore provided.

SEC. 8. That collectors of customs shall keep a record of all departing Chinese persons, in such form as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, setting forth all the particulars necessary to identify such persons, and collectors of customs and their deputies are hereby authorized and empowered to administer oaths whenever they may deem it necessary or proper to do so, and take from any person an oath, affirmation, affidavit, or deposition in any matter or proceeding relating to the identification of Chinese persons or their right to be or remain in the United States, or liability to be deported therefrom under any law of the United States. Any person who shall willfully and corruptly swear falsely in any such oath, affirmation, affidavit, or deposition shall be deemed guilty of perjury, and on conviction shall be punished by a fine of not less than $1,000 and not more than $2,000, and by imprisonment at hard labor for not less than one year and not more than five years.

SEC. 9. That to enable the Superintendent of Census to comply with the foregoing requirements the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, in addition to any moneys which may have been or may be appropriated for purposes of the Eleventh Census, this sum to be immediately available upon the passage of this act and to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, from what committee does this come?

Mr. McKENNA. It comes from the Committee on the Eleventh Census.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to inquire whether that committee was called.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that upon this day individual recognitions also may take place, and that the Chair is not confined to any particular order with regard to committees. At the same time it is not the purpose to deviate from the regular order except in cases where an exigency seems to require it. As this bill is connected with the taking of the census the Chair felt that it was doing its duty in submitting it to the House for immediate action. That is the motive, and the Chair does not wish his action in this case to be regarded as establishing any particular precedent.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. The point I wish to make is as to whether the preference which the rule authorizes to be given to committees on this day does not exclude individual recognitions until the list of committees has been called. I presume the Speaker is correct in assuming that he is not limited as to the order in which he shall recognize committees; but I suggest that individual recognitions cannot be had until all the committees have been called.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not sure about that; but inasmuch as this bill was called up by order of the committee, it is not necessary now to pass upon that question.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Speaker, does this bill contain an appropriation; and, if so, does it not require to receive its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. McKENNA. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that I have been authorized by the Committee on the Eleventh Census to call up this bill, and that it was by that authorization I asked recognition of the Chair, and not on my own individual account.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I ask for a second.

Mr. McKENNA. I ask unanimous consent that a second be ordered.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I did not catch exactly the statement of the Speaker. I understand from the rules of the House that on a certain Monday, this Monday, preference is to be given to committees, and the custom has always been to call the committees in their order. I merely want to know whether the present occupant of the chair intends to conform to that custom or to establish a new one.

The SPEAKER. The Chair intends to conform to that custom generally, but when the first call was made the Chair announced that he did not consider himself bound to a particular order when a case arose where it seemed to him the matter ought to be submitted to the House.

Mr. CRISP. The rule, then, is not to be enforced as it has been heretofore.

The SPEAKER. There is no rule with regard to it.

Mr. CRISP. I beg pardon of the Chair. The rule is:

Nor shall the Speaker entertain a motion to suspend the rules except on the first and third Mondays of each month, preference being given on the first Monday to individuals and on the third Monday to committees.

The SPEAKER. Preference is given to committees.

Mr. CRISP. Yes, sir; but since I have had the honor of being a member of this House the presiding officer, to remove any question or any charge of partiality, or anything of that sort in making recognitions, has called the roll of the committees. There has been, I think, no deviation from that practice, and in that way the Chair has accorded to each committee what was understood to be its right under the rule.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that it is rather a question of the orderly conduct of the business of the House than of rights, and that there may be occasions, this being one, when it is desirable that committees should be recognized out of the usual order. The Chair says this while perfectly agreeing with the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] as to the propriety of calling the committees in order unless there is some special occasion for doing otherwise. Is there objection to a second being considered as ordered? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I understood the Chair to say that this bill did not contain any appropriation.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not say so. The Chair says that the point of order can not be made, because this is a question of suspending the rules.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I did not catch distinctly what the Chair said about a second.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood that there was no objection to a second being considered as ordered.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I do not object.

The SPEAKER. The question is now open to debate for forty minutes. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Amend section 1, twenty-eighth line, after the word "census," by inserting the following: "Provided, That if the Chinese person to whom a certificate shall have been issued as aforesaid lose the same, he shall, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, on proof of such loss, receive a certified copy of the duplicate copy kept on file in the Census Office, which certified copy shall have the same force and effect of the original which was issued to him."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McKENNA. I now yield ten minutes to my colleague from California [Mr. MORROW].

Mr. MORROW. Mr. Speaker, the laws now upon the statute books provide for the exclusion of Chinese laborers from the United States. Commencing with the treaty of the 17th of November, 1880, where provision was made that Congress might provide for the exclusion of Chinamen, following with the act of the 6th of May, 1882, the act of July 5, 1884, and concluding with the act of the 1st of October, 1888, there has been one purpose in view. Congress has been seeking to execute the will of the people of the United States, to exclude Chinese laborers from this country. For a time each act in turn had been deemed effective, but the immigration has continued in spite of legislation forbidding it.

The act of October 1, 1888, commonly known as the Scott exclusion act, was supposed to be particularly direct, positive, and effective in its terms of exclusion. But, while this last-named act provided that Chinese laborers who had departed from the United States should not be permitted to return, there was nothing in that act which really executed the purpose of the law. It provided no machinery for guarding the frontier, and as a consequence it did not take long for the Chinaman to discover more than one road of ingress across the border.

Anticipating this difficulty Congress passed another act, which was approved October 19, 1888, appropriating $50,000 for the execution of that act; and subsequently, on March 2, 1889, there was another appropriation of $30,000, making $80,000 in one year for the execution of this law. But notwithstanding the amount of money that has been appropriated for the execution of these several acts the Chinese people are still coming into the United States almost as rapidly as they did four or five years ago. They come, for instance, to the port of Victoria or Vancouver, in British Columbia, on vessels from Hong Kong that connect with the Canadian Pacific Railroad; and after their arrival there they improve an early opportunity to cross the lines into the United States. Of course, the Government employs officers to prevent the entry of the Chinese at Seattle, Port Townsend, and other American points adjoining British territory; but the difficulty is that there is a large Chinese population on this side of the line as well as on the other side, and those on the other side smuggle across without any ability on the part of the officers to distinguish or identify the invaders from those who are entitled to be and remain here.

So with reference to the Mexican border. These Chinamen land at Guaymas from a steamer coming direct from China or by way of San Francisco in transit, and pass over the Sonora Railway to Nogales, where they cross the line without detection into the United States. When Chinamen thus pass from one side of the line to the other the officers of the Government are unable to determine whether those found on this side have or have not come across the line in violation of law. They may also land at Ensenada, and come across the line at Tia Juana, near San Diego, eluding the observation of the officers of the Government at that point. The same is true at several places on the line between the United States and Mexico.

I have here a statement of the extent of the boundary line between this country and Canada and between this country and Mexico. From this statement, which comes from the office of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, it appears that the line between the United States and Canada is 3,740 miles in extent and the boundary line between this country and Mexico is 1,540 miles. Between this country and Canada there are twenty-two railroads crossing from one country into the other, and between this country and Mexico there are four railroads crossing the line, making twenty-six railroads that cross the line on the north and the south, these lines of railroad and other lines of transportation furnishing ample facilities for these people to come from one side of the line to the other.

This bill proposes nothing new in the matter of excluding Chinese laborers. They are already excluded by law. The proposition is that the Chinese lawfully in the country may be identified by the census enumerators, and given certificates that they were here at the time the census is taken, which certificates will thereafter be evidence that they are entitled to remain in the United States. Those coming into the country thereafter will, of course, be without such certificates, and they can thus be easily detected. In the language of the report of the committee:

The purpose of the bill is to secure a careful and accurate enumeration of the Chinese population of the United States in the Eleventh Census, and in connection with such enumeration to issue to each Chinese person a certificate which shall thereafter be evidence of the right of such Chinese person to be and remain in the United States. It further provides that after the enumeration shall have been completed any Chinese person found in the United States without such certificate shall be deemed to be unlawfully in the United States, and may be deported therefrom upon the judgment of a United States court in a proper proceeding for that purpose.

The necessity for such an identification of the Chinese persons lawfully residing in the United States arises out of the fact that notwithstanding the legislation that has been had for the purpose of excluding Chinese immigration, such immigration continues to come into the United States clandestinely over the border from Canada and Mexico, and promises to continue unless effective measures are taken to guard the frontier or provision is made as contemplated by this bill for the identification of the Chinese people who are now here, so as to distinguish those who shall hereafter unlawfully come into the United States. The Secretary of the Treasury in his last report calls the attention of Congress to this subject in the following language:

"CHINESE EXCLUSION ACT."

"The existing laws for the exclusion of Chinese laborers from the United States have been vigorously enforced by the officers of the customs to the extent of their ability, but the extensive frontiers of the Union facilitate the clandestine introduction of such persons from the contiguous territory of British America and Mexico.

"It is alleged that evasions of the law in this regard are of a serious character. The Department is employing the limited means at command to prevent such evasions, but to police these frontiers in such a manner as to completely suppress the influx of prohibited immigration will require a much greater force than has been provided for. The attention of Congress is invited to this subject."

The bill contains a provision for deporting Chinamen found in the United States contrary to law. This section is copied from a statute which was approved September 13, 1888, when it was supposed we were about to have a treaty providing for a more effective exclusion, the negotiations for which were then pending between this country and China. It was then understood that Congress should pass a law executing that treaty; and we did pass a law, which will be found on page 476 of volume 25 of the Statutes at Large, "An act to prohibit the coming of Chinese laborers to the United States," approved September 13, 1888. The object of this act was to execute an agreement, I might say, between this country and China as to what measures we might take for the purpose of excluding the Chinese. In that act we adopted certain penalties to which there was no objection, namely, that Chinese persons coming into the United States and not entitled to remain should be deported.

In preparing this bill I have copied the penalties necessary for the execution of the provisions of law with respect to those Chinese persons who come into the United States when they are not entitled to do so. There is nothing new in this bill with reference to the exclusion. There is simply a provision for the deportation of those not entitled to come in and for the identification of those who are here by certificates to be issued by the census enumerators or special agents of the Census Bureau. That is all there is in this bill.

I may add that this measure has met with general approval on the Pacific coast. It has been indorsed by the press and all parties interested in the subject. Indeed, I find on file in the Department letters from officers who have been sent to the boundary-line to execute the present law, recommending the passage of some such bill as this as the only means that can be adopted to prevent Chinese persons from coming over the line into our country.

Mr. HOOKER. I wish to ask whether the treaty to which the gentleman has referred was ratified.

Mr. MORROW. I am very glad the gentleman has called my attention to that matter. I intended to say the treaty negotiated in 1888 was not ratified by the Chinese Government; but that was not because of any exception taken to the provisions of the statute which was passed to enforce it. The objection raised by the Chinese Government, it was understood, was to a provision of the treaty proposed by the Senate with respect to exclusion which was not clear or satisfactory as originally framed. Congress upon the failure or refusal of the Chinese Government to ratify that treaty passed, as we know, the Scott exclusion act, which prohibits the return of Chinese people who departed from the United States and claimed the right to return by reason of prior residence, whether holding return certificates or not. The act of 1882, as amended in 1884 and amended again by the Scott exclusion act in 1888, prohibits the immigration of Chinese laborers for the period of ten years, or perhaps indefinitely, as these statutes may be hereafter construed. The present bill provides a method for executing more effectually and economically that exclusion.

Mr. McKENNA. I now yield five minutes to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT].

Mr. BLOUNT. I yield so much of that time to the gentleman from California [Mr. CLUNIE] as he may desire.

Mr. CLUNIE. Mr. Speaker, I trust this bill will pass without objection. We have suffered and are suffering a great deal on the Pacific coast from Chinese immigration. I will not enter into details in this matter. The question has been so thoroughly discussed by the press and in Congress that the country thoroughly understands the situation. After years of patient waiting the appeals of the people of the Pacific coast were considered and legislation looking to their relief was inaugurated in 1882. The bill then desired by the Pacific coast was passed by both Houses of Congress, but was vetoed by President Arthur.

We succeeded, however, in passing a bill excluding Chinese laborers for a period of ten years. While this was a step in the right direction, it did not suit our people. They justly demanded permanent and absolute exclusion of all classes of Chinese. The working men and women of my city demanded as a right more stringent legislation. And in 1888 you gave us the Scott exclusion act, which received the sanction of President Cleveland. This was another step towards giving the Pacific coast the legislation to which its people were justly entitled. This law, now upon the statute-books, was wholly inadequate to afford the necessary relief.

First, it took for granted that Chinese merchants were a better class than Chinese laborers, and permitted them to enter. Had they known them as I do this would have been the first class they would have excluded. The more intelligent they are the better they can lie and cover it up. There is no more sense or reason in admitting a so-called Chinese merchant than a laborer. They come in competition with a class of small retail merchants who are least able to stand it. Again, they are such notorious liars.

Why, since the passage of the Scott exclusion act they are all merchants. They are posted in advance concerning some Chinese firm with a Co. to it, and, although they may never have seen the store or known of its existence, they come in as merchants and partners in the Co. They swear to all sorts of falsehood to get in and say "Me all same Melican man, my partner keep store." It is a notorious fact in San Francisco that Chinese cooks and laborers are and have been coming in under that clause of the bill which permits merchants to enter. I wish the House to understand that if you leave a loophole in your bill that can be evaded by Chinese perjury, they will not hesitate to commit it at any time. I once in the course of my profession as a lawyer had a Chinaman call on me, and, as I understood him, ask how much I would charge to defend a Chinaman accused of murder.

I told him $1,000 was my fee. He went away, returning after several days with a sack of silver. He said, "I killee my man; here is your money." I was shocked. I said, "You killed him? Then you should hang." He said, "I kill him. How many men you likee me get say I no killee him?" This but illustrates their regard for truth. They are evading the law all the time. Our collector of the port of San Francisco, Hon. T. G. Phelps, is doing good work in his honest endeavors to execute the law; but no man, however vigilant, can guard against Chinese perjury. I have introduced a bill that will prevent this willful perjury by excluding merchants, as well as laborers. My colleague, Mr. MORROW, the author of the bill now under consideration, who has at all times opposed Chinese immigration, informs me that his committee will soon report my bill. I will then give reasons why it should become a law.

The object of this bill is to require the Superintendent of Census to enumerate the Chinese population in the United States at the time of taking the census and to give to each Chinese person so enumerated an engraved certificate. A Chinese person found in the country ninety days after June, 1890, without such certificate shall be deemed to be unlawfully in the United States. He may then be arrested, and on conviction thereof shall be removed from the United States to the country whence he came or be imprisoned in the penitentiary. This will teach them not to set at defiance the laws of the United States.

Why, Mr. Speaker, I have been in Victoria, where they are permitted to land upon payment to the British Government of $50 a head, and I have ascertained that Victoria gets the $50 and we get the Chinamen. Again at Tia Juana practically the same thing is being done. We have hundreds of miles of exposed border north and south, where these foxy Chinese are daily evading the law. It would cost a large sum of money to patrol the borders and thus prevent this undesirable and unlawful Chinese invasion. Give us this bill and the border invasion will practically cease, and at a merely nominal cost. I have talked with Hon. Robert P. Porter, the Superintendent of Census, and he favors the bill. If you mean to execute your laws this is by far the cheapest way to stop this clandestine invasion.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I desire to say my people are deeply interested in this subject. The farmers and fruit men who get the benefit of their cheap labor are willing to forego that advantage for the benefit of our own race. The working men and women in the cities, and, in fact, all over the State, appeal to you to give them this legislation and any additional legislation necessary to rid the country of this evil. Their children are growing up and are anxious and willing to work, but they can not compete with these Mongolian invaders.

Thousands and thousands of brave men and honest women throughout the whole country are unable to find work for willing hands to do. It is for them I speak. Their labor made this country great. No insult to our flag could be offered in their presence. They are certainly entitled to respectful consideration. For every Chinaman you get rid of you provide a place for one of them. If I had my way not one of them would be here now. The comfort and happiness of our own people at home are worth more to us than all our commercial relations with China. If we can not trade with them without becoming the receptacle of all the slum of the Chinese Empire, if the fairest country on earth is to be overrun and our people destroyed by this Mongolian horde, then I say forego the trade.

The prosperity and happiness of our own people with me are paramount to all else. An alien race will destroy it. There is no room in this country for any race we can not mix with and dwell with in harmony. I do not think the Caucasian race can mix with any other race on earth. This is our country, left us as a heritage from our fathers. It is our duty to protect it against this foreign invasion. The people I represent are men and women who are rearing their families to worship God and love our institutions. It is for them I make this appeal. Stand by the Pacific coast on this question. Give them a bill that will forever close our Golden Gate against all classes of Chinese immigration, including Chinese merchants, and receive the heartfelt thanks of a grateful people.

Mr. McKENNA. If no other gentleman desires to debate the question I will ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Kentucky desire to take the floor?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me this bill, while many of its provisions are said to be taken from the statutes already in existence and while this is a proper subject to introduce into the taking of the census—I see no objection to the clause to take the census of the Chinese, as all other populations of the country. Indeed, this is a proper thing to be done as to all populations, and I have no objection, therefore, to that portion which proposes to take the census of the Chinese. But it will be observed in connection there are certain punitive parts of the bill which propose high penalties on these people and which seem to me not connected with the legitimate business of taking the census. It is designed to enforce the penal statutes against the Chinese under the process of taking the census. I believe, therefore, that portion of the bill which provides for enforcing these high penal statutes against the Chinese ought not to be embodied in a measure which proposes to take the census, because in taking the census you can take, as the bill provides, under the Superintendent of the Census, the census also of these Chinese people.

I notice there has been added a proviso in the first section, which is in these words:

Provided, That if the Chinese person to whom a certificate shall have been issued, as aforesaid, lose the same he shall, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, on proof of such loss, receive a certified copy of the duplicate copy on file in the Census Office, which certified copy shall have the force and effect as the original which was issued to him.

Section 2 provides:—

SEC. 2. That for the purpose of obtaining the particulars necessary for the registration and the issuance of the certificates herein provided for, the Superintendent of Census, if he shall deem it expedient so to do, may withhold the schedules of inquiries relating to the enumeration of the Chinese from the enumerators of the several subdivisions and may charge the collection of this information upon experts and special agents without respect to locality, in the same manner as is provided for in section 18 of the aforesaid act, both as to their authority and the rates of compensation.

It seems to me it is improperly providing in a bill for taking the census for the enforcement of penal laws against the Chinese people who are unlawfully here. It is encumbering this measure with provisions which are foreign to it.

I made an inquiry of the gentleman from California [Mr. MORROW] who introduced the bill whether or not the treaty under which this act was passed, as all will remember who were members of the last House, under what is known as the Scott exclusion act—it was passed under the idea that treaty would be ratified—I asked, I say, whether that treaty was ratified.

Mr. MORROW. Not that bill; that Scott bill was passed because the treaty was not ratified.

Mr. HOOKER. But the idea was that the Chinese would ratify the treaty. Now, we did not receive positive information as to this when the penal statutes to which the gentleman has referred were first enacted.

That treaty has not yet been ratified; but these people are here at present in large numbers and under stringent penal laws. They did not come originally of their own seeking and consent, because the original treaty with China was under the Stanton and Burlingame treaties, wherein we solicited intercourse with them, broke down the Chinese wall of exclusion, and they were brought here under the operation of these treaties in considerable numbers. In fact, it was regarded as a great piece of diplomacy on our part that we had broken down this wall and secured the admission of our missionaries, who were sent in large numbers under that treaty to China. Large numbers of them are still there, notwithstanding that we adopted a treaty which the Chinese did not regard as friendly to them and thus far have not ratified.

As I have said, Mr. Speaker, we asked a treaty originally with China. We sought their consent to it. They never asked us to make it. We insisted, and it was finally accomplished. This treaty contained the most salutary and liberal provisions on their part, so far as the admission of our missionaries was concerned, and under it, as I have said, they were admitted, and they are extensively laboring in that field, and notwithstanding the hostile treaty, which China has failed so far to ratify, she has not excluded our missionaries or taken steps in that direction. This hostile treaty which China felt she ought not to ratify, as I recollect, excepted from the operation of our stringent laws Chinese merchants and travelers and those persons coming from China and traveling through this portion of the world as if they were citizens of any other nation. The original law, as I understand it, admitted the Chinese merchant or traveler who came here for the purpose of looking at our country or passing through it, the object of the law being, as has been well stated by the gentleman from California, to strike at the laborers, those who were regarded as laborers, coming here under what is known as the contract system. This character of labor we proposed and proposed to exclude, and that by the adoption of heavy penal statutes. It was never intended to affect ministers or legations from that country, and excepted also, as I have said, originally, the merchants and travelers who might come in as if from any other country. In this respect this bill seems highly punitive in its character and absolutely foreign from the taking of the census with which it is connected. So foreign is it, Mr. Speaker, that it should be adopted in an entirely separate and independent measure. While the census part is practically correct and should be adopted, I think there are grave objections to the other portion.

Mr. MORROW. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a word in response to what has been said by the gentleman from Mississippi that the penal provisions of the bill are not properly associated with the execution of the law in the making of enumerations under the census. The enumerators, under the census law, will proceed with the enumeration and issue to these people certificates that will identify them. Then the execution of the other provisions remains to the courts and officers of the United States, as under the former statutes. It is not designed to make any change in that respect, but it was deemed advisable, in view of the fact that these people were coming to this country, and under contracts much more objectionable than those which preceded the present prohibitory legislation, that we should provide a certificate for those entitled to remain here, which requirement would show that a person without the certificate came across the line in defiance of the law. That is all there is in the bill.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I yield now five minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. McCREARY].

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of the passage of this bill. For some years past we have been endeavoring to prohibit Chinese laborers from coming to this country. In 1882, a bill was passed by Congress to prohibit Chinese laborers from coming to the United States. Again, in 1884, we passed another bill the object of which was to prevent the coming of Chinese; and again, in 1888, Congress passed what is known as the Scott exclusion act, to prohibit the immigration of the Chinese.

The passage of these three measures proves that the Congress of the United States desires to prohibit the coming of Chinese to the United States. But it seems that these three acts have not been full enough to accomplish the object sought; for information which is believed to be reliable now comes to us that in spite of the law the Chinese are still coming here, crossing the Canadian border and coming in by way of Victoria, or by way of Nogales on the Mexican border, as well as from other places. If that be the case, we are now called upon to take such means as may be necessary, effective, and proper to exclude them.

The bill which is now under consideration is, in my judgment, drawn for the purpose of securing and enforcing their exclusion from the United States. It seems to me that it provides much which we could not put into any other bill. It provides that the Superintendent of the Census shall cause the Chinese now in this country to be enumerated, and shall give to each one a certificate, and then, if after a certain length of time a Chinaman is found here without such certificate, it is presumptive evidence that he is here without authority of law; then he may be arrested and the penalties imposed by the law will follow, because it is prima facie proof that he came in unlawfully.

If therefore the Congress of the United States desires, as it has indicated its desire by the passage of three separate acts, to exclude the Chinese from our country, I think we ought to pass this bill. I believe it is a good bill, and will go far towards preventing the Chinese from coming here unlawfully by skipping across our borders from Victoria, Nogales, and other points.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. VANDEVER].

Mr. VANDEVER. Mr. Speaker, the Chinese exclusion act passed at the last session of Congress was a Democratic measure. It met the approval, I believe, of the entire delegation from California, and was in accordance with public sentiment upon that side of the continent. We have long felt there that the Chinese are an undesirable portion of our population. While to a certain extent they may be utilized in the labor of the country, yet if we erect no barrier against their incoming they will entirely overrun that portion of the country to such an extent as to seriously disturb the labor interests of our own people and will exert a deleterious and depressing influence upon the prosperity of the whole Pacific coast.

It was from good motives, from patriotic motives, that the people of California opposed the unrestricted immigration of Chinese into this country. Now, then, we find under the operation of the Chinese restriction act that various subterfuges are resorted to by the Chinese to evade its provisions; they find their way into this country in large numbers in a clandestine manner, coming over the border from the British possessions in the north and in large numbers over the Mexican boundary on the south, in defiance of the provisions of law. The bill under consideration simply proposes a method of registering Chinese already in the country, in order to ascertain the extent to which the law has been defied and disregarded; and to protect ourselves as far as possible against illicit immigration of Chinese we have a law which prohibits the introduction of contract labor upon the Atlantic coast, and indeed on either side of the continent, which has the same principle involved as this bill has. Now, if similar subterfuges were resorted to for the purpose of enabling contract labor to come into the Atlantic ports illegally, how quick and ready would be members on this floor from that section of country to support all measures preventing such occurrence in the future. Now, that is the manner in which this stands. There seems to be a general sentiment against unrestricted Chinese immigration; this bill will aid in accomplishing this end.

The only question that can be raised against this bill is whether it properly belongs to the Census Office to institute this practice of registry. That is the only question to be considered here; and if the House does not choose to support in its present shape this bill the duty will be incumbent upon us to provide for it in a separate act. But why not do it in the census act? We get the information in the Census Office; and in obtaining the information we may at the same time provide for the identification of the Chinese who have come into the country in defiance of law and in contravention of the Chinese exclusion act. I see no objection to it, and I hope the bill will be passed.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I thought that this bill was too important not to have some attention drawn to it. I do not want to oppose the bill, but it is in no particular sense a census bill at all. The really important part of the bill, providing for giving a certificate to the Chinese, is not a part of the duties of the Census Department, and I think it is a mistake to add it to that department. I doubt whether the appropriation of $100,000 is necessary; but I do not care anything about that. It seems to me that one of the provisions of the bill is a very severe provision. It is section 3, and I desire to call the attention of the gentleman in charge of the bill to that section:

That any Chinese person subject to enumeration on the 1st day of June, 1890, who shall fail or refuse, for the period of ninety days from said 1st day of June, to comply with the provisions of this act—

Mr. McKENNA. To what section is the gentleman referring? Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. It is where a Chinaman who fails or refuses to submit himself for enumeration and in obtaining the certificate of identification provided for shall be subjected to certain penalties. The word "fail" there is too severe. If a man has been notified and refused, I think it may not be improper to have a very rigorous and severe punishment; but for a mere failure to submit himself for identification, it is too severe. In all probability he is not familiar with our institutions. In all probability he is not familiar with our language, probably not aware of the passage of the bill, and may not know what he is required to perform under it; and therefore to subject him for mere "failure" to such punishment seems to me, under all the circumstances, a very harsh measure. Of course the bill can not be amended, and we have to take it as it is.

I sympathize very largely with the feeling which has induced this legislation. The principles upon which it is based apply, however, to very important questions which I am sorry to say my friend from California does not seem to appreciate or agree with me upon.

Mr. McKENNA. To strike out the word suggested by the gentleman from Kentucky would make too large a hole in this bill, and if agreed to the bill would be of no use. I now yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS].

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Speaker, I did not hear distinctly what the gentleman from California said about the proposed amendment to the bill. If the words "fail or," before the word "refuse," in section 3, were not in the bill perhaps I should not have to say what I intend to say. I believe, as the gentleman from Kentucky has said, that these words ought not to be in the bill. I believe there should be an end to this Chinese question. Certain Chinese are legal Chinamen entitled to be denizens of the United States. Certain others are not legal denizens, and they should be identified. This bill proposes what seems to me to be an awkward and clumsy way of identification. If the United States chooses to go into the work of identification, it ought to spend all the money that is necessary for that purpose. That a Chinaman who receives a certificate from a census enumerator thereby becomes a legal denizen, although he may not have been one before, seems to me absurd; and to say that a Chinaman who has not received a certificate must be conclusively deemed to be illegally in the United States is equally absurd.

Now, I admit the purposes of this bill are good. I believe, however, that these Chinamen, some of whom are legal denizens of this country and some are not, ought to be identified by some exact and practicable proceeding. If any Chinaman willfully refuses to submit to the process of identification I believe in applying to him a penalty; but to say that any man who has failed, without his fault and by the fault of the Census Office, to get a certificate from that officer, shall thereby be declared conclusively to be illegally in the United States under the treaty obligations of the United States, appears to me inadmissible. I do not object to any method, however severe, of ascertaining whether a Chinaman has or has not the right to remain in the country under our treaty obligations with China, but I believe the method proposed by this bill is unnecessary and inadmissible. Generally the bill is good; this particular provision is exceedingly bad.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

Mr. McKENNA. Mr. Speaker, before that question is put I ask unanimous consent to change the word "five" in line 5, section 7, to "six." "Five" is a clerical error; it should be "six."

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Does the gentleman from California feel authorized to ask unanimous consent to strike out the words "fail or" in section 3?

Mr. McKENNA. The gentleman from California will say that he does not feel authorized to do it.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the gentleman from California a question.

The SPEAKER. The time for debate has not yet expired, and the gentleman is in order.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Ohio. I will ask the gentleman whether there has been any estimate made of the additional expenditure that will be incurred by this bill?

Mr. McKENNA. Yes, sir; there has been an estimate made.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Ohio. What is it?

Mr. McKENNA. The amount of the appropriation in the bill.

The question being taken, the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill as amended was agreed to (two-thirds voting in favor thereof).

HAWAII IN THE PAN-AMERICAN CONGRESS.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Committee on Foreign Affairs I move to suspend the rules and pass the Senate concurrent resolution which I send to the desk.

The concurrent resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President of the United States be requested to invite the King of the Hawaiian Islands to select delegates to represent the kingdom in the Pan-American Congress now assembled in the Capital of this Republic.

The question being taken, the motion to suspend the rules and pass the concurrent resolution was agreed to (two-thirds voting in favor thereof). *

ROAD TO NATIONAL CEMETERY, PORT HUDSON, LA.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Committee on Military Affairs I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 389) to construct a road to the national cemetery at Port Hudson, La.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $25,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the construction of a road from the Mississippi River to the national cemetery at Port Hudson, La.

Sec. 2. That the sum of money appropriated by this act shall be expended by and under the direction of the Secretary of War, either by contract or otherwise, as to him may seem best.

The committee recommended an amendment, striking out "twenty-five thousand," in line 1, before the word "dollars," and inserting "thirteen thousand five hundred;" which, by unanimous consent, was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Louisiana to suspend the rules and pass the bill as amended.

Mr. KILGORE. I demand a second.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

Mr. KILGORE. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ROBERTSON] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE] will take their places as tellers.

The question was taken on ordering a second, and it was decided in the affirmative—ayes 145, no 1.

The question being taken, the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill was agreed to (two-thirds voting therefor).

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McCook, its Secretary, announced the passage of the bill (H. R. 346) to extend the act to grant the right of way to the Kansas and Pacific Railroad Company through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes, with an amendment in which concurrence was requested.

It further announced that the Senate had insisted on its amendment to the bill (H. R. 5179) fixing the rate of interest charged on arrearages of general and special taxes now due the District of Columbia if paid within a time specified, had agreed to the conference asked on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed Mr. McMillan, Mr. Farwell, and Mr. Harris as conferees on its part.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. KENNEDY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 4130) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at the city of Pierre, in South Dakota; and

A bill (H. R. 7617) to authorize the Oregon and Washington Bridge Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Columbia River between the State of Oregon and the State of Washington, and to establish it as a post-road.

TRANSFER OF REVENUE MARINE.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Committee on Naval Affairs, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 6944) to transfer the revenue-marine service from the Treasury Department to the Navy Department.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint, on or before the 1st day of July, 1890, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, all the officers of the revenue-cutter service (commissioned under section 2751, Revised Statutes of the United States) to be officers in the United States Navy, in the grade corresponding to their present relative rank as follows: Captains revenue-cutter service to be lieutenant-commanders United States Navy; first lieutenants revenue-cutter service to be lieutenants, senior grade, United States Navy; second lieutenants revenue-cutter service to be lieutenants, junior grade, United States Navy; chief engineers revenue-cutter service to be passed assistant engineers United States Navy, with the relative rank of lieutenant, senior grade; first assistant engineers revenue-cutter service to be passed assistant engineers United States Navy, with the relative rank of lieutenant, junior grade, and second assistant engineers revenue-cutter service to be assistant engineers United States Navy, with the relative rank of ensign. That the officers of the revenue-cutter service transferred to the Navy by this act shall take rank in the Navy according to the date of their commissions therein, and their seniority among themselves shall be determined by the date of their commissions in the revenue-cutter service; that the officers so transferred shall receive the pay and emoluments pertaining to their rank in the Navy; that they shall be governed by and subject to all laws and regulations for the government of the Navy, except in such particulars as may conflict with the provisions of this act; and that the number of officers so transferred shall be a permanent addition to that now allowed by law in the Navy, in the several grades hereinbefore mentioned.

Sec. 2. That on or before the said date the Secretary of the Treasury shall transfer from the Treasury Department to the Navy Department all vessels, with all their appurtenances, and all depots, stores, and other articles in any way belonging to the revenue-cutter service, and said vessels shall thereafter form a part of the regular naval force of the United States; and any revenue vessels hereafter built shall be constructed, and all repairs to existing vessels shall be made, under the authority and according to designs of the Navy Department; and the offices of superintendent of construction and consulting engineer and every office appertaining thereto, the office of instructor of cadets, and of the surgeons who serve during the practice cruises with cadets, are hereby abolished.

Sec. 3. That the number of enlisted men now allowed by law in the Navy shall be increased by so many as may be necessary to man the said vessels according to the regulations and allowances of the Navy; and the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to employ a sufficient number of pilots for the proper conduct of the service.

Sec. 4. That the Secretary of the Navy shall at all times, upon the requisition of the Secretary of the Treasury, assign suitable vessels, with the proper complement of officers and crews, to perform the duty now performed by the revenue-cutter service in such ports on the sea and Gulf coasts, on the lakes and elsewhere, as the Secretary of the Treasury may deem necessary, the duties of such vessels, their officers and crews, in relation to the protection of the revenue, to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and their operations and movements to be controlled and directed by him precisely as has heretofore been in the revenue-cutter service. All officers so assigned shall be deemed officers of the customs during the period of such assignment and shall be clothed with the authority and exercise the powers now or heretofore pertaining to revenue-cutter officers.

Sec. 5. That all line officers transferred in pursuance of this act from the rev- enue-cutter service shall be considered out of the line of promotion upon attaining the rank of lieutenant-commander United States Navy; and all engineers so transferred shall be likewise considered out of the line of promotion upon attaining the rank of passed assistant engineer United States Navy, with the relative rank of lieutenant, senior grade; that whenever a vacancy shall occur from any cause whatever among the transferred officers it shall be filled by an officer so transferred, according to seniority, subject to the provisions herein-after contained in relation to filling such vacancies, such officer having successfully passed the prescribed examination for the grade to which he is promoted, but no officer so transferred shall be promoted to vacancies occurring among officers not so transferred. Whenever a vacancy occurs at the foot of the list of the transferred officers, it shall be deemed an ordinary vacancy in the naval establishment, and be filled according to the law and custom of the Navy; and the Secretary of the Navy may detail any officer of the proper grade to do duty in the vacancy so occurring (and such vacancies shall be filled and details made in like manner until the list of transferred officers shall be exhausted), and thereafter the Secretary of the Navy may detail any officer to perform revenue-marine duty in the same manner as details are now made for other special duty. But the Secretary of the Navy shall not detail for the revenue-cutter service, nor continue therein, any officer who shall not be satisfactory to the Secretary of the Treasury, nor shall he detail for such service other than transferred officers, so long as any such are available.

SEC. 6. That the standard of examination for the promotion of officers transferred by this act shall be that now in force for the revenue-cutter service, and such examinations shall be made by boards composed of such transferred officers, such examinations to continue so long as any transferred line officers remain below the grade of lieutenant-commander United States Navy, or any transferred engineer below the rank of passed assistant engineer with the relative rank of lieutenant, senior grade, United States Navy.

SEC. 7. That section 1445 of the Revised Statutes shall be held not to apply to the officers transferred from the revenue-cutter service to the Navy by this act, but such officers shall receive the full benefit of sections 1443 and 1444, Revised Statutes of the United States, their rank notwithstanding, when they have performed the prescribed service of forty years or reached the prescribed age of sixty-two years, and officers so transferred shall be credited with the sea-service and other duties performed by them in the service of the United States, and shall receive all the benefits of such duty and of their service in the same manner as if they had been officers of the Navy during such service, without regard to the date of their commissions in the Navy.

SEC. 8. That no officer transferred as hereinbefore provided shall be required to serve in vessels doing other than revenue-cutter duty, except in case of war, and all officers attached to vessels performing revenue duty shall be considered as on sea service.

SEC. 9. That cadets of the revenue-marine service who shall have completed their probationary course when this act shall take effect shall, upon passing the prescribed examination, receive their commissions as ensigns in the Navy, but shall be considered in all respects as officers transferred by this act, and cadets who have completed one year of the probationary course upon the passage of this act shall be admitted to the Naval Academy in the fourth class, after passing a suitable examination, or, if they so prefer, after one additional year's probationary course, to be served on board a revenue-cutter, upon passing the examination for revenue-marine officers, as prescribed in section 6 of this act, be transferred to the Navy as provided above for revenue cadets who have finished their probationary course, and shall thereupon be held to be transferred officers and ineligible for promotion above the grade of lieutenant-commander; and no appointment shall hereafter be made to the grade of revenue cadet.

SEC. 10. That all contracts entered into by the Secretary of the Treasury for the maintenance of the revenue marine, or for the repair or construction of the vessels thereof, in force on the date of this act, becoming operative, shall remain in force in the same manner as if made by the Secretary of the Navy in accordance with the provisions of this act.

SEC. 11. That every officer not on the transferred list detailed for revenue-marine duty shall, within three months after such detail, pass an examination in the laws relating to his duties as an officer of the customs, according to the standard now in force for the revenue-cutter service.

SEC. 12. That all acts or portions of acts conflicting with or inconsistent with this act be, and they are hereby, repealed.

The report of the committee is as follows:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom were referred the bills (H. R. 71 and H. R. 450) to transfer the revenue-cutter service from the Treasury Department to the Navy Department, report the same back with amendments in the form of a substitute (H. R. 6944), and recommend that the said substitute be concurred in and the bill do pass.

For the information of the House and as the reasons for our recommendations we submit the following:

The revenue-marine service was organized in 1790, upon the recommendation and advice of Alexander Hamilton. The leading feature of the organization was to give naval rank and authority to its officers and place its vessels and crews upon a similar footing in regard to drill and discipline as a regular vessel of war, but for the convenience and dispatch of the public business to attach it to the Treasury Department. Accordingly, its vessels are provided with a full armament of cannon and small-arms, its officers and men are trained and made proficient in the use and management of such weapons, and Congress has conferred naval rank upon the officers, and they are compelled to wear a uniform bearing the insignia of such rank.

Congress has constantly treated it as a part of the naval force of the country, to this end adding to the number of its vessels and strengthening their armament and crews on several occasions of threatened war, and providing by law that the President may in his discretion place its vessels on active naval service. Its officers are commissioned by the President and confirmed by the Senate in like manner as those of the Army and Navy.

Following these objects of its creation, the revenue marine has borne an important part in every war in which the nation has been involved. Its vessels, always ready at a moment's call, have been the first armed force to repel a foreign enemy or aid in the prevention or settlement of international complications. Its officers have received a due proportion of honorable scars in the country's defense.

They are empowered to quell mutinies, capture slaves, destroy pirates, and, in time of war, attack and capture vessels of the enemy. The act of Congress, June 14, 1797, authorized the President "to cause revenue-cutters to be employed to defend the seacoast and to repel hostility to the vessels and commerce within their jurisdiction."

In a communication to Congress, 1790, relating to revenue-cutters, Alexander Hamilton, Secretary of the Treasury, recommended giving the officers naval rank, "which," he said, "will not only induce fit men to engage, but will attach them to their duties by a nicer sense of honor."

In October, 1798, the President "with a view of producing concert of action of the naval forces of the United States, placed the revenue-cutters at the disposal of the Secretary of the Navy," and seven of them were accordingly employed in the West Indies, during the quasi French war, and afterward in the suppression of piracy in that quarter.

By act of Congress, March 2, 1799, the President was authorized to direct the revenue-cutters to co-operate with the Navy, as well in peace as in war.

In the war of 1812-1814 the revenue-cutters were employed as dispatch boats and for coast defense. On several occasions they encountered the enemy with great bravery and credit, notably in the case of the cutter Surveyor, which was captured by an overwhelming force from the British frigate Narcissus, after a defense so desperately brave as to cause the British captain to return to Captain Travis his sword, with a letter bearing admiring testimony to his gallant conduct.

In 1835 several revenue-cutters participated in the Seminole war and maintained a high reputation for the service.

In 1858 the steam-cutter Harriet Lane, commanded by Capt. John Faunce, United States revenue marine, served in the Paraguayan expedition, and was of incalculable value to the fleet.

During the civil war the steam-cutter Harriet Lane shared in the attack on Hatteras Inlet, the cutter Miami in that on Sewall's Point, while the Naugatuck was with the gallant Rodgers in the attack on Fort Darling by the iron-clads, and her captain badly injured.

Several revenue-cutters performed valuable service in Chesapeake Bay in preventing the smuggling of supplies from North to South, and Captain Duncan, of the service, was shot dead while rescuing Union refugees from the Virginia shore.

Since the war the vessels of the service have performed military duty in protecting the inhabitants of Alaska from murder and outrage by the Indians.

It thus appears from its history that the naval character of the revenue-cutter service has been recognized from its foundation by its employment in war-like operations in every war in which the country has engaged, by its prescribed duties, by the armament of its vessels and their crews, and by uniforming and giving naval rank to its officers.

The policy of transferring the revenue-marine service to the Navy, as proposed by this act, is not a new one. In 1882, Mr. Chandler, then Secretary of the Navy, said in his report:

"The revenue-cutter service affords a proper field for the employment of naval officers. The duty is directly in the line of their profession. They are fitted for it, both by training and experience; and if they could be so employed without detriment to the interests of the existing corps of officers, a great and permanent benefit to the Government and to the Navy would result."

"The service of the cruising cutters is strictly naval. The duties of the officers are not distinguishable in kind from those of naval officers. The discipline is naval, as far as naval discipline can be carried on outside the Navy Department."

"The cruising cutters carry an armament of from one to four guns. The crew are armed with small-arms. The broadside guns are furnished by the Navy Department. In time of war these vessels have always been pressed into the naval service."

"At the date of the annual report of 1881 there were 35 vessels in the revenue marine. Deducting the 8 vessels on harbor duty and 5 sailing vessels, there remain 22 steamers, 15 of which are propellers of from 131 to 403 tons and 8 are side-wheel steamers of from 201 to 499 tons. These 23 vessels, which may be classed as gunboats, are good vessels of their class, and must always be regarded as a part of the available naval force."

"The experience acquired by junior naval officers, if employed in the cutter service, in cruising on our coast and in assisting vessels in distress, would be of direct benefit in their profession and to the country in case of war. They would acquire a familiarity with the coast and a knowledge of local pilotage that could not otherwise be obtained. They would have practice in the handling of small vessels under difficult circumstances. Employed at first in the lowest rank, they would readily acquire whatever might be new or peculiar in this branch of the service."

"In the interests of economy the change suggested is desirable. While the Navy proper is being reduced, the Government is keeping up a revenue navy of 34 captains, 86 lieutenants, and 65 engineers; in all, 185 officers. Two training schools are maintained to do the work of one. The Naval Academy at Annapolis is supplied with a full corps of instructors and every appliance for the training at all times of 335 naval cadets. At the same time, another school is maintained at New Bedford for the training of revenue-marine cadets, covering the same ground, only in a limited degree, and with imperfect appliances. The revenue-marine cadets receive $900 a year during their service at the school. Recent legislation has provided that only a part of each graduating class at Annapolis shall enter the Navy, while the remainder shall be given a year's pay and remanded to private life. All these young men, upon whom the Government has bestowed a gratuitous education, are well fitted for their profession, from which they are thus excluded; and by opening the cruising-cutter service to these graduates of the Naval Academy, the Government will save, at a single stroke, the whole cost of a duplicate establishment."

"In order to harmonize all the interests involved in connecting naval officers with the revenue-cutter service, the administration of the two services should be combined under the Navy Department. The small vessels employed on harbor duty, which are only used to carry inspectors of customs and as a sort of harbor police, should remain solely attached to the Treasury, as at present. The duty is not such as to require a special corps of officers. The cruising cutters should be transferred to the Navy Department; but they should be assigned to duty in the various districts, as at present, upon the requisition of the Secretary of the Treasury, and their movements may be directed for the time being by the collectors of customs. The present revenue-marine officers should become a corps in the Navy, receiving life commissions as naval officers, with all the rights and privileges that belong to such commissions, while the vacancies gradually made at the foot of the list should be supplied by the detail of junior officers of the Navy of corresponding grade, for service on board the cutters."

"It is not proposed to remove the present officers of the revenue marine or to take away or abridge, in the slightest degree, their privileges or emoluments. On the contrary, they would retain all that they now enjoy, and, without re-examination or a new test of any kind, would receive in addition the benefits of a permanent naval commission. Vacancies in the upper grades should continue to be filled by promotion in the corps, and naval officers should only be detailed as vacancies are made at the bottom of the list. The duties of the revenue-marine officers would remain the same as they now are; and it should be particularly provided, in any change that might be made, that their position should in no way be altered, except by giving all, including the engineers, the same permanency of tenure now enjoyed only by naval officers, and the same right of being placed upon the retired-list of the Navy in case of extreme age or disability—changes in every respect advantageous."

"If it is not the policy of the Government to make appropriations for sufficient ships of war to give adequate occupation to all our naval officers, it should certainly make use of them in every branch of the public service for which they are fitted. A highly trained corps of officers, such as modern naval warfare demands, can not be created in a day. If the personnel of the Navy is to be kept at its present standard of quality and numbers, it must be utilized in every form of Government employment for which it is adapted. In this view it hardly admits of question that the revenue marine should be joined with the Navy. No disturbance of vested interests would be caused by the transfer; on the contrary, every provision would be made to guard against such a disturbance. But a new field would be opened for the services of officers already at the disposal of the Government which by their training they are in every way qualified to occupy."

(Interesting information and suggestions concerning the revenue marine, prepared, by orders from the Navy Department, by Master George H. Peters.)

Mr. Chandler discussed the subject again in his report for the year 1883, as follows:

"The duties of the revenue marine, as officially defined, consist in cruising for the prevention of illicit trade, and for the enforcement of certain laws applicable to shipping, particularly those requiring the registry, enrollment, and license of vessels, compelling life-saving appliances to be kept therein, the name and hailing port to be affixed, and lights to be exhibited; prohibiting the overloading of passengers, assessing the marine-hospital tax, and aiding in the quarantine service of the States. The cutters further assist in enforcing the neutrality laws, and those for the suppression of piracy, and for the protection of the timber reserves. They are also called upon to prevent unlawful traffic in rum and fire-arms in Alaska; to protect the seal fisheries, to suppress mutinies and extinguish fires on board merchant vessels, and to carry out the laws in aid of distressed seamen.

"Several of these duties, such as the enforcement of the neutrality laws, the suppression of piracy, of mutinies on board merchant vessels, and the like, the ships of the Navy are now charged with and actually perform in common with revenue vessels. Of the rest there is not one that is foreign to the general purpose and scope of the naval officer's profession. The only duty connected directly with the customs is that of the seizure of smugglers—a duty which is precisely similar to the naval officer's duty of searching and seizing, during war, vessels engaged in contraband trade. It requires a knowledge of the statutes relating to the subject, a knowledge not very difficult to acquire, but beyond this nothing that is outside of a naval officer's necessary training. The duties of both services are identical in their general nature, only they operate in different localities. Both cruise to protect the maritime interests of the Government and to render assistance to American vessels—the one on the coast, the other, in addition, at sea and in foreign waters. One polices the shore, the other the ocean. In war both engage in naval operations.

"The practical identity in the character of the naval and the revenue-marine services lies in the fact that they are both nautical and military. That the revenue marine is a nautical service requires no proof. It is nothing if not nautical. That it is a military service was officially asserted by the Treasury Department in the report on the service for 1881, in these words:

"The revenue marine, while charged by law with the performance of important civil duties, is essentially military in its character. Each vessel is provided with great guns and furnished with as full a complement of small arms for its crew as any ship of war. Its officers are required to be proficient in military drill and possess a thorough knowledge of the uses of both great and small arms. Its crews are required to be instructed from day to day at the great guns and in the use of the carbine, pistol, and cutlass. Commanding officers are required, while boarding vessels arriving in ports of the United States, in case of the failure or refusal of any such vessel, on being hailed, to come to and submit to the proper inspection by an officer of the service, to fire first across her bows as a warning, and, in case of persistent refusal, to resort to shot or shell to compel obedience. In the performance of this work they are likely at any time to receive injuries and be subjected to the same dangers in time of peace as the force employed on naval vessels.

"By the act of March 2, 1799, it is provided that 'the revenue-cutters shall, whenever the President so directs, co-operate with the Navy.' It will be observed that the co-operation of the two services prescribed in the act above quoted is not contingent upon a state of war or other particularly perilous conditions. On the contrary, it may take place in time of peace and for pacific purposes, and when less hazard is involved to the two services than pertains to the discharge by a revenue vessel of its ordinary duties. It is difficult to conceive that discrimination could be made by the law between services subjected to equally hazardous and equally important military duties, both in time of peace and in time of war. * * * Objection to granting pensions for the revenue-marine officers and seamen has been made on the ground that such action would be extending this bounty to civil employes of the Government, a policy to which our legislative traditions, so to speak, are opposed. But if in legal theory they are civil employes, are they so in fact? Are they less positively a part of our military force in time of war than the Army or Navy? It is true revenue vessels are not to be ordered into action on purely military service, offensive or defensive, except the President so direct; neither are vessels of the Navy."

"The above clear and precise statement, showing that the so-called revenue marine is simply a coast navy, is without doubt correct and just. It is because it forms a part of Government work in which officers and seamen are employed to navigate Government vessels at sea, from port to port, that it may fitly become a part of the naval establishment. If the present system of military instruction is so defective that the officers of the revenue navy are not made naval officers, it would seem that some other system should be adopted to that end, seeing that they are 'subjected to equally important and equally hazardous military duties, both in time of peace and in time of war,' and that they are no less positively 'a part of our military force in time of war than the Army or Navy.' If, on the other hand, naval officers now have too little practice in coast navigation, a method should be devised of giving them such practice at once, for there is nothing more essential than this to success in the operations of modern warfare.

"The plan proposed with these objects in view included the transfer to the Navy Department of the cruising cutters, their officers and seamen (excepting the harbor boats used by the inspectors of customs, which do not require a special corps of officers), the organization of the officers transferred as a revenue-marine corps in the Navy, upon a footing precisely similar to that of the present naval officers, and the gradual employment of junior officers of the Navy in this service as vacancies occur at the bottom of the list. Such a measure would accomplish the desired result while protecting effectually the interests of the existing corps."

Secretary Tracy, in his report for the year 1883, says:

"The recommendation is made by the Board of Visitors at the Naval Academy that the officers of the revenue-marine service should be taken from the graduates of the Academy. This suggestion is sound and timely, but does not go far enough. The extravagance of maintaining in the United States what are practically two navies, one for ocean service and the other for coast service, supplied by two naval academies, one of which discharges half of its pupils at graduating, has at different times been pointed out, and nowhere more forcibly than in the reports of the Secretary of the Navy for 1882 and 1883 (which have just been quoted).

"The Department therefore strongly recommends a consolidation of the coast-guard navy and the ocean navy. It is believed that no practical difficulties lie in the way of its accomplishment. The present revenue marine, composed of some two hundred officers, should be taken bodily into the naval service and organized as a separate corps, to be known as the revenue marine corps of the Navy, subject in all respects to the laws and entitled to all the privileges which attach to the naval commission.

"The interests of the existing revenue marine officers being thus carefully guarded, their employment and emoluments will continue as at the present time. As vacancies occur at the foot of the list they should be filled, not by special appointment, but by the temporary detail of junior naval officers, thereby diminishing the number of cadets discharged each year from the graduating class at the Academy. As the numbers of the revenue marine corps decrease, the number of junior officers of the Navy employed on the duty would increase, until, in the course of time, the corps would pass away by the operation of natural causes, such as retirement, death, and resignation.

"As to employment, the officers of the revenue-marine corps, as long as it lasted, and those of the Navy supplying the places made vacant in the corps, would perform the duties now incident to the revenue marine. The harbor boats now used by the inspectors of customs, which do not require a special corps of officers, should remain, as at present, exclusively under the customs service, as the light-house tenders are under the Light-House Board. The cruising cutters, however, should be officered and manned by a force fully incorporated in the naval organization.

"The duties of the Navy and revenue marine are identical in general character, and differ only in their administrative objects. One polices the ocean, the other the coast. The seizure of smugglers, the only duty of the revenue marine that has direct relation with the collection of customs, is precisely similar to the duty of naval officers in seizing vessels engaged in contraband trade in time of war. Other duties of the revenue marine, such as the enforcement of the neutrality laws and the suppression of piracy and of mutinies in merchant vessels, are now actually imposed on and performed by the Navy in common with the sister service.

"The rescue of distressed vessels and seamen on our coast is as much the duty of naval as of revenue officers, and the only reason why the former do not perform it is because they are not on the coast or have no suitable vessels for the service. For the other miscellaneous duties of the revenue marine, such as the enforcement of the laws applicable to shipping, the prevention of unlawful traffic in fire-arms in Alaska, and the protection of the seal fisheries in Behring Sea, naval officers are perfectly well fitted. Finally, in time of war both law and custom sanction the employment of the revenue marine in naval operations.

"The practical identity of the services lies in the fact that both are nautical and both are military. There is absolutely no reason for a distinction between them, and a consolidation would inure equally to the advantage of both; and it is believed that the officers of both services would regard the change with favor. The revenue marine would be placed on a substantial footing, absolutely the same as that of naval officers, and could not fail to find satisfaction in being connected with the past traditions and future development of the Navy. The junior naval officers, who would gradually obtain employment in the cutters, would find the service of great practical benefit, and the knowledge they would thus obtain of the pilotage of our own coasts and harbors would be an overwhelming advantage to the Government during their whole professional career. Finally, in the interests of a sound economy, the consolidation must sooner or later take place, and the sooner it comes the better it will be for the country, for the Navy, and for the revenue marine."

The purpose of the present bill is to embody the policy recommended by Secretaries Tracy and Chandler, and it will be seen from the following letters that this bill has the approval, not only of the Navy Department, but of the Treasury Department as well:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, January 4, 1890.

MY DEAR SIR: I have the honor to return herewith the copy of House bill 459 transmitted to me with your letter of the 2d instant.

In reply to your request that I should make any observations or suggestions occurring to me in reference to this bill, I have to say that, having given it a careful and detailed examination, I have no alteration to suggest, and heartily approve of it and would recommend its passage, not only in the interest of the two services concerned, but also in that of the Government generally.

In this connection I beg to inclose a copy of my annual report and ask your attention to the portion marked, which deals directly with the subject of this bill.

Very respectfully,

R. F. TRACY, Secretary of the Navy.

HON. CHARLES S. BAKER,
Chairman Committee on Commerce, House of Representatives.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, January 9, 1890.

SIR: I have respectfully to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 2d instant, transmitting for my examination and views House bill 459, providing for the transfer of the revenue-cutter service from the Treasury Department to the Navy Department, and in reply have the honor to state that I have examined the bill with the view to the interests of the Government and the officers concerned, and that it meets with my approval.

The bill is herewith returned as requested.

Respectfully, yours,

W. WINDOM, Secretary.

HON. CHARLES S. BAKER,
Chairman Committee on Commerce, House of Representatives.

This bill is also strongly urged by the officers of the revenue-marine service, as will be seen by the following petition and the statement of reasons accompanying it:

HON. WILLIAM WINDOM, Secretary of the Treasury:

SIR: We, the undersigned, commissioned officers of the United States revenue marine, represent that for many years efforts have been made before Congress, always with approval of the honorable Secretary of the Treasury for the time being, looking to the promotion of the interests of our service; that of the numerous appeals made, whether through bills presented to Congress or upon the recommendations by your honorable predecessors, not one has been successful.

We now appear before you as petitioners earnestly invoking your aid to obtain, through the national legislature, the relief we seek from the injurious distinctions which exist between the revenue marine and kindred branches of the public service. To this end we have the honor to submit what follows as setting forth some of the most glaring and undeniable facts bearing upon the disadvantages under which we labor.

While many of our duties (mainly those which pertain to the customs service) are characteristic of the civil establishment, our organization, training, discipline, naval rank (conferred by law), the equipment and armament of our vessels, all are military. Thus, while allied to both the civil and military services of the Government and constantly discharging functions common to both, we are upon an equal footing with neither.

The hours of duty or labor required of the civil employé of the Government are fixed by law, are comparatively few, and confined to daylight, usually from 9 a. m. to 4 p. m. He is subjected to no sudden or unusual calls which demand of him an exhibition of manly fortitude or courageous effort, and never to risk his life to save others; no life or property is ever in jeopardy for the loss of which he can be held, even remotely, responsible; when his office hours end his work is done, and the rest of the day is his in which to do what he will; overtaken by sickness his pay goes on and no reduction is made; he is given by law thirty days' leave of absence each year, without forfeiture of salary; he can choose his own home and secure its privacy; here he can gather about him his household gods and enjoy the congenial circle of friends of his choice, live in accord with his tastes and within his means; he has but the one home to maintain, and, by being constantly at its fireside, can practice such economy of his means as will secure him against privations in his declining years; he experiences no more of the vicissitudes of life than the ordinary salaried man of business—hardly so much, because his income is assured; should sickness or death invade his home he is always within call; he can devote his leisure to such interests and occupations as taste and inclination may dictate, thus gratifying desires which render life most endurable, while not a few instances can be cited wherein the incumbents of public office thus circumstanced have been enabled by the leisure afforded them after office hours to qualify themselves for the practice of the law, medicine, and other professions; in short, the choice is left to him whether he will be a drone in the hive or become a useful citizen, fitted to cope with his fellow-men in any or all the avenues of life.

On the other hand, the officer of the revenue marine has no settled home or habitation; he is, by force of circumstances, a nomad; he has two separate and distinct establishments to maintain: his own temporary resting place on ship-board and the equally transitory lodgings of his wife and family on shore; he is confined to cramped and inconvenient quarters, in which, for the most part, decent privacy is denied him; he inhabits, with half a dozen others, a room 10 feet by 18 feet; here he must eat, sleep, perform his ablutions, receive and entertain his friends, and break his daily bread with the congenial and uncongenial alike; his sleeping berth is barely large enough to contain his person; his comforts are such as he can catch as his life wears on; his hours of duty embrace the night as well as the day, and cover the whole twenty-four; he is burdened with the responsibility of many lives, as well as with the care incident to the safety of the property confided to his skill and courage; he must brave the terrors of Arctic seas and face the rigors of the terrible winters of our northern seaboards; he must expose himself to the malaria of our Southern harbors and to the yellow fever in the Mexican Gulf; he must cheerfully leap from his berth at midnight to obey, often half-clad, amid storm and tempest, the summons to save life and property.

Amid all discomfiting and discouraging circumstances, in the faithful execution of his duty, his voice must be heard above the tumult and din cheerily encouraging his subordinates and giving to them the example of a leader for their emulation. Stricken ill, in the line of duty, he is rewarded for his abnegation of self by having his already slender pay cut down, and this at the very time he most needs it; and so, absent from wife and children, home and friends, he fares as best he may; if he visits his wife and children after long absence, "on leave," he must pay for the privilege by having his pay reduced for the duration of the leave, be the same one day or thirty; placed on "waiting orders," whether to satisfy an exigency of the service or other, he must quietly submit, have his pay reduced, and defray his own expenses out of what is left to his post-office address.

The naval officer receives larger pay in the same rank and holds higher rank for the same service; his ordinary duties are less constant, less arduous, and less dangerous; his is a deep-sea service; ours a coasting service, which is the most hazardous and trying known to the sea-farer. His pay is not cut down when sick, and he is entitled to thirty days' leave each year with full pay; if placed on "waiting orders" he is furnished transportation to his place of residence; he has constantly before him the incentive of higher rank; but, without that, his salary increases with length of service; wronged, he can appeal to a court of his peers, and no harm can come to him save through the sentence of such a court; if he loses his life in service, his widow becomes a ward of the nation; when rendered unfit to discharge the functions of his commission, by reason of the infirmities of age or other disability, he is retired upon a competency and can spend his declining years in honor and comfort, earned by a life's devotion to duty. Every right and privilege enjoyed by the naval officer is carefully vested and guarded by law.

The officer of the revenue marine has none, can claim none of these things, and yet there is not a single valid reason that has ever been or can be advanced as argument for granting them to officers of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps which does not apply with equal force in behalf of the revenue-marine officer. He discharges the multifarious, often delicate and always onerous, trusts imposed upon him, cheered by no expectation of honors, incited by no hope of other reward than a consciousness of duty performed. He has not a single vested right by virtue of the commission he holds. There is not a line in the statutes which guarantees to him a fair and impartial trial by his peers, that he may escape oppression and injustice. Neither is there a word in the law that places him upon an equal or fair footing with his brother sea-farer of the Navy as to rank, compensation, rights, or privileges, and yet the duties and life of the one are strangely in consonance with the other, any existing differences being entirely favorable to the naval officer.

Thus we have endeavored to lay before you as briefly as possible a few of the salient reasons which actuate us in seeking relief, and having, as we believe, exhausted effort in other years to secure some of the rights and privileges to which we are justly entitled by virtue of our commissions and the service upon which we are employed, and which are so freely bestowed upon and guaranteed to the naval service, to which we are kindred, and failed, and believing, furthermore, that it is the unmistakable purpose that no measure looking to the retirement and pensioning of civil servants of the Government can pass Congress, we conclude that our best hope of obtaining what we seek is by transfer to the Navy, and we invite your able scrutiny, Mr. Secretary, of the proposed provisions of Senate bill 324, which is designed to effect this.

We respectfully submit that under the provisions of his eminently conservative measure no possible injury can result, and we earnestly contend that great good must accrue to the public service should this bill be enacted into law. Only the professional and military portion of the service would be affected by the pending measure; the force now at the disposal of the Treasury Department would be augmented, while your control of its operations would remain unimpaired, thus insuring the continued performance without friction of the duties now imposed upon the revenue marine; the transfer sought would relieve your Department of the innumerable and vexatious details of a technical service, numbering 200 officers, 1,000 men, and a fleet of 40 vessels, while it would continue to obey, as now and heretofore, your mandates and the behests of law.

We who ask your favorable consideration, Mr. Secretary, of the measure submitted constitute a large majority of the officers of the service whose destiny is affected by it, and we do most earnestly commend to you the assuredly undeniable fact that we, of all men, must hold most dear to our hearts and understandings the interests of the service in which we have the honor to hold commissions. We have won our present positions upon the lists, step by step, from the lowest grades known to the service; many of us have spent our lives from youth to manhood, and grown gray under the flag which our vessels wear, and we earnestly contend that, as compared with the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps, whose peers we are, the revenue marine is the poorest paid, least provided for, and hardest worked organization of commissioned officers in the service of the nation.

Notwithstanding the withering disadvantages under which our service has always labored, we point with just pride to its record for efficiency and devotion to duty, whether it be amid the ice floes of Arctic seas, the winter tempests upon the rock-bound coast of New England, or in the fever-infected ports of our coasts bordering the Gulf of Mexico. From the performance of the arduous and exacting duties of the revenue marine for almost a century to the establishment and development of our great Life-Saving Service, which is without a peer on this globe, in which our officers have taken an active and conspicuous part, the record is unblemished and fairly incomparable.

In conclusion, sir, we beg of you to take into consideration all these matters, and we ask most respectfully but most earnestly that you will lend us your powerful aid in our struggle for that recognition which so long has been withheld; and we entreat you to declare, when you come to give answer to the question we submit, if we are not justly entitled to the practical recognition of our services, the tangible reward we seek.

We have the honor to be, your obedient servants,

"NEW YORK CITY, November 26, 1889.

"Supplementary reasons to the petition to the honorable Secretary of the Treasury for the consolidation of the revenue marine with the regular Navy, under the proposed provisions of House bill —

"Having stated in the body of our petition such reasons as apply to the revenue officers individually, we beg to call your attention to the following, in which are set forth those which affect the policy of the Government:

"First. Because the naval establishment should embrace and consist of all armed vessels of the Government which are officered by duly commissioned officers and manned by duly enlisted men.

"Second. Because the consolidation, in the manner provided and by the terms of this bill, would be strictly in accord with the character of its organization in 1790, the leading features of which were to bestow military rank upon the officers, and to place the vessels, armaments, and discipline upon the same footing as that in vogue in the regular naval establishment.

"Third. Because the revenue marine is essentially military in character—a fact recognized by its employment in all military operations in this country in times of war; its prescribed duties; the giving of military rank to its officers; the arming of its vessels, and the drill and discipline of the crews.

"Fourth. Because the manifest desire of the people that the naval establishment of the United States should be commensurate with the power and dignity of the nation, there is no apparent way in which this establishment can be increased with such little expense and, at the same time, with such great advantage to the public service as by the proposed consolidation.

"Fifth. Because by the provisions of this bill the force now at the command of the Treasury Department for the protection of the revenue interest of this country would be greatly increased, while, at the same time, the control and authority now vested in the honorable Secretary of the Treasury would in no wise be curtailed.

"Sixth. Because Congress, while conferring upon the officers of the revenue marine rank relative with the Navy and while constantly treating the revenue marine as a part of the regular naval establishment of the country, have as constantly refused to the officers of this auxiliary corps the benefits appertaining to the regular Navy.

"Seventh. Because the consolidation of the revenue marine with the regular naval service would in no wise conflict with the principles of economical administration.

"Eighth. Because by the provisions of the proposed bill, naval cadets now relegated to civil life from the Naval Academy, because of no vacancies in the Navy, would have their services accepted, and in consequence make some return to the Government for the expensive education bestowed upon them. At the same time the auxiliary naval school for the instruction of revenue-marine cadets would be abolished, thereby saving to the Government some $30,000 annually.

"Ninth. Because, by the consolidation of the revenue marine with the regular Navy, the naval establishment would be rendered more compact and strong and in every way be able to perform more efficiently the duties now imposed upon each service individually. The value of this unity of action in the event of war would be inestimable.

"Tenth. Because it would give the young officers of the Navy, by virtue of the constant and active service, often hazardous in the extreme, that opportunity to acquire habits of command, readiness of resource, to become accustomed to responsibility and self-reliance while still active and adventurous.

"Eleventh. Because there would be established at once a practical school, in which young officers of the Navy would have afforded them excellent opportunities to learn the pilotage of our coast; boat duty under dangerous and difficult circumstances; handling vessels in crowded water; rescuing vessels ashore; getting lines to and towing vessels in heavy weather; taking care of and managing small vessels in gales along the coast; having, in fact, to perform various duties with small means and appliances; in this and many other ways preparing them for the high commands and responsibilities which await them.

"Twelfth. Because it will bring the officers of the whole naval service more often and more closely in contact with the business communities of the country, and thus enable them to better appreciate and understand the needs of commerce and its requirements, of which they are the guardians.

"Thirteenth. Because, by virtue of the vessels, equipment, material, etc., of the revenue marine being put upon a footing compatible with modern naval requirements, by reason of this consolidation, the country would have in time of war a fleet of fast vessels, well armed, light in draught, highly efficient in speed, powerfully armed, and most eminently capable of performing the various duties of torpedo-boat-catchers, dispatch vessels, scouts for the heavy fleets, keeping open lines of supplies, patrolling coast, rivers, and harbors, forming at all times one of the most powerful adjuncts to the country's naval force.

"Fourteenth. Because the consolidation with the Navy would relieve the Hon. Secretary of the Treasury of detail duties regarding the personnel and material of the service for which he has neither the time nor the technical knowledge to direct in person, and which in consequence demands a separate department for the management instead of coming under one individual naval head.

"Fifteenth. Because, there being at present no provision made for superannuated and disabled revenue-marine officers, the active list is burdened by a large number of old and faithful servants of the people, who, instead of being retired, prevent the promotion of young and active men.

"Sixteenth. Because, while benefiting the interest of the public service, the consolidation would incidentally do justice to a body of public servants whose high standard of efficiency, devotion to duty, professional attainments, and personal character deserve at least a status of equality with brother officers in a contiguous service.

"Seventeenth. Because the consolidation in the manner provided for in the proposed bill, while greatly adding to the strength of the Navy, does not violently disturb existing institutions or methods and will produce no friction in present operations.

"Finally, it has been considered possible that the proposed consolidation would cripple the Treasury Department in the execution of the laws now committed to the revenue marine for enforcement. A careful consideration of the provisions of the proposed measure will dispel this notion and prove its sophistry. A sufficient answer to this suggestion is plainly in the measure itself, but experience has demonstrated that officers of the Army and Navy have always rendered as efficient service while under the orders of civil departments as while serving under their own departments. Officers of the Army are constantly on duty in the Light-House Service, which is a branch of the Treasury; so also are naval officers, from whose number are detailed the inspectors of districts, and who with our Army officers compose the Light-House Board, of which the Secretary of the Treasury is ex officio president. Officers of the Navy and naval seamen perform the work of the Coast Survey under a bureau chief of the civil service, who is under the orders of the Secretary of the Treasury."

Your committee has been presented also with copies or originals of resolutions passed by the following bodies recommending the transfer of the revenue marine to the Navy, which indicates the opinion of those most interested in the conduct and welfare of the revenue-marine service:

The Chamber of Commerce, Norfolk, Va.
The Board of Trade, Fernandina, Fla.
The Boston (Mass.) Executive Business Association.
The Cotton Exchange, Savannah, Ga.
The Board of Trade, Wilmington, Del.
The Board of Trade, Brunswick, Ga.
The Board of Trade, Jacksonville, Fla.
Petition of the mayor, aldermen, councilmen, and business men of New Bedford, Mass.

The Board of Trade, Erie, Pa.
The Board of Trade, Boston, Mass.
The Chamber of Commerce, Rochester, N. Y.
The Cotton and Grain Exchange, New Berne, N. C.
The Board of Trade, Chicago, Ill.
The Board of Trade, Portland, Me.
The Board of Trade, Charleston, S. C.
The Board of Trade, Bath, Me.
The Board of Trade, Baltimore, Md.
The Chamber of Commerce, Mobile, Ala.
The Chamber of Commerce, New Orleans.
The Board of Trade of Beaufort and Port Royal, S. C.
The Board of Trade, New Bedford, Mass.
The Vessel-Owners and Captains' National Association of Boston, Mass.
The Chamber of Commerce, Boston, Mass.
The Board of Visitors to the Naval Academy.
The Board of Trade, Savannah, Ga.
The Merchants' Exchange, Buffalo, N. Y.
The Board of Trade, New London, Conn.

In conclusion your committee will say that the proposed transfer will result in a large saving to the Government, as will be seen by the following estimate

(Appendix A), and they therefore believe that on every ground of efficiency and economy the bill should pass.

APPENDIX A.

Mr. SPINOLA. Mr. Speaker, before the question is taken I ask unanimous consent to offer an amendment which I believe is generally approved.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Amend by adding to section 3 the following: "But the pilots now employed upon any of the vessels transferred to the Navy by this act shall be retained in their present positions at the same pay and emoluments that they now receive, unless removed for cause."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill as amended.

Mr. BLOUNT. I demand a second.

Mr. BLOUNT and Mr. LODGE were appointed to act as tellers.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—ayes 102, noes not counted, and no further count demanded.

The SPEAKER. The bill is now open for debate. The gentleman from Massachusetts has the floor.

Mr. LODGE. I do not care to detain the House with debate unless there is some opposition to the bill.

Mr. BLOUNT. I hope the gentleman will explain the bill. I made objection simply because the bill is a long one and I did not catch its full import from the reading.

Mr. LODGE. Then I will make a brief explanation of the bill. It proposes to transfer the revenue-marine service from the Treasury to the Navy Department. The revenue-marine service is especially a naval service, and has always been kept under military discipline and ready for use in time of war. It is believed that it will be for the advantage of both branches of the Government that this essentially naval service shall be consolidated with the other branches of naval service of the Government. Under the bill the transferred officers are placed in the naval service, but the Revenue Marine School at New Bedford, where officers are now educated for this service, is abolished, and as the transferred officers disappear from the list, either by retirement or by death, their places will be taken by the regular officers of the Navy. This will open up the way to employing fifteen more graduates annually from Annapolis, who now, after the Government has paid for their education, are turned back into private life because there is nothing for them to do. The revenue service will also offer to the naval officers of the United States a constant and exacting sea-service, which is the most desirable practice for naval officers. As gentlemen will see, if they will turn to the last page of the report, this measure is a saving of money to the Government, estimated at $138,000. The bill has the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, from whose Department the service is taken; it has the approval of the Secretary of the Navy, to whose Department the service is transferred. It is approved by the officers of the Navy; it is asked for by the officers of the revenue-marine service. It has been petitioned for by the boards of trade and chambers of commerce in almost every large seaport town, I think, of the United States, a list of the towns being given at the end of the report. It has also been asked for by the Legislatures of Massachusetts and New Jersey, and possibly some other States.

The committee is unanimous in support of the bill, having given it very careful consideration and believing, not only that no interest will be injured, but that the Government service will be greatly improved by the change.

The officers assigned to revenue duty by the Secretary of the Navy under this bill will of course be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury; but the effect of the measure briefly stated will be to consolidate the whole naval service of the United States under one head, to have a body of ships of light draught, but which can be made formidable by speed and equipment as vessels of war, continually on our coast ready for service at a moment's notice. This measure will make the whole naval service of the United States more manageable, more easily handled, while the Treasury Department believes that it will in no way affect the proper collection of the revenue. The committee has heard no objection to the bill in any quarter; but if there are any questions which any member desires to ask it will give me a great deal of pleasure to reply to them.

Mr. BLOUNT. As I have had no opportunity to examine the bill, but gain my information about it only from the reading at the Clerk's desk, I wish to know whether the number of officers in the Navy is to be increased by the number of officers in the marine service.

Mr. LODGE. Yes.

Mr. BLOUNT. Of course that is the immediate effect; but what I wish to know is whether, under the operation of this bill, it is proposed finally to perform the duties of the naval service and the revenue-cutter service with the number of naval officers now provided for by law?

Mr. LODGE. As the gentleman is aware, the revenue-marine service is now supplied from a revenue-marine school at New Bedford, Mass.; and of course there must be officers to perform duty at that school. The school is by this bill abolished; and we take just so many more cadets from Annapolis every year into the naval service. I think about fifteen is the number that will be added this year. Of course as the transferred officers disappear the naval officers will perform entirely the duties of the revenue service.

Mr. BLOUNT. Then will not this follow, that these revenue officers, when they become naval officers, will have the same allowances as to sea pay, shore pay, furlough pay, etc., that are now received by naval officers?

Mr. LODGE. You mean these graduates? Certainly they will.

Mr. BLOUNT. I mean the officers now transferred.

Mr. LODGE. They will have rank in the Navy up to the grade of lieutenant-commander, beyond which they can not be promoted; and the engineers are also limited in respect to promotion. But on their transfer these officers will receive an advance in pay over what they now get. They have now certain relative naval rank. They will, I understand, get the pay of that as actual rank, constituting an advance in pay both in retirement and while on the naval list. The figures are given at the end of the report.

Mr. MILLS. The measure is a good one, and ought to have been adopted some time ago.

Mr. COVERT. Is it not true in point of fact that under existing conditions a certain number of every graduating class at the Naval Academy are relegated for the time being to their homes, the Government having no place for them to do duty?

Mr. LODGE. That is practically true. A certain proportion of the classes graduated at Annapolis every year are sent back to private life after the Government has expended large sums of money on their education, because the Government has no employment for them.

Mr. COVERT. And this bill if passed will utilize such graduates in the revenue service?

Mr. LODGE. The bill will utilize some of those men by substituting them for revenue-marine cadets.

Mr. CANNON. I wish to ask my friend—perhaps I ought to know—whether there is a retired-list now for officers of the revenue marine?

Mr. LODGE. I understand they have retired pay.

Mr. CANNON. How long since?

Mr. LODGE. That I can not say.

Mr. CANNON. And will it be the same under this bill?

Mr. LODGE. No; they will get an advance both of active and retired pay.

Mr. CANNON. What is their retired pay as compared with the retired pay of naval officers?

Mr. LODGE. That I can not say.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The officers of the revenue marine receive no retired pay now.

Mr. LODGE. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] informs me that I am mistaken; that officers of the revenue marine receive now no retired pay.

Mr. CANNON. Is not that "the milk in the cocoanut" after all? Here is this service under the Treasury Department, and for this list of officers there is no retired pay. I recollected in a general way that some years ago there was a bill pending to provide a retired-list for these officers. I did not recollect whether it became a law or not. But now the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] states that these officers have no retired pay. I do not know whether I am ready to vote for this bill or not, without knowing how many of these revenue-marine officers there are and what their present pay is.

Mr. LODGE. The number of officers is given in the report.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Allow me to suggest to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] that this is not a measure which has been formulated, or presented, or promoted solely on behalf of the revenue marine. This proposition originated with the Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Chandler, some years ago, being based on the idea that all branches of the Government service which carry out their functions upon the water, that all the ships, all the ship-building, all the vessel service of the Government, should be under one Department. And as we had more or less naval officers who could not be constantly kept in active service on account of lack of vessels, it was urged that we could utilize that portion of our naval officers not detailed for other active duties in conducting the revenue-marine service, as they are now in the Light-House Service and in the Coast Survey. At first the Treasury Department was inclined to oppose this transfer, but latterly a change has come over the Treasury officials and the bill has come to us with entire unanimity of approval from the Navy and Treasury Departments.

Now, while it is true that this bill makes the revenue-marine officers eligible to the retired-list, to which they were not eligible before, it does not make a permanent addition to the retired-list, because, so soon as these revenue officers have passed away, their places are to be filled by regular officers of the Navy, who would be entitled to the benefits of the retired-list without regard to this transfer.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman has told us that only one-third of the naval officers are engaged at sea. The revenue-marine officers are employed all the time. Then you propose to substitute a class which not only increases the number of employes, but you also substitute for these revenue-marine officers naval officers with that difference. You therefore necessarily increase not only the number of officers—

Mr. BOUTELLE. This bill does not necessarily increase the number of graduates from the Naval Academy.

Mr. BLOUNT. I understand it proposes to utilize officers, when graduated, by appointing them to this service instead of turning them out into civil life.

Mr. BOUTELLE. It will not utilize more unless at the time being all the officers who have been graduated under present conditions from the Naval Academy are actively employed in the naval service. If today we should put this additional duty upon the naval service we could probably utilize quite a proportion of the required officers in the naval service, but we can not so utilize them now, because it is deemed unjust to thrust these men of the revenue marine out of employment after they have spent their lives in that service.

Mr. LODGE. How much time have I left?

The SPEAKER. Seven minutes.

Mr. LODGE. I reserve my time.

Mr. McMILLIN. In the time, then, of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] I wish to inquire whether it will have the effect to increase the expense. Is it not a fact there are now only the officers in the Navy proper who are entitled to go on the retired-list, and under the operations of this bill will not the revenue-marine officers, who are thus transferred to the naval service, be entitled to go upon the retired-list? And will there not be an increase to that extent?

Mr. BOUTELLE. Undoubtedly, up to the time when these transferred officers pass out. But that is only a temporary addition. That is an essential feature of any transfer from one Department to another. These men will be gradually replaced by regular naval officers. In a short time thereafter there will only be the usual number of officers going upon the retired-list.

Mr. McMILLIN. I beg the gentleman's pardon. There will be a greater number going from these two services than now because every one—

Mr. BOUTELLE. That depends on the kind of naval establishment the Government may maintain.

Mr. McMILLIN. It will be in one instance as in the other.

Mr. BOUTELLE. No.

Mr. McMILLIN. Then there is no strengthening the Navy at all.

Mr. BOUTELLE. It will strengthen the Navy by giving naval officers this employment and adding the vessels to the Navy.

Mr. McMILLIN. By giving an additional number of men employment and allowing an additional number of men to go upon the retired-list?

Mr. BOUTELLE. If the revenue marine could be transferred and the Navy Department could furnish the officers to man these vessels, instead of having them detailed to the various employments found necessary, it would utilize just that many more naval officers who are now on other than active duty because of lack of vessels to put them on.

Mr. McMILLIN. But does it not follow as a further consequence that it increases the compensation of some of the officers there now?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I think there is a misapprehension in some quarters in regard to this matter, and that is that the personnel of the Navy can be possibly at any time a specific force in number, as applied to a certain number of vessels. The conditions are such that it would not be possible. The personnel of the Navy can not be maintained at a certain number of officers for a certain number of vessels, because the conditions are constantly changing. We have a naval establishment and certain methods and laws under which we replenish and keep in force or commission a certain complement of officers of certain grades, forming the personnel of a naval establishment, and this must be kept up with permanency, regardless of fluctuations in the number of vessels. Our experience is, up to this time, even with the reduction of the number taken into service from the Naval Academy, that we have a number of officers on the roll who are not on active duty, and have consequently furnished a subject of complaint to certain gentlemen who preach economy, because they were not all the time engaged in actual service on the high seas.

That has been true to a certain extent and it has been unavoidable, because you can not drop out everybody from the naval establishment because at some particular time there may be no fighting for them to do or not enough ships in commission to employ them at sea. We are now building up the Navy and we must have a force of trained officers to call upon at any time for its equipment.

But the point I desire to present is this: At any time during the last fifteen or eighteen years until recently, if the naval establishment could have availed of any such occupation as the Revenue-Marine Service or an extension of the Coast Survey or increase of the Light-House Service, it could have furnished many or all the officers necessary for this purpose by detailing to the vessels officers of the regular naval establishment who were kept on leave or waiting orders or detailed to various kinds of service on shore.

Mr. McMILLIN. The answer of the gentleman from Maine is more a disquisition upon the naval service than an answer to the inquiry. What I want to know is this: Is it not a fact that when these officers are transferred from the revenue-marine to the naval service by this bill, if it becomes a law, the compensation of a number of them is increased?

Mr. BOUTELLE. That is true; but I am informed that the Department estimates—I have not gone over them in detail recently, but did so some time ago—that the estimates show that this measure will ultimately produce a reduction in expenditures to a considerable amount.

Mr. CANNON rose.

Mr. BLOUNT. I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has fifteen minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. BLOUNT. I will yield five minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I must confess that I do not know much about this bill, but I have been learning something while this debate was progressing, and wish to see if I am right.

The revenue marine, as all know, is under the Treasury Department. It forms no part of the Army and no part of the Navy, and, if I am further right about it, I understand that the policy of placing people upon the retired-list when no longer fit for active service runs only to the Army and the Navy.

Now, here is a corps of officers in the revenue-marine service—and, frankly, I can not say how many there are, and the report, I believe, does not disclose it; it may be a hundred or it may be three hundred, and if anybody has the information at hand I hope he will speak up and tell us the number.

Mr. LODGE. It is all given in the report.

Mr. CANNON. I do not find it in the report.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I think the gentleman is incorrect in his criticism of the report. I am not sure, but I think it is in the report, and possibly the trouble may be with the gentleman rather than the report.

Mr. CANNON. I find a list of people here asking to be transferred with—

Mr. LODGE. The gentleman will find it at the end of the report.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I think the difficulty is with the gentleman from Illinois rather than with the report.

Mr. CANNON. Well, that may be so. Frankly, I do not know much about it, but if I am to be called upon to vote I certainly want to know something about the question. I am doing the best job I can under the circumstances. [Laughter.]

Now, I find that in round numbers there are over two hundred of these officers connected with the revenue marine. How many people would be included in the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SPINOLA] I do not know.

Mr. LODGE. That does not change anything.

Mr. CANNON. But, I have an understanding that the revenue-marine officers get very good pay. The revenue-marine officers are not in the Army or in the Navy, and, if I am correctly informed, they have not now and never had under any law the right to be retired.

Mr. LODGE. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. The superannuated officers of the revenue marine are always placed on waiting-orders pay, and the service has had practically, since 1863, a retired-list in that way.

Mr. CANNON. A retired-list without law.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. Are not the most of these officers practically on the retired-list?

Mr. LODGE. The old and superannuated officers are kept on waiting orders, and are substantially a retired-list; that is to say, they receive the retired pay.

Mr. CANNON. Then they are practically retired.

Mr. LODGE. No, not retired, but placed on waiting orders, which is lawful.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, well, as far as that is concerned, it is lawful I suppose for a man to be appointed in one of these Departments and give him leave of absence and let his pay go on.

But these expenditures come before us, and while there may be some of that class of expenditures it does not pervade the whole public service. So that there is for the first time, if I am properly informed and if this bill shall pass, a law that takes these gentlemen in this service and puts them into the Navy, with all that that means.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Will the gentleman allow me a suggestion in that connection.

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. BOUTELLE. It is this: The gentleman states what is true, that it has never been the policy of this Government to grant position on the retired-list except to those who have been in the military or naval service. Now, you are in error in assuming that the officers of the revenue marine are not engaged in military or naval service, because under the laws of the United States, enacted in the early days of the Government, the revenue marine may, at any time, by order of the President of the United States, be called into the military service or into the naval service, and it has been repeatedly done. They are obliged to do that duty when called upon.

Mr. CANNON. Right upon that point; and it is on the statute-books. It is true that the militia may be called into service, multiplied thousands of them; and it is also true that every male citizen between the age of eighteen and forty-five throughout the country, whether he holds a civil position or not, is liable to be called on, first to volunteer and next to be drafted into the public service, if his services are needed. Yet all along the line there have none of them been put on the retired-list except those who rendered services in the military and naval service; and the policy and reason for it was, because you take a class of people and educate them to the military service and thereby cut them off from otherwise obtaining a living, and they become the arm of force of the Government.

Mr. BOUTELLE. These men have been for years in the service.

Mr. CANNON. I submit that list should not be enlarged. Again, this service is purely a civil service, under the Treasury Department. You have that service under the Treasury Department for the Treasury, for the collection of the revenues, and you put it under a different Department, with all of the rules and regulations of the Navy Department.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BOUTELLE. You are mistaken about that. You evidently have not read the bill.

Mr. CANNON. That is what the gentleman said.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, I can not undertake to assert any correct and certain conclusion as to the propriety of this question. It does seem to me that as it relates to an important branch of the service it ought to have fuller consideration. I hope we can have order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House will be in order. Gentlemen will cease conversation.

Mr. BLOUNT. I was saying, Mr. Speaker, that I did not claim to have reached any definite conclusion as to the propriety of this measure from the manner in which it was read from the Clerk's desk. I have not got hold of it until this day, and I have not had an opportunity to examine the report of the committee, which I should have done could I have anticipated this rapid method of disposing of this question.

The distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] finds himself, with his long experience here and his important relation to this House, without any knowledge as to the results of this bill.

The proposition is to transfer the revenue-marine service to the Navy. It provides for the transfer of officers as well as the crews. At once, sir, it gives these officers, as I understand the import of it (though I can not undertake to say absolutely), under this provision, the pay which applies to the Navy; among other things, the sea-pay and the shore-pay of the pay-roll of naval officers.

Why, it not only increases the compensation of these officers, but provides for a reduction of the duties to be imposed on them. I can not see how that would be proper. These officers' time is to be reduced by two-thirds, and incidentally they are to have their pay increased. That is the result of this bill. These revenue officers are employed all the time. The instant you transfer them to the Navy these various provisions as to pay of naval officers are applied to them, and they are only required one-third of the time; and when I say that they are employed only one-third of the time it is simply according to my reading. The services of the officers of the Navy are only used about one-third of the time. Only about one-third of them are required in the Navy, and a portion of them—a few of them—are utilized about the navy-yards, and a portion of them are doing what is called shore duty.

Mr. SKINNER. Will the gentleman allow me a minute. I just want to say that this is exactly what this bill is to do, to employ them the other two-thirds.

Mr. BLOUNT. I did not yield to the gentleman for a statement. I yielded to a question. I want to state this in my own way.

Now, Mr. Chairman, how my friend can make out just exactly what is wanted, I do not know, because he places them in the Navy instantly this bill is passed. Now the gentleman from Massachusetts says that after awhile these men will be taken from the Naval Academy and it will take up the fifteen cadets annually. Since I have been a member of this House the complaint has been that we have too many naval officers already; that the Navy was top-heavy.

Why, sir, so far back as 1856 Congress passed a bill providing for a mode of examination which could reach to a large class of them, and yet since that has been done such has been the influence of these gentlemen that they have been enabled to repeal all legislation and to prevent any reduction of the number of officers of the Navy. Now, they are here to-day, and, as has been often said, in a top-heavy condition, seeking to maintain their status by taking work from the revenue service and giving that work to the Navy. The gentleman from Illinois has rightly said that the collection of revenue is not a part of the duty of a naval officer. There has never been until now a time, so far as I know, that there has been any such proposition as to turn over this civil service to naval officers. I believe in keeping the naval service apart and distinct from the other branches of the service; in keeping the military service—the Army—distinct from all other branches of the service. They should have nothing to do except with the Army and naval duties; and if, sir, we have too many officers of the Army and Navy let us undertake to reduce the number, even if some gentleman does lose his place and some gentleman does lose his salary thereby.

Mr. Speaker, I am not, as I have said, undertaking to ask this House to follow any conclusions which I may have taken growing up in this hurried way; but I do ask that a measure of this kind shall not be passed under a suspension of the rules, but that it may be taken up in its order, with time given to examine the paragraphs and to amend them; that opportunity may be given to gentlemen of this House to get some correct conclusions as to the proper force of the paragraphs of this bill.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Did I understand the gentleman to say that the revenue marine was for the purpose of collecting the revenue?

Mr. BLOUNT. Looking after it and protecting it.

Mr. BOUTELLE. That would be entirely consistent with the naval aspect of the service, would it not?

Mr. BLOUNT. I am much obliged to the gentleman for the correction, but in my judgment that is no part of the duty of a navy.

Mr. BOUTELLE. But it could be made a part of it.

Mr. BLOUNT. Yes, sir, it could; and so could a great many other things be assigned to the Navy, but I do not believe in a navy that is to be used for anything but naval purposes.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Underlying this bill is the idea of consolidating and simplifying the operations of these two marine branches of Government service.

Mr. BLOUNT. I have no doubt that that is my friend's idea, but what I want is for the House to take this bill up regularly and discuss and consider it paragraph by paragraph, so that we may have a full opportunity to examine and weigh its provisions, and not have it hurried through here under twenty minutes of debate.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The gentleman will see by the printed date that the bill has been reported more than a month.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, I accept that suggestion as true, but the fact that this bill has been reported for a month or more does not indicate that the House ought not to have an opportunity to consider it deliberately. I hope it is not to be understood that we are to take up matters which require examination and discussion and pass them through here by a suspension of the rules simply because they have been reported for a month.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I will say to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] in all good faith that to-day for the first time I have heard an objection to this bill. The matter has been discussed very freely through the newspapers of the country—

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, I must object to my friend continually thrusting in his criticisms while I am speaking. The fact that my friend has not heard any objection to this bill until to-day does not signify anything. This House has been engaged in other business. It has not been all the time engaged in examining this bill reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Evidently not. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLOUNT. No, evidently not. Therefore it is simply proper and decorous and prudent to give the House time and opportunity to examine and consider it deliberately.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. I will ask the gentleman from Georgia whether it would not be equally suitable to transfer the duties of the officers of the internal-revenue service to the Army.

Mr. BLOUNT. Just as much so, I suppose.

Mr. LODGE. How much time have I left, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has seven minutes.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I want to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts one or two questions. I will ask him first, is this a unanimous report from the committee?

Mr. LODGE. It is.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Is it concurred in by the Secretary of the Navy?

Mr. LODGE. It is.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. And by the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. LODGE. It is.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. That is all I want to know.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. Speaker, the committee have reported this bill simply because they believe it is good legislation to simplify, consolidate, and improve the service and make a saving to the Government. I know there is a class of minds that see in every measure brought in here some concealed scheme, some attempt to give somebody something, some "nigger in the wood pile," some "milk in the cocoanut," or something else of that kind which indicates great keenness of vision in the person looking. [Laughter.] But, Mr. Speaker, I beg to assure the House that the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of the Treasury have approved this bill, and that the Committee on Naval Affairs have unanimously reported it solely because they believe it will be an economical and advantageous measure to the country. I now yield three minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT].

Mr. HERBERT. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCADOO].

Mr. MCADOO. Mr. Speaker, from careful consideration of this bill, in the committee and out of it, I am satisfied that it is a wise and economical measure. This bill is the happy outcome of an agreement which has put an end to the controversy between the Naval and the Treasury Departments which has raged for years. It has been impossible hitherto to get the revenue-marine service into the Navy because the officers were opposed to coming in; they thought they were better out of it.

The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] says that after these men are transferred they will do only one-third of the duty they do now. Sir, these men who are to be transferred will do exactly the same duty that they do now; they are now and will always be in active duty; and if you transferred this service to-day and every one of the present revenue-marine officers died, you would find employment for the naval officers who the gentleman from Georgia says are now idle, without adding much to your present naval list. This bill is for reform; this bill will strengthen your Navy; this bill is for economy. The abolition of the revenue-marine school and other expenses now had under this bureau will more than pay for the retired-list which may grow up under this bill.

Another point, and I must be very brief, for I have only two minutes. Your Navy to-day, in every sea where it sails, is manned largely by unnaturalized foreigners. Your decks, with a Babel of tongues, are polyglot institutions. The men who man your ships are not one-third of them American born or naturalized American citizens. Take these men from the revenue marine who are real American sailors, long-shoremen, American citizens, and transfer them to your naval service and you create a school for the seamen who will be required to man the ships that you are expending millions to build. Let us have an American navy, manned by American citizens, or tie our ships to the docks.

Mr. BLOUNT. I will ask the gentleman to state what is the amount of the increase that this bill makes at once?

Mr. MCADOO. It will operate like this: A captain in the marine service gets so much; when he is transferred he will take his transfer and become, correlatively, a captain in the Navy, and will get the pay of a navy captain as against the pay of a captain in the revenue-marine service. The difference is not great.

Mr. BLOUNT. Does not the increase amount to $138,000 instantly?

Mr. MCADOO. The increase will not amount to as much as the saving, taking the whole scope of the bill.

Mr. LODGE. The net annual saving the first three years will be $138,830.

Mr. HERBERT. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] is mistaken in saying that only one-third of the officers of the Navy are at work. The number of naval officers on waiting orders, or doing nothing, is always very small. The large majority of the officers are at work either on shore duty in the navy-yards in connection with the building of ships or in some other useful employment on shore or at sea. He is mistaken also in supposing that the number of naval officers has been at any time increased since it was limited, as he suggests. If the gentleman will examine the statutes he will find that in 1882 there was a bill passed limiting the number of naval officers, and from that time down to this nearly every year a number of cadets have been turned loose to go home after graduating in the Naval Academy.

Prior to the passage of the law of 1882, cadets educated at the Naval Academy went directly into the Navy, so that the Navy was gradually increasing. The limit fixed by the law of 1882 has never been transcended from that time to this, and the number of officers will not be increased by the passage of this bill.

Of course there will be an increase in the number of naval officers by the number that is transferred from the revenue-marine service into the Navy. The purpose of the bill is to have all the ships of the United States under the command ultimately of the Navy Department; to have all the vessels built in accordance with lines laid down by that Department, and under its superintendence and control; so that every ship in the service of the United States, afloat anywhere, may be in a condition to be utilized for naval purposes.

Another purpose is by this transfer, and using the naval officers in this service, to acquaint them with the harbors, bays, inlets, etc., of the coast of the United States.

An examination into this matter some years past convinced me that this transfer ought to be made; and in the last speech which I made on the naval appropriation bill during the last Congress I stated that this bill or a bill like this ought to be passed as soon as Congress should again convene. At the present session the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] and myself introduced similar bills on this subject. This is a substitute for the two bills, perfected after a great deal of consideration in the Naval Committee and upon consultation with the Secretary of the Navy and naval officials. It seems to me that it is a wise, a very wise measure.

Mr. MCADOO. Before my friend from Alabama sits down, I want to recall to his mind this point: The revenue marine is now dealing with very delicate international questions in Behring Sea. Does not the gentleman think it would be well that this service which is now dealing with those delicate questions should be under the command of the Navy Department rather than as it is at present?

Mr. HERBERT. That simply illustrates the point I was making, that it is very much better to have the thoroughly educated officers, whom we turn out after training them at great expense at Annapolis, in command of all the vessels of the United States, because, certainly, they are competent to deal with questions of revenue as well as with international questions.

The SPEAKER. The time allowed for debate on this question has expired.

Mr. CANNON. I ask unanimous consent to occupy one minute.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] will proceed.

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. I wish to say but a word in reply to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. I am not aware that any member is legitimately subject to criticism who wants to inquire about and understand a bill which even the gentleman from Massachusetts reports. I say again, without any desire to reflect upon this committee or anybody else, that in my opinion "the milk in the cocoanut" in this legislation is the desire of the revenue-marine officials to get increase of pay and go upon the retired-list the same as naval officers do. This is all I want to say.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill as amended. [The question was put.] In the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds have voted in the affirmative.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. I call for tellers.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for a division.

Tellers were not ordered, only 20 voting therefor.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for a division.

The question being again taken, there were—ayes 114, noes 19.

Mr. HOLMAN. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana makes the point of no quorum.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, only 17 voting in favor thereof.

Mr. HOLMAN. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Indiana make the point that no quorum is present?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir; I made it at the proper time.

The SPEAKER (after counting the House). There are 169 members present; and there being 114 ayes and 19 noes, two-thirds have voted for the motion to suspend the rules, and the bill is passed.

ADDITIONAL OFFICERS, RAILWAY MAIL SERVICE.

The SPEAKER called the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Mr. HOPKINS. On behalf of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, I move that the rules be suspended in order to pass the bill which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4975) providing for the appointment of an assistant general superintendent and a chief clerk, railway mail service.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster-General may appoint and assign to duty one assistant general superintendent, railway mail service, who shall be paid a salary of $3,000 per year; and one chief clerk of railway mail service, to be employed in the Post-Office Department, who shall be paid $2,000 per year; said assistant general superintendent and chief clerk to be also paid their necessary and actual expenses while traveling on the business of the Department. The salaries and expenses of these officers shall be paid out of the appropriation for the transportation of mail on railways.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill just read.

Mr. McMILLIN. Let us have a second.

Mr. HOPKINS. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

Several members objected.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] will take their places as tellers.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 93, noes 27.

Mr. McMILLIN (the tellers retaining their places). No quorum.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman make the point that no quorum is present?

Mr. McMILLIN. I make the point that no quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman make the point that no quorum is present?

Mr. McMILLIN. No quorum has passed between the tellers.

The SPEAKER. That is not the point. Does the gentleman make the point that no quorum is present?

Mr. McMILLIN. I believe that under the rules a quorum is required to take the step now being taken.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman does not make the point that no quorum is present, the Chair will proceed with the public business.

Mr. McMILLIN. I make the point that no quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER. The question is—

Mr. McMILLIN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], I understood, made the point.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Indiana make the point that no quorum is present?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir.

The tellers continued the count, and reported—ayes 103, noes 28.

The SPEAKER. On this question the ayes are 103, the noes 28; and the motion to suspend the rules is seconded. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] is recognized.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, the bill now under consideration is not only recommended by the present administration, but it was also recommended in the precise form now reported to the House by the last administration. The matter has been considered by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, both in subcommittee and in the main committee.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask that we may have order so we may hear what the gentleman from Illinois is saying.

The SPEAKER. The House will come to order. Gentlemen will please take their seats and cease conversation.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, this bill provides for the creation of an assistant general superintendent for the railway mail service and a chief clerk for that bureau. The bill has not only been recommended by the present but by the preceding administrations of the Post-Office Department. The superintendent of the general railway mail service under the last administration repeatedly recommended that an assistant should be provided for the proper administration of that department, and when the present general superintendent came into office, after seeing the necessities of that position and the vast amount of work forced upon that officer, he earnestly recommended that Congress should provide him an assistant.

This matter was also considered by the subcommittee of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads and by the general committee, and is unanimously reported by that committee to this House.

This bureau has increased more than 50 percent during the last ten years. The amount of work imposed on the general superintendent is of such a character that it is impossible for him to perform the duties of his office. There are to-day about 150,000 miles of railway over which this service extends. In order properly to discharge the duties of his office it is necessary he should travel over a large portion of the service represented by the miles of railway I have indicated. Every member of Congress who has to go to that bureau understands it is impossible for him to transact the necessary business in his absence. For a number of years a post-office inspector has been employed to discharge the duties of this office, but under a ruling of the Department in 1884 that officer was dispensed with, and since then the office has been filled by a division superintendent, at a salary of $1,600 per annum. There is no reason, it seems to me, why an assistant superintendent should not be granted.

So far as that portion of the bill is concerned which relates to a chief clerk, it happens this bureau never had a chief clerk, and yet it is one of the largest bureaus in the Department. It is more important than any of the Postmasters-General. It is more important to the public than any of the bureaus in any of the other great Departments of the Government, and yet they have never had a chief clerk for that bureau provided by law. It has been filled by detailing some subordinate officer to the office.

The needs of the Department are such that it has seemed to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads that it would be a matter of economy to the Government and betterment to the service to give the Department the two officers required.

I will reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to occupy much of the time of the House in the discussion of this matter.

One of the provisions of this measure is the appointment of an assistant superintendent of the railway mail service. I wish to call the attention of the House to the fact that there certainly can not be the greatest need for this increase. When the present Administration came into power there had been provision made for the placing of that service under the civil service.

The superintendent, or those over him, since that time, however, have had sufficient opportunity and time to revoke that order and take the railway mail service from under the operation of the civil service, making it a partisan machine for the ousting of those not of the right political complexion and putting in their places those who were. I suppose they have not been greatly crowded with public business or the partisan business would not have occupied so much of the attention of that Department.

Mr. BOUTELLE. You mean turning Democrats out?

Mr. McMILLIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BOUTELLE. How did they get in?

Mr. McMILLIN. How did they get in? They were appointed during four years of a preceding Administration as the service was increased or vacancies occurred or inefficiency was exhibited by incumbents. When the present Administration came in I believe they were nearly half and half, or in that neighborhood, politically. But that was not a satisfactory "divide" to my friend's party. The order placing it under the civil service made by President Cleveland was revoked, all that provision of the platform for the extension of the civil service disregarded, those beautiful platitudes upon which the campaign had been conducted were set aside for the time being, and it was made a partisan political machine. The platitudes were no longer needed and the promises had served their purpose and might be broken. Now, I have presumed that, in view of the fact that they were able to devote so much time to the political side of the question and to the doing of political work, there was not a great amount of public business demanding their attention and no great increase of force required.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. McMILLIN. With pleasure.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I desire to say to my friend, if it will not interrupt him, that in my State—

Mr. McMILLIN. Well, your question. I do not want to yield for a speech.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Very well; I will put it in the form of a question.

Does my friend think this Administration can do better in the way of turning out Democrats than the foregoing Administration did in turning out Republicans, when it turned out every Republican in the railway mail service in the State of Maine, not leaving one single soul?

Mr. McMILLIN. I believe your Administration had failed to put it under the civil-service rules and there was no violation of the civil service or the protestations that had been made in the campaign in that change. And besides that—for I do not wish to evade my friend's question—I will answer him that the present post-office officials are said to have beaten the record, having made twenty odd thousand changes inside of a year. How true that statement is I do not know of course, but it has not been contradicted as far as I have heard, and I suppose is true. Mr. Cleveland greatly improved the service by changes.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Does the gentleman feel quite sure that this record of removals has not been beaten?

Mr. McMILLIN. It has not. That certainly beats the record.

Mr. MILLIKEN. If my friend from Tennessee will allow me, those changes were made by the last Administration notwithstanding that it was par excellence a civil-service Administration—

Mr. McMILLIN. And this is a pretended civil-service Administration. But what has become of the pledge made that fitness alone should be the qualification for office?

Mr. MILLIKEN. And as that was par excellence the civil-service Administration, how can the present Administration beat the record that it made in the State of Maine?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Well, is that a fact?

Mr. McMILLIN. I do not know; but the record of removals by the present Administration has not been surpassed as far as the records show. I will reserve the time.

Mr. BLOUNT r se.

Mr. HOPKINS. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia as much time as he may desire.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, this is a branch of the public service which is non-partisan or should be so regarded, this postal service of the country. If there is a service in which the public will not regulate its loyalty to an Administration on account of being in sympathy with it politically, it is this service. Let there be a miscarriage of the mails in any part of this country under a Democratic Administration or a Republican Administration and instantly an assault is made upon it by the press, without regard to its political views.

I know, sir, that in my own State for many years certain of the newspapers have assailed the various administrations—they assailed the last Administration and they assailed this—on that ground. I know from the State of Kansas, during the last Congress, newspaper articles were read here from Republican papers assailing the Administration then in power for the way the mails were handled in that State, and on examination it was found that the same papers had denounced in more bitter terms the Republican Administration that preceded it. The truth is that the people in this country demand a correct service in the transmission of their mails. The business of the country absolutely requires a correct and speedy transmission of the mails. The transportation of the mails over the various railroads, their quick transportation and correct distribution, is of exceeding great importance to the people of all parts of the country without regard to their political affiliations.

The railway mail service of this country has increased, in the amount of business done, over double in the last decade; and yet your organization to handle that service is still the same. Your railroads have reached out thousands upon thousands of miles; mail matter has multiplied by millions in tons, and yet an organization created at the very birth of this service has been held to handle it simply on account of the rules of this body. Time and again has this proposition been reported here, and because there was no privilege granted to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, no opportunity to give it the ear of the House in order to press these questions to consideration and expose the public needs, this condition of things has been permitted to exist without change.

You may have difficulty in the mails from New York to the great West, from New York down the Atlantic coast, and in various other directions. The division superintendent is unable to make arrangements; public discontent springs up; the official here, your general superintendent of the railway mails, who has charge of the service, finds it absolutely necessary to leave the Department building to undertake negotiations with certain railroad corporations in order to better their service; and while he is gone what becomes of the balance of the service?

It is left to a chief clerk. Who is the chief clerk? Simply a postal clerk. The country is placed in that attitude, that a postal clerk, a man detailed from the postal clerks as the chief clerk, is left in charge of the great railway mail system of this country so far as the transportation of the mails goes. I ask gentleman of this House to say whether this is a right condition.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. I will ask the gentleman from Georgia if this is the present condition of the mail, if this person could not have employed his time to straighten out these mails better than to devote his time to the changes that the gentleman has been speaking of?

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, I do not care here to say anything about these changes. I suppose there have been a good many made, and frankness induces me to say that there were no doubt a number made under the last Administration.

Mr. McMILLIN. I will give the gentleman the facts about that.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not want to be diverted by those facts.

Mr. McMILLIN. I do not want to interrupt the gentleman.

Mr. BLOUNT. I understand that the gentleman does not want to interrupt me. I do not want, because of changes made in some of the employes, to strike a blow at the service which will leave this great service at the mercy of a chief clerk who is recognized only as a postal clerk. I wish to say, sir, that this situation was urged with great vehemence during the last Administration, and the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads in the last House unanimously reported a similar bill to relieve this situation. For one, sir, I am not willing to permit it to remain.

I do not believe that there is any party demand upon me which requires me during an Administration of my own to sustain a service and during an Administration which happens to be adverse politically to deny to it every facility for preserving and perfecting the service that I demanded for my own. Now, sir, so much as to this assistant railway mail superintendent.

Then, sir, comes the chief clerk. They have no chief clerk provided by law. With all this area of railway mail service we have, covering an area equal to the railway mail service of the entire world, with the vast amount of mail matter, letter, newspaper, and parcels-post service, etc., having under his direction thousands of employes, without a chief clerk; refusing a chief clerk to him and giving it to insignificant bureaus throughout the service.

Mr. Speaker, I do trust that this bill will pass, because it is in the interest of the service which is closest to the masses of the people all through this land. I trust that this side of the House will rise to the importance of it. It is not our duty simply to oppose, it is to recognize the great interests of this country, and to meet them as they arise.

I am not here, sir, to defend this Administration in the matter of the appointment of postal clerks. Perhaps they have violated the spirit of the civil-service laws. If it were not for the interests of the service I might indulge in some partisan observations in relation thereto; but I do not wish to divert the mind of this House in that way from a measure which I have for years advocated, and the necessity for which is apparent on the most casual examination.

Before taking my seat I wish to say that this railway mail service simply illustrates the methods we have of bringing to public attention any service. The appropriation at first was small; then you added to it for the transportation of the mail. You kept the organization away in the background. It was diminutive. The service grew, and there has not yet been a response on the part of Congress in the way of increase to make efficient that organization on that account. It is the same way with your money-order system. It was very insignificant in the beginning, and did not attract attention or observation; but it has crept along, has become a public need, and filled a great public want. It is the same with many of the great public services. The tendency of the public mind is so conservative that it somewhat dreads a change; but when that change has gradually grown upon it and its benefit is enjoyed then the importance is recognized. I imagine, sir, that there is no man who would lay his hand on the transmission of mails and change it from the present method of distribution by postal clerks. Sir, I believe it to be our duty to give such officers as are necessary to handle the mails, and I trust that we shall have no difficulty about the question.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I will not permit my friend to go ahead of me in anxiety for a good public service; but, sir, whenever any department of that service or anybody connected with it needs a little exhortation I am ready to give it to him.

Mr. BLOUNT. I am not objecting to that. I simply desired that the House should keep this matter before it. If my friend wants to indulge himself on that ground I have no objection to it.

Mr. McMILLIN. I am glad I do not encounter the objection of the gentleman.

Mr. BLOUNT. I hope my friend will not misrepresent me. Certainly I have been loyal.

Mr. McMILLIN. There is no doubt as to my friend's loyalty. He is ever patriotic in motive and faithful in action, but as the gentleman from Georgia thinks some few facts concerning this partisan work that were taken up instead of the public service seem to have no connection with this bill, I will pause awhile to give some few of the facts to the House. What are they? The civil service law was to go into effect in the railway mail service in March, by order of President Cleveland, who was no pretender. Between that time and the time to which it was postponed by order of President Harrison over two thousand scalps were taken in a partisan way—I do not believe that I have overstated it—more than two thousand Democrats displaced to put in Republicans. The facts were that way.

The force was run in season and out of season for the purpose of taking off Democratic scalps. Now, I am willing to have the victor gather the scalps if he wants to, but let him go like a man, and like a man take them, and like a man hang the scalps to his belt. Let us have no cant and hypocrisy about it. I believe I would not overstate it if I were to say that more than five hundred removals were made within the last seventy-two hours of the period given by the President's order for this work. Why was it that these official patriots, these much-crowded officers, these people who are sitting up nights to advance the public service, did not go along with the duty of the office instead of breaking down the civil-service rules, breaking their own promises made in the campaign? Why was not their time given to work instead of running the politics of the party in the Department? These are important things to be considered when we are asked to make more high-salaried places for more zealous partisans.

These are some of the facts connected with that service. I think it may be reasonably assumed that there was not a very great demand for an additional clerical force for the public business, if so much time could be spared to political work.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SPINOLA].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has seven minutes remaining.

Mr. SPINOLA. Mr. Speaker, I wish to state that so far as a railway service is concerned it has been giving universal satisfaction to the people of the country. Mail matter has been promptly and carefully attended to, and it has been attended to by the men who are in charge of it now, and there has been no reason given here why an increase should be made by the appointment of an assistant superintendent and a permanent clerk or a general clerk, both at largely increased compensation. The men who are discharging that duty to-day are receiving sufficient compensation for their services, and are doing the duty well, and there is no reason on the face of the earth why we should create a bureau of any kind for the purpose of making new offices to take care of the hungry men who are hanging about this Capitol and about the President's Mansion and about the Departments of the Government.

I have seen a great many Administrations come in and go out in my time. For the last fifty years I have been watching them to some extent, and during that long period of time never has there been, to my knowledge, anything to equal the present thirst and hankering for public offices. The corridors of our hotels are filled with hungry cormorants; the President can not take any comfort in the mansion assigned to him by the nation for his residence; the head of no Department can get any peace; and, between daylight and dark, as the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] has intimated, five hundred Democratic scalps have been captured by the enemy. [Laughter.] Now, we want you gentlemen to leave this door wide open, so that when we come in we shall not have the civil-service law staring us in the face; but if you do not I am in favor of wiping them out, civil-service law or no civil-service law [laughter], because that is what the Republicans are doing and have been doing for the past year. Thirty-four thousand removals in the Post-Office Department made in a period of eleven months, and the gentleman who wielded the ax, tired out with his labors, has gone into retirement, fearing that if he should continue longer he might break down his health and perhaps die an imbecile. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. SPINOLA. Presently. Not now. I have only five minutes.

Now, if my friends want to do something handsome for the postal service of the country let them cut down the hours of labor of the men in the railway mail service, and let them do it with the money which they propose to pay to these new officers that they are going to create.

Mr. BLOUNT. How many are there? There are only two new officers proposed, I believe—

Mr. SPINOLA. Two, one at $3,100 a year and the other at I do not know how much—whatever he can grab. [Laughter.] I am not going to investigate that now, because I have not got the time. No one can investigate or discuss a question of this kind fully in seven minutes. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLOUNT. I can give my friend a little information with regard to what he proposes for the letter-carriers. There is a million and a half dollars involved there.

Mr. SPINOLA. I have to run over this subject very rapidly. I wish it understood that I am in favor of reducing the mail-carrier service to eight hours, and also of doing the same for the clerks in the post-offices, who now have to work fifteen to sixteen hours a day. No human being can stand working so many hours a day. Let our friends do something practical for the Post-Office Department, something that will tend to improve the service, and not simply go on creating new offices.

My friend has suggested that there are only two of these new offices proposed now, but if you create these offices, even one or two at a time, they will mount up to a large number at the end of a year. Mr. Speaker, I hope this bill will not pass. It is purely a political scheme, intended to provide for two gentlemen who are now going around with their tongues hanging out of their mouths owing to their thirst for public office. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, I will yield three minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM].

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I have only this to say to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SPINOLA], as well as to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN], that the propositions contained in this proposed legislation have nothing to do with the civil-service law as applied by either Administration or with the question of eight hours' labor, as suggested by the gentleman from New York. This is simply designed to meet the growth and demand of a branch of the Government service that reaches directly to the people and grows more rapidly than that of any other governmental department.

The growth of the railway mail service has been such that it requires to day this additional force, and if the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads should come before the House and ask for $300,000 additional appropriation, as they will, when the facts are submitted as to the growth of that service I do not believe that any gentleman on this floor will object, and I am sure that the gentleman from New York [Mr. SPINOLA] will be the last to file an exception to that proposition. To-day this line of work is done under the general superintendent of the railway mail service by detail. That is contrary to law; it is so recognized, and the Department comes before Congress and simply says, "For orderly procedure of business within the limits of the statute, we ask that we shall have an assistant superintendent and chief clerk."

Mr. Speaker, the compensations we have indicated for these two officers are the same compensations that run through the other bureaus of the Government, and the proposition is simply this: Given an assistant superintendent with a compensation of $3,000 a year and a chief clerk with a compensation of $2,200 a year, then, in lieu of detail from the railway mail service, we shall have duly appointed subordinates hedged and protected by the law. That is all that is contained in this proposed legislation. As I have said, it is simply a response to the demands of the growth of the service, and it is within as economical limits as any man can demand from a committee that carefully scrutinizes every claim for increased expenditure or increased force.

The bill comes here unanimously reported from a committee that has carefully examined all the bearings of the proposition. If we could incorporate it in our general appropriation bill I venture the statement that no gentleman on this floor would object to it.

Mr. HOPKINS. I will supplement the remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] with this single statement: The Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads in the last Congress reported this bill and recommended its passage, and the Democratic Administration urged it as a Democratic measure. It has no politics in it. I now ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

Mr. WASHINGTON. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 31 voting in favor thereof, more than one-fifth of the last vote.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 150, nays 52, not voting 127; as follows:

Mr. CHEADLE with Mr. HOOKER.

Mr. WATSON with Mr. FLOWER.

Mr. THOMAS M. BROWNE with Mr. COTHRAN.

Mr. PAYSON. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the recapitulation of the names.

There was no objection.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I move that the House adjourn.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Pending the motion to adjourn,

Mr. KENNEDY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 296) vesting in the vestry of Christ Church, Washington parish, District of Columbia, all of the right, title, and interest of the United States of America in and to square south of square 1092, in the city of Washington, District aforesaid; and

A bill (S. 1083) to amend the act giving the approval and sanction of Congress to the route and termini of the Anacostia and Potomac River Railroad in the District of Columbia.

The motion of Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas, that the House adjourn, was agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE AND OTHER COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

PROCESS OF WELDING BY ELECTRICITY.

Letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the House of Representatives of the 12th instant, a copy of the report of a board of officers of the Navy on the process of welding by the Thomson Electric Welding Company of Boston, Mass.—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

LIGHT AND FOG-SIGNAL AT SEUL CHOIX POINT, MICHIGAN.

Letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, recommending an additional appropriation for the establishment of a light and fog-signal at Seul Choix Point, Michigan—to the Committee on Appropriations.

RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, the following resolutions were delivered to the Speaker and referred as follows:

By Mr. MUTCHLER:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Public Printer be, and he is hereby, directed, in all work for Congress and for the Departments begun after the passage of this resolution, whenever variant spellings of a word are found in the current dictionaries, to use the simplest form, as recommended by the joint action of the American Philological Association and the Philological Society of England;

to the Committee on Printing.

By Mr. CARLISLE:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, requested to furnish to the House of Representatives a statement showing what, if any, changes have been made by foreign countries since 1879 in the rates of duty imposed upon breadstuffs and provisions imported into such countries from the United States, and what laws, if any, have been enacted or regulations have been made in such countries since said date prohibiting, obstructing, or in any manner interfering with the importation or sale of such articles; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, the following reports were filed, and, with accompanying bills, ordered to be printed, and referred as follows:

Mr. CUTCHEON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported favorably the bill (S. 428) to amend article 103 of the Rules and Articles of War—to the House Calendar.

Mr. BROWNE, of Virginia, from the Committee on Pensions, reported favorably the bill (H. R. 6349) increasing the pension of Mary Snead, a Revolutionary pensioner—to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. SWENEY, from the Committee on Commerce, reported, as a substitute for the bill (H. R. 3837) to declare the Iowa River unnavigable below Wapello, Iowa, a bill (H. R. 8296) to allow the erection of bridges across the Iowa River at and below Wapello; which substitute was read twice, and referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina, from the Committee on Pensions, reported favorably the bill (H. R. 7577) granting a pension to William H. Chapman—to the Committee of the Whole House.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, March 18, 1890.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting estimates of appropriations presented by the commissioners of the District of Columbia for the payment of judgments amounting to $10,250.75, and stating that the commissioners ask that provision be made therefor in the urgent deficiency bill.

The communication was read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The urgent deficiency bill having been reported, what disposition shall be made of this communication, with the accompanying papers?

Mr. HALE. Let it lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered.

Subsequently the communication was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 11th instant, a report from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs relative to the authorizing of any lottery company by the Indian Territorial government of the Creek Nation; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented the petition of J. H. Herman, of Warsaw, N. Y., praying for the passage of the dependent pension bill, with certain amendments; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BERRY presented the petition of F. M. Richter, administrator, of Jacksonport, Ark., praying for the passage of a resolution referring Senate bill 2723, for the relief of the estate of Augustus Heberlein, to the Court of Claims; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. DAVIS presented a petition of citizens of Redwood County, Minnesota, praying that the proposed Indian industrial school may be located at Redwood Falls, Minn.; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. MANDERSON. I present a petition of the General Association of Congregational Churches of Nebraska. This association sets forth the fact that there is an immense amount of immorality and vice in the Army of the United States, and suggests as a remedy for that deplorable condition that there should be an increase in the chaplain force of the Army. The petitioners pray for legislation which shall increase the number of chaplains, so that there will be one at each army post. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MANDERSON presented a resolution adopted by the Board of Trade of Lincoln, Nebr., in favor of the establishment of a navy-yard and the erection of suitable buildings at New Orleans, La.; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. PADDOCK. I present a petition of the Nebraska Congregational Church Association, of Omaha, Nebr., of similar import to the one presented by my colleague, remonstrating against the discontinuance of the office of chaplain in the regular Army of the United States, and praying for an increase in the number of chaplains. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PASCO. I present the petition of J. Ira Gore and 32 others, citizens of Cedar Keys, Fla., including the Board of Trade of that city, praying for a survey of the channel north and west of Cedar Keys known as "Boat," or No. 4, Channel, and an appropriation for its improvement.

I also present a letter of J. O. Andrews, secretary of the Board of Trade of Cedar Keys, calling attention to the value of this channel and the importance of the survey asked for.

I move that the petition and letter be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. STEWART presented 26 petitions, signed by 558 members of the Farmers' Alliance and citizens of Nebraska, praying for the free coinage of silver; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. ALLEN presented a memorial of the Legislature of the State of Washington; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, STATE OF WASHINGTON,
Office of the Secretary of State.

I, Allen Weir, secretary of state of the State of Washington and custodian of the seal of said State, do hereby certify that I have carefully compared the attached instrument of writing, i. e., House Memorial No. 17, for removing obstructions to navigation in the upper Columbia River, with the original now on file in my office, and that the same is a correct transcript therefrom and of the whole of said original.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of said State, at Olympia, this 17th day of February, A. D. 1890.

[SEAL.]

ALLEN WEIR, Secretary of State.

Memorial.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the Legislative Assembly of the State of Washington, respectfully represent that the Columbia River, one of the great water ways of the world, can, with slight expense, be made navigable from Kettle Falls, in Stevens County, State of Washington, to a point in British Columbia more than 230 miles distant; that said river above said falls traverses a country of unexcelled fertility, rich in the precious minerals, in coal, iron, marble, and limestone, and in vast forests of pine, fir, and cedar trees; that Northeastern Washington, in the center of which lies the great and thriving city of Spokane Falls, needs to be brought into connection with said country by means of said river, in order that there may be a mutual interchange of products; that the said Columbia River is navigable in British Columbia to and above the crossing of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and the said country will be greatly benefited by the competition for its freights of that great transcontinental line; that Kettle Falls on said Columbia River is the natural and only point at which it is practicable for lines of railway and other highways to approach said Columbia River from Northeastern Washington, and that a line of railway from said Spokane Falls to said point is now completed to within a few miles of said Kettle Falls, namely, the Spokane and Northern Railroad; that the only obstructions in said river above said Kettle Falls for more than 230 miles are at a place called the Little Dalles, in said Stevens County; that said obstructions are inconsiderable, and can be removed, and the river rendered navigable at all stages of water, at an expenditure of not to exceed $50,000, as is shown by the report of Lieut. Thomas W. Symonds, Engineer Corps, United States Army, made in the year 1881, Senate Executive Document 186; that considerable traffic between Northeastern Washington and said British Columbia has existed and been carried on by means of a line of steam-boats above said Little Dalles, but all freights to and from said boats has been required to be freighted by teams for a long distance over difficult and dangerous roads, and for that reason the said traffic has languished and nearly died away, but that said traffic will be revived and immediately increased with the completion of the line of the said Spokane and Northern Railway to said Kettle Falls and with the removal of the obstructions in the said river at the Little Dalles.

Wherefore your memorialists respectfully pray that an appropriation of a sum not to exceed $50,000 be made by your honorable bodies for the removal of the obstructions in said river at the Little Dalles, said appropriation to be expended under the direction of the General Government as in other similar cases. And as in duty bound your memorialists will ever pray.

Passed the house January 29, 1890.

J. W. FEIGHAN, Speaker.

Passed the senate January 31, 1890.

CHAS. E. LAUGHTON, President.

Mr. SQUIRE presented a memorial of the Legislature of the State of Washington; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, STATE OF WASHINGTON,
Office of the Secretary of State.

I, Allen Weir, secretary of state of the State of Washington and custodian of the seal of said State, do hereby certify that I have carefully compared the attached instrument of writing, i. e., Senate Memorial No. 12, praying for an appropriation of $300,000 for public surveys, with the original now on file in my office, and that the same is a correct transcript therefrom and of the whole of said original.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of said State, at Olympia, this 17th day of February, A. D. 1890.

[SEAL.]

ALLEN WEIR, Secretary of State.

Senate Memorial No. 12.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the Legislature of the State of Washington, would most respectfully represent that—

Whereas under the act of February 22, 1889, to provide for the division of Dakota into two States and to enable the people of North Dakota, South Dakota, Montana, and Washington to form constitutions and State governments, and to be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States, and to make donations of public lands to such States, there was granted to the State of Washington, to be selected under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, from the surveyed, unreserved, and unappropriated public lands of the United States within the limits of said State:

For erecting public buildings at the capital of said State, 32,000 acres;
For State university purposes, 46,000 acres;
For agricultural college, 90,000 acres;
For scientific school, 100,000 acres;
For State normal school, 100,000 acres;
For buildings at State capital, an additional grant of 100,000 acres;
For State charitable, educational, penal, and reformatory institutions, 200,000 acres; and

Whereas there was also granted to the State of Washington, for the support of the common schools, sections numbered 16 and 36 in every township in said State, an estimated amount of 2,500,000 acres, and where such sections, or any parts thereof, have been sold or otherwise disposed of by or under the authority of any act of Congress, other lands equivalent thereto, in legal subdivisions of not less than one quarter-section, and as contiguous as may be to the section in lieu of which the same is taken, may be selected; and

Whereas from the fact of settlements on these lands having been made prior to their survey and withdrawal from entry, and also a large amount of said lands falling in sections 16 and 36 being of a mineral character, for all of which indemnity lands to the amount of at least 1,000,000 acres must be selected, making a total of public lands granted to the State of Washington of 1,668,000 acres, which must be selected from the surveyed, unreserved, and unappropriated public lands of the United States within the limits of said State; and

Whereas the total surveyed area of the State of Washington not otherwise reserved or unappropriated does not exceed at this time 1,000,000 acres, as taken from the reports of the General Land Office to June 30, 1888, and estimating the sale and disposal of lands for the year ending June 30, 1889, as 2,500,000 acres, which is without doubt much less than the actual amount disposed of; of this 1,000,000 acres of surveyed and undisposed lands a large portion is included in the lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, while at least 90 per cent. of the remainder are waste lands and practically worthless; and

Whereas during the years 1886, 1887, and 1888 but 468,438 acres of land were surveyed in the Territory of Washington, while the aggregate area of lands disposed of during the same period was 7,782,609 acres; and

Whereas it appears from the foregoing statements, which have been taken from official reports, that the State of Washington has now due and soon to become due from the public lands of the United States 1,668,000 acres of land which have been granted said State by the Government of the United States; and

Whereas there are no public lands of the United States in the State of Washington at the present time surveyed, unreserved, and unappropriated, from which the said grants to the State of Washington can be selected as required under the act granting said lands; and

Whereas the necessity for the immediate survey of lands from which these grants may be selected has been presented to your honorable bodies by a memorial from the Legislature of the State of Washington;

Now, therefore, we most earnestly and respectfully petition your honorable bodies that you will appropriate for the survey of public lands in the State of Washington the sum of $300,000, to be made immediately available, said sum of money to be expended under the direction of the United States surveyor-general for the State of Washington, in accordance with the laws of the United States relative to the survey of public lands.

And your memorialists will ever pray.

Resolved, That our Senators be instructed and our Representatives requested to prepare and present bills embodying the subject-matter of this memorial and to earnestly urge the passage of the same.

Passed the senate December 18, 1889.

CHAS. E. LAUGHTON, President of the Senate.

Passed the house January 15, 1890.

J. W. FEIGHAN, Speaker of the House.

Mr. HOAR. I present two petitions which are addressed to the Senators from Massachusetts, but are intended as petitions to the Senate. One is the memorial of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society in aid of a certain memorial of the American Forestry Association in regard to the policy of dealing with the forests on the public lands. I move that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. The other is a petition of the Boston Executive Business Men's Association, favoring the enactment of a law which shall provide for the free admission of foreign-built ships to American registry for a period of ten years. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM presented a petition of farmers of Illinois, praying for the passage of Senate bill 1655, authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to loan money to farmers on real-estate security at 2 per cent. per annum; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. PLUMB. I present a memorial of a large number of citizens of the State of Kansas, setting forth the great wrong committed upon the people of the United States by the passage of the bill for the demonetization of silver, and praying for the free coinage of silver. I move its reference to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB presented the petition of citizens of the Indian Territory, asking that the Fort Reno reservation be retained in the Oklahoma bill recently passed by the House of Representatives; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. VEST presented a petition of 41 citizens of Harrison County, Missouri, and a petition of 80 citizens of Harrison County, Missouri, praying for the free coinage of silver; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. VEST. I also present resolutions of the Pork-Packers' Association and Merchants' Exchange of St. Louis, Mo., against the passage of the Edmunds inspection bill. Those resolutions can lie on the table, as the bill has been reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MANDERSON in the chair). The resolutions will lie on the table.

Mr. EDMUNDS. They ought to go to the Committee on Foreign Relations, inasmuch as we are to have a hearing to-morrow of gentlemen concerned.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolutions will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. VEST presented the petition of the Robert Anderson Post, No. 45, Grand Army of the Republic, and the petition of the Earlton Post, No. 206, Department of Kansas, Grand Army of the Republic, praying for the passage of the bill known as the Ingalls service-pension bill; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SHERMAN, from the Committee on Finance, reported an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the bill (S. 1) to declare unlawful trusts and combinations in restraint of trade and production; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, submitted adverse reports thereon, which were agreed to; and the bills were postponed indefinitely:

A bill (S. 789) granting an increase of pension to Henry G. Healy; and

A bill (S. 1048) granting a pension to Lloyd H. Snell.

Mr. FAULKNER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Martin Harrington, late a private in Company E, Tenth Wisconsin Volunteers, praying for an increase of his pension, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

WESLEY MONTGOMERY.

Mr. PADDOCK. I move a reconsideration of the vote by which the bill (S. 2613) for the relief of Wesley Montgomery, reported yesterday from the Committee on Public Lands, was indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska moves that the vote by which the bill was indefinitely postponed be reconsidered. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. PADDOCK. I move that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. ALLEN introduced a bill (S. 3163) to reorganize and establish the customs collection district of Puget Sound; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 4975) providing for the appointment of an assistant general superintendent and a chief clerk, railway mail service; and

A bill (H. R. 6944) to transfer the revenue-marine service from the Treasury Department to the Navy Department.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the concurrent resolution of the Senate requesting the President of the United States to invite the King of the Hawaiian Islands to select delegates to represent that kingdom in the Pan-American Congress, now assembled in the Capital of this Republic.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 296) vesting in the vestry of Christ Church, Washington Parish, District of Columbia, all of the right, title, and interest of the United States of America in and to square south of square 1092, in the city of Washington, District aforesaid; and

A bill (S. 1053) to amend the act giving the approval and sanction of Congress to the route and termini of the Anacostia and Potomac River Railroad in the District of Columbia.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. PLATT, it was Ordered, That the papers on file in the Secretary's Office, in support of a bill to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of George O. Bradley, be withdrawn therefrom and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. If the morning business is ended—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there further morning business? If there be none, that order is closed, and the Calendar, under Rule VIII, is in order.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the urgent deficiency appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7496) to provide for certain of the most urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The remaining amendments reported by the Committee on Appropriations will be considered. The first reserved amendment will be stated.

Mr. HALE. I am not quite ready to go on with those. There are one or two other amendments that will be first considered.

Mr. PADDOCK. If in order I should like to offer an amendment to come in on page 9, after line 3. I send it to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 9, after line 3, insert:

TERRITORIAL GOVERNMENTS.

Industrial Home in Utah Territory: To aid the Industrial Christian Home Association, Utah Territory, in carrying on the work of said association, fiscal year 1890, $2,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. On page 22, section 2, line 13, the word "therefor" should be "thereof." The same change should be made on the top of page 23, line 1; also, on page 23, line 13, and on line 24 of page 23. These amendments can all be adopted together.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The word "therefor" will be changed to "thereof" at the points indicated, if there be no objection.

Mr. HALE. On page 16, at the end of line 20, I move to add "to be paid as the salaries of other United States district judges are paid;" so as to read:

To pay the salaries of the district judges for the States of North Dakota, South Dakota, Montana, and Washington, from the date each qualifies to June 30, 1890, so much therefor as may be necessary, to be paid as the salaries of other United States district judges are paid.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the word "therefor" in this clause be changed to "thereof," if there be no objection?

Mr. HALE. No; let it remain as it is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine thinks the word "therefor" should be retained. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Maine.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. On page 15, after line 11, I move to insert:

Turtle Mountain band of Chippewa Indians: That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to use the sum of $5,000 of the amount appropriated by the act of February 27, 1890, for the relief of the Sioux Indians at Devil's Lake agency, for the purchase of subsistence and clothing and other necessary articles to relieve the wants of the Chippewas of the Turtle Mountain band under the charge of the Devil's Lake agency.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not desire to antagonize the proposition of the committee; however, I wish to say a few words about the Turtle Mountain band of Indians, because the general rule is that whenever any Indians are in distress a certain class of people in the United States take it upon themselves to immediately arraign the Government for its treatment of those Indians. I think that I know as much about the Turtle Mountain band of Indians, perhaps, as anybody here, and I wish to give a brief history to set right the statements made by some of the pulpit orators of the country, and some of the newspaper orators, and some of those who are neither newspaper nor pulpit orators, and whose statements are based entirely upon misrepresentation.

The country where the Turtle Mountain Indians reside was never Chippewa land, they being Chippewa Indians. It was Sioux land, purchased of the Sioux tribes by the United States years ago. Years ago we purchased all of the right and title of the Chippewa Indians as far west as their title ran, no matter what it was. So, whether this was Chippewa or whether it was Sioux land, in either case the Government of the United States has obtained title in the regular methods.

When I became Secretary of the Interior I found that there were in the Turtle Mountain band of Indians less than 300 persons. They were setting up claims then to a section of country now in Northern Dakota aggregating about nine and a half million acres of land. My predecessor, upon a claim of that kind, had withdrawn this land from the operation of the settlement laws, although it had been open for at least ten or fifteen years, I think. Within this area there were at least 10,000 settlers. A large number of acres of land had been entered at the land office, and if not patented had at least proceeded in the regular way to a patent.

My attention having been called to the hardship of suspending the entries and the operations of the law upon so extensive a section of country, I began a personal investigation of a subject that I may say without egotism I was somewhat familiar with, and that was the habitat of the North American Indian. It had been to me a subject of interest, and I had been a student to some extent at least for a great many years of the location and the original and present habitat of the North American Indian. I did not need any investigation to show upon the first blush that this was not Chippewa land and never had been Chippewa land. That I might not be mistaken in the matter I called to my assistance ex-Governor and ex-Senator Ramsey, of the State of Minnesota, who knew probably as much about this question as any man living. I examined carefully the treaties made by Calhoun in early days and the history and location of the Indians as laid down both by Calhoun and by Catlett and by others who have been familiar with Indian subjects. Everything proved to me that my first idea was correct, that this was not Chippewa land and never had been, but was Sioux land, and that these Indians had no claim whatever to it.

I then began an investigation of the history of the Turtle Mountain Indians, and I wish to repeat now that this band then numbered, all told, after a careful census, less than 300, and they were composed mostly of half-breeds, who were not entitled under the law to be treated as Indians. I gave then to these Indians, as I could as Secretary of the Interior, permission to locate upon certain unoccupied land, saying to them that they could take 160 acres of land for the head of every family, and then they could have some pasture land and meadow land, and the rest of the country must be open to settlement. So I revoked what my predecessor had called a temporary order, or had the President done it, and opened this country to settlement, and gave to these less than 300 Indians, out of which to select 160 acres for each family, more than two townships in Northern Dakota, and the next time the Indian appropriation bill was passed Congress appropriated for their relief $1,000 for the purchase of seeds.

On investigating the history of these Indians I found that they belonged to the original Chippewa tribe. They had never been recognized in Indian circles as a tribe, but simply as a band. They had gone to the White Earth reservation after our treaty with the Chippewas. They had participated in all the benefits and all the privileges of the Chippewa treaty. They had received their wagons, they had received their supplies, and then they had taken themselves over into Manitoba and had not been residents of the United States for ten consecutive years. They had then recently returned, probably in 1879 or 1880, or perhaps even later, to the United States with their carts and ponies, and, in their poverty, had set up a claim to this country.

I see by the public press that the Turtle Mountain band of Indians numbers 1,930. I wish to state that they are not American Indians, and the Government of the United States is under the same obligation, and only the same obligation, that it is to any suffering creatures to protect and take care of them. They are the Manitoba Chippewas, of which there are now at least 5,000 more still left in Manitoba, or in that section of the continent; and if you open the door and make a general distribution of funds there, you will invite all the Chippewas of that country to the United States.

I have no objection, if these people are in a suffering condition, that the Government should relieve them, but the Government should take some steps to put them back where they belong on the other side of the Canadian border. It is not fair for any man to stand up here and talk about the Government of the United States having stolen 11,000,000 acres of land from these Indians, for every foot of the land they owned the Government has bought and paid for, and given them a magnificent reservation covered with immense pine forests worth millions and millions of dollars. The American portion of the Chippewas are entitled to go to White Earth, if they see fit, and partake of the hospitality and generosity of this Government as any other Chippewas.

I want to put on record a denial of the statement, whether it comes from the pulpit or anywhere else, that these Indians have been improperly treated by the Government of the United States. Everything that they owned we have paid for and we are supporting them now in their idleness, in their vice, not where they ought to be supported, but where they selected that they would go, and the 300 that are there, or less than 300, who claim to be treated as American Indians, are now swelled to 1,930, it is said, by the advent of British Indians, for whose support we are not liable either in equity or in law.

That is all I think I care to say upon this subject, except to add that the statement to which I have referred is in keeping with the general run of the statements made in this country with reference to Indians. The more ignorant a man may be of the location of Indians and the history connected with them, the better he thinks he is qualified to stand before the American public and denounce the Government and people of the United States for their treatment of the Indians.

Sir, I say that in the history of the treatment of aborigines anywhere in the world there has been no such lavish expenditure of money by any nation as we have expended for the Indians. I am not criticising it; but it is not true that we have treated them improperly. It is true we have said they should not occupy great, extensive territories of the United States to the exclusion of civilization and white men. That is true; that is inevitable; that is in the nature of things; that is in harmony with the Divine purpose, if Divine purposes govern these matters at all; it is in harmony with the idea that the world was made, not for savages, but for civilized men. If these Indians go upon the White Earth reservation now, they will be amongst the rich men of this country, and not the poor men, with an abundance of provisions and with a great property there in that pine and in that land which will make them infinitely better off than the settlers of any new section of this country.

Mr. COCKRELL. Where are they now?

Mr. TELLER. They are in Northern Dakota, in what is called Willow County. They would be better off, if they would go to the White Earth reservation and claim what they are entitled to claim there, than the people who have settled the prairies of my State; better off than the people who have settled the prairies of Kansas and Nebraska; better off than the people who have made civilization all over the West; better off than the people who are raising farm productions in the valleys of the Platte and the Arkansas.

While I do not object to the appropriation, I object to the statement which has been made so generally that these people are there suffering because of the misconduct of the Government of the United States, for it is absolutely untrue, and the man who makes it, whether he makes it from the pulpit or whether he makes it through the press, is either ignorant of the facts or is a willful falsifier.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, I am interested with the Senator from Maine in the passage of this bill, but I desire to say a few words in this connection.

I am very glad the Senator from Colorado has corrected the misstatements made in the public press relative to these Indians. I do not desire to enter into any discussion with him about the general treatment of the Indians of this country. If any comment should be made on what the Senator has said about the magnificent generosity which has characterized the treatment of the Indians of this country, it is simply this. It is not in the amount which has been bestowed upon the Indians in this country, but it is in the misapplication of it. At some points much more than ought to be done has been done, and at other points a great deal less than ought to be done has been done; but that is in the past and can not be cured now.

What the Senator says about these Turtle Mountain Indians is true, but in connection with this appropriation I want to say that the Catholic association or organization here, at the head of which is Father Stephan, of whom we have had some knowledge here in the Senate, has already contributed $4,000 to the relief of these Indians and has $5,000 more ready to send to their relief. The Government of the United States by telegraph, as the newspapers say, applied $2,000 of another appropriation for that purpose. That would make $11,000, and about $5,000 or $6,000 is proposed to be appropriated by this amendment. This amendment was new to me when it was offered. That would make some fifteen or sixteen thousand dollars.

It is true that the only Indians that are entitled to this relief are three or four hundred, of whom the Senator from Colorado has spoken. If this $15,000 is sent there every five out of six dollars of it will be consumed by Indians either invited there over the border from the British Dominions or coming over of their own accord and sharing with these poor Indians the beneficence of this Government. Such has been the rule for five or six years; such has been the rule ever since the United States undertook to provide for these Indians at these two townships. The appropriation of $10,000 at one time and $5,000 at another from year to year has been consumed, three-quarters or five-sixths of it, by Indians from over the border. Everything that they raise there, whenever it comes to be in condition to be consumed, is shared by Indians who, either by invitation or otherwise, come from over the border.

These 300 or 400 Indians are not to blame because they do not go down to White Earth. Two religious denominations have possession of them. They have each of them their chaplain there, and each of them is contributing to these Indians, and they persuade them to stay there. If it were not for those religious denominations who go to them where they are and who desire to keep them there rather than let them mingle with and be absorbed in the Chippewa Indians of White Earth, who prefer to keep them there and depend upon public charity and these appropriations for helping them out every winter in their distress, this difficulty would not continue.

There is pending before the Committee on Indian Affairs at this moment a provision for a commission to make one more effort to persuade these Indians to go down to White Earth, where they could be taken care of and where they could properly support themselves. The difficulty is that the United States, whenever they have undertaken, or very often when they have undertaken, these negotiations, have begun at the wrong end and spoiled the whole thing. They were met at their last negotiation with the statement by the Indians that the White Earth people did not want them there and would not treat them kindly. So the commission invited two families to go down to White Earth and try the experiment, and then the commission retired and never went near White Earth to see that they were properly treated. The families went down there, and no White Earth Indian paid any attention to them or took the least care of them, and they were obliged for the whole summer to live in tepees on the bank of the river and take care of themselves as best they could. When cold weather came they went back to the Turtle Mountain band and said it was just as they supposed: the White Earth Indians did not want them there and the Government did not want them there, and the negotiation fell through.

The last time the Committee on Indian Affairs were at White Earth they sought to make provision for these Indians. I have not a doubt that, if a commission could be appointed to go and make them homes and show them that they could be taken care of, they could be induced, notwithstanding the adverse advice of those two religious organizations that have possession of them, to go down there. There are thirty-six townships in the center of Minnesota devoted to the White Earth reservation, and as fine a tract of land as any in that beautiful State. There have been gathered around there in the last two years a good many of the Chippewa Indians from various reservations, and to the extent of the capacity of those thirty-six townships they ought to be appropriated to the little bands of Indians scattered about that country.

In connection with what the Senator from Colorado says about the magnificence of the generosity of the Government, or rather the misapplication of that generosity, I want to remark that I never could understand for a long time why a treaty granting 49,000 square miles of territory was made and that land set apart to the Sioux Indians until I ascertained that during the negotiations, which have resulted in opening 11,000,000 acres of that territory to settlement, it appeared that the design of that treaty and the setting apart of 49,000 square miles was to gather not only the Sioux upon it, but the Chippewas and the Crows upon it. That was the reason why that vast territory was set apart for Indians. That was the plan of the commission.

The treaty was ratified, and then Congress changed their policy and set the Crows out somewhere else and left the Chippewas where they are, and the 49,000 square miles were left for 28,000 Sioux Indians. That is the generosity, the magnificent generosity, to which the Senator from Colorado alludes, but misapplied.

I have some doubt whether it is wise to appropriate five or six thousand dollars more to these Indians, besides the private contributions I have alluded to and the $2,000 already sent by telegraph, because the money is used to feed Indians that belong in British America. If somebody would go up there and see that it was used to feed only the 300 that it belongs to and take care of them and send the others home, I should like to see it done.

Mr. WASHBURN. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts, in view of the statements made by the Senator from Colorado, as well as by the Senator from Massachusetts, if he thinks this appropriation ought to be made, whether it will not be bad in its effects in the future?

Mr. DAWES. I would not want to oppose it, because the Indians are suffering and it is better to feed more than to let the few starve. I want to say that two years ago private contributions from all over the country were sent there. There were sent from my own town five or six barrels of clothing. Some of them never went beyond Fargo and some of them went to the depot nearest to the Turtle Mountain Indians, and some of them got there and were over the line on the backs of the Canadian Indians in a week's time. I felt then as if it was a misapplication, and if it were not for the personal suffering of these Indians I would not contribute a dollar until they were induced to go down to White Earth reservation, where they ought to be.

Mr. WASHBURN. Mr. President, it seems to me that if this appropriation is made now we shall be just as likely to be called on a year from now or some time in the future to make another. The sooner the policy of the Government is determined that no contributions are to be made for the support of these Indians the sooner they will go to the White Earth reservation, where they really belong.

Mr. DAWES. I do not think they can be starved into going to the White Earth reservation. One reason, in addition to what I said, why they cling to these two townships, one-half of them under water and in a most bleak and sterile portion of the northern border of Dakota, is the idea that they have a claim upon the Government for the 11,000,000 acres of land, and they are told by the people who desire to keep them where they are that if they leave that country they never will get anything for that claim. They have been told over and over again by those who think they are their friends that that is a matter so shadowy and so groundless that there is no possible hope for them to ever get any money, and I agree with the Senator that the trouble is as he has stated; but the difficulty is that we have got three hundred Indians there who are starving to death, and are starving to death because other Indians eat them out of house and home, and they must be kept where they are.

I shall not oppose the appropriation, but I think a great deal of it will go where it ought not to go.

Mr. HALE. I will only say, in reply to the statements which have been made, that I have an estimate for the amendment with a letter from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, strongly urging the passage of the amendment, and upon the strength of that I offered it here, not from the Committee on Appropriations. If the Senator from Colorado or the Senator from Massachusetts or the Committee on Indian Affairs oppose the amendment and think it is not wise and right—

Mr. TELLER. Let me say that I did not oppose the amendment. I have no doubt the statement is true that these Indians are in a bad condition, and, while there is neither a legal nor a moral obligation upon us to take care of them, nobody else, perhaps, will, and I think it is well enough to let this appropriation go to take care of them; but I think the Department charged with these things should see to it that these foreign Indians are returned to their own country and that no more are allowed to come here. They are not immigrants. They can be sent back; they ought to be sent back. We shall have the whole Chippewa tribe from that section of British America here, because whatever people may say about the treatment of Canadian Indians our treatment of the Indians on this side of the line has been and is now infinitely better than it has been on the other side of the line, except with reference to a few Indians who went from New York to Canada in the early days after the Revolutionary war. With few exceptions, we have been much more liberal to the Indians than the Canadians or the British. I think it is important that we should help these poor people during the winter, and then see that they are returned and that no more are allowed to come here.

Mr. DAWES. I do not wish to oppose the amendment. It is better that three dollars should be wasted where one is properly expended than that these poor Indians should starve to death. I got up more to supplement the statement of the Senator from Colorado and to set right the Government of the United States against what has appeared in the newspapers, and I should have called the attention of the Senate to the subject if the Senator from Colorado had not done so.

Mr. REAGAN. I have not anything to say as to the moral liability of the United States for this particular appropriation, but the vicious and unwise policy which the Government has pursued with reference to the Indians generally does impose a moral obligation on us to change the policy. This is one of the results of the Government undertaking to feed a people who ought to earn their own living like other people. I know the policy is fixed and I do not expect to reverse it, but I wish to stand as a continual protest against the policy of feeding the Indians and keeping them in idleness and doing nothing; and it is worse than that, because when we begin to feed and clothe them they cease to make efforts for themselves, they become helpless dependents and a burden upon the country.

It is that to which I refer when I speak of the unwisdom of the policy of the Government in undertaking to feed and clothe these people. There is no race of men, I do not care who they are, whether Anglo-Saxons, Indians, Mongolian, or negroes, who, if the Government will undertake to care for them, will not lose their energy and become dependents, and soon, like these Indians, helpless dependents.

I make no objection to the appropriation, but I do protest that the policy which has led to such results is all wrong.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. HALE. I ask to have printed in the RECORD a communication from the Department.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The communication will be so printed if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

The communication referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, Washington, March 15, 1890.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith copy of a communication of 15th instant from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and accompanying draught of "A bill for the relief of the Indians on the Turtle Mountain reservation, North Dakota."

This bill authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to use an amount not exceeding $5,000 of the $25,000 appropriated by act of Congress approved February 27, 1890, for the relief of the Sioux Indians at Devil's Lake agency, North Dakota, for the purchase of subsistence, clothing, and other necessary articles to relieve the wants of the Chippewas of the Turtle Mountain band, under the charge of the Devil's Lake agency.

The Commissioner's letter shows the necessity for this action, and the matter is respectfully referred for the favorable consideration of the committee.

Very respectfully,

JOHN W. NOBLE, Secretary.

The CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS,
United States Senate.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, D. C., March 15, 1890.

SIR: Senator CASEY, of North Dakota, in conversation with me yesterday, made certain statements in regard to the destitute condition of the Chippewa Indians on the Turtle Mountain reservation, and, at his verbal request, I handed him a draught of a joint resolution, to be passed by Congress, authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to use, from the $25,000 appropriated by Congress by act of February 27, 1890, for the relief of the Sioux of Devil's Lake agency, the sum of $5,000 in the purchase of subsistence and other necessary articles.

I am now in receipt of the inclosed letter from Senator PIERCE, of North Dakota, and in compliance with his request I have the honor to state that the farmer in charge of the Turtle Mountain reservation reports that "everybody has been down sick with the prevailing disease, 'la grippe,' and there are a considerable number suffering from the effects yet." * * * Owing to sickness I have been obliged to be liberal with rations; last ration day I issued to the mixed-bloods only 1 pound of pork to the individual, and shall have to hold on to the balance of it to meet extreme cases. There is no sale of wood, nor any other opportunity to earn anything, and the absolutely poor are so numerous that the present supply will not last long. We need an addition to our provisions, and that speedily."

Senator CASEY reported to me verbally that he is informed by the Bishop of Dakota that there is great suffering and in some cases actual starvation among the Turtle Mountain Indians, and I submit herewith draught of a bill authorizing you to use the sum of $5,000 from the $25,000 appropriated for the Sioux of Devil's Lake, to purchase subsistence, etc., for the Turtle Mountain Indians, who are under the charge of the agent of the Devil's Lake agency, and respectfully ask that you transmit the same to the Senate Committee on Appropriations with your favorable recommendation.

Very respectfully,

T. J. MORGAN, Commissioner.

The HON. SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

A bill for the relief of the Indians on the Turtle Mountain reservation, North Dakota.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, directed and authorized to use from the $25,000 appropriated by act of Congress, approved February 7, 1890, for the relief of the Sioux Indians at Devil's Lake agency, North Dakota, an amount not exceeding $5,000 for the purchase of subsistence and clothing and other necessary articles, to relieve the wants of the Chippewas of the Turtle Mountain band, under the charge of the Devil's Lake agency.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I offer an amendment to come in on page 6, after line 3, which is recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury, and has been submitted to the Committee on Appropriations, and I understand meets the approval of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 6, after line 3, it is proposed to insert:

For rental of a suitable building to meet the requirements of the office of the Sixth Auditor of the Treasury for the remainder of the current fiscal year, $500.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALDRICH. I offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to amend the bill on page 19, after the word "dollars," in line 11—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to which the Senator from Rhode Island proposes to offer his amendment is one of the reserved amendments and has not been acted upon in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HALE. I reserved it on account of the absence of the Senator from Rhode Island.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question then will be on the amendment from Rhode Island from Rhode Island to the amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the amendment be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The original amendment will be read and the amendment to the amendment.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations, to insert, on page 19, under "Department of Agriculture:"

Experimental stations: To provide for the expenses of agricultural experiment stations organized during the current fiscal year in the Territories of Arizona, New Mexico, and Utah under the act of March 2, 1887, $30,000.

The amendment of Mr. ALDRICH was read, to amend by adding:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the State of Rhode Island the sum which said State would have been entitled to receive under the provisions of an act entitled "An act making an appropriation to carry into effect the provisions of an act approved March 2, 1887," etc., approved February 1, 1888, if an agricultural experiment station in said State had been organized within the time required by said act approved March 2, 1887, $15,000.

Mr. ALLISON. Will not the adoption of this amendment make necessary a similar provision to place all the States on the same basis that did not immediately organize these stations?

Mr. ALDRICH. All the States except the State of Rhode Island have received their appropriation.

Mr. ALLISON. For that particular year?

Mr. ALDRICH. For that particular year.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well, then I have no objection to the Senator's proposition.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment as amended.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I offer the following amendment, to come in at the end of line 22, on page 8:

For printing and publishing lists of overdue taxes on real estate with notice of sale in pamphlet form, and for printing and publishing other notices and advertisements required in and about the sale of such real estate for such overdue taxes, to be reimbursed by the charge of 20 cents for each lot so advertised, $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

That is in consequence of the passage of House bill 5825, "prescribing the times for sales and for notices of sales of property in the District of Columbia for overdue taxes." This bill has been passed by both Houses, is in the hands of the President, and has probably been approved by this time, and it requires—

That the commissioners of the District of Columbia shall prepare a list of all taxes on real property in said District, subject to taxation, on which said taxes are levied and in arrears on the 1st day of July, 1889, and each and every year thereafter, including all taxes due to the late corporations of Washington City, Georgetown, the levy court of the county of Washington, and the District of Columbia. And said commissioners shall publish the same with a notice of sale in a pamphlet of which not less than 3,000 copies shall be printed for distribution to tax-payers applying therefor. Said commissioners shall, on the first Tuesday in April, 1890, and the third Tuesday in March of each year thereafter, give notice which shall contain the name of each and every person in which each piece of property is assessed, together with the amount of assessment upon each piece, by advertising twice a week for three successive weeks in the regular issue of two or more daily newspapers published in said District that said pamphlet has been printed, and that a copy thereof will be delivered to any taxpayer applying therefor at the office of the said commissioners.

And then it says:

The expenses of said advertising and the printing of said pamphlet shall be paid by a charge of 20 cents for each lot or piece of property advertised.

The commissioners of the District of Columbia have sent this letter:

OFFICE OF COLLECTOR OF TAXES, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, March 17, 1890.

GENTLEMEN: I respectfully call your attention to the fact that to carry into effect the provisions of H. R. bill No. 5825 (passed and now before the President), which prescribes the times for sales and notices of sales of property in the District of Columbia for overdue taxes, it will be necessary to have an appropriation of $5,000, as the fund available for advertising is nearly exhausted. The repayment of the cost of advertising is provided for in the bill by a charge of 20 cents on each lot.

This amount, covered by an urgent deficiency bill so as to be immediately available, I hope will receive your indorsement.

Very respectfully,

E. G. DAVIS,

Collector of Taxes, District of Columbia.

To the Honorable Commissioners District of Columbia.

It is necessary that an appropriation of $5,000 be made to enable the commissioners to execute the law.

L. G. HINE, Acting President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. Was the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations, on page 19, disposed of?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As amended it was agreed to. That was the first one on that page.

Mr. HALE. How as to the one below that?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment has not yet been acted upon.

Mr. HALE. I hope it may be acted upon now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 1, on page 19, after line 11, the Committee on Appropriations propose to insert:

Location for artesian wells: To authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to make such preliminary investigation of an engineering and other character as will, so far as practicable, determine the proper location for artesian wells for irrigation purposes within the area west of the ninety-seventh meridian and east of the foot-hills of the Rocky Mountains, $20,000; and a report of all operations and expenditures hereunder shall be made to Congress immediately after July 1, 1890.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. I desire to call the attention of the Senator in charge of this bill to the appropriations for deficiencies for the Fish Commission. It appears that an appropriation was made by the bill in the House of Representatives of $10,000, another of $3,000, and another of $10,000. The Senate Committee on Appropriations proposes to increase the first appropriation from $10,000 to $20,000. It seems to me that the Committee on Appropriations will do well to make some special inquiry into these expenditures for the Fish Commission which are being increased year after year with very great rapidity.

I find in Senate Miscellaneous Document No. 88, Fiftieth Congress, first session, that the total appropriations for the Fish Commission from its establishment in 1871 down to 1887 were $2,476,351.31. The appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, as appears by House Miscellaneous Document No. 11 of the present Congress, were $223,880.68. The appropriation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, was $257,580, and the appropriation for the present fiscal year to end on the 30th of June, 1890, is $296,900. In addition to this appropriation of $296,900, the Senate is now called upon to appropriate, if it adopts the amendment proposed by the Senate Committee on Appropriations, $33,000, making a total appropriation for the present fiscal year of $329,900.

I respectfully ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations whether he does not think it practicable for the Fish Commissioner to so make his estimates for the expenses of a fiscal year that it will not be necessary to have these large deficiency appropriations. I call attention to the fact that this appropriation has crept up from $223,880.68 to a proposed appropriation of $329,900.

I do not undertake to say at this time that these large appropriations for fish culture are not wise or expedient; I am not now prepared to make an attack upon the system; but I do say that this Fish Commission ought to be placed under some one of the existing Departments of the Government. I introduced a bill placing it under the Navy Department, which has been reported upon adversely by the Committee on Fisheries, and so it stands that we have this anomaly in connection with this Fish Commission, that it is not connected with any one of the Departments of the Government; it is not subordinate to any Cabinet minister, as it ought to be. The mistake in allowing this commission to go on from year to year under a commissioner responsible to no Department, and under no effective supervision consequently of the President of the United States, is made evident by the fact that these appropriations are increasing day by day and month by month and year by year until now, after an annual appropriation of $296,900, we are asked to vote a deficiency of $33,000, carrying the total to $329,900.

I do not believe that there is any reason for these deficiencies. I believe that the Fish Commissioner, whether under a Department or not under a Department, should be able to make his estimates and keep the expenditures within those estimates, and that these expenditures should not creep up on us year by year, as it appears that they have been doing. I now ask the Senator in charge of this bill why the Senate Committee on Appropriations have increased the House appropriations from $10,000 to $20,000 and also whether that increase is all the expected deficiency of the Fish Commission during the current fiscal year.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the startling proposition that the Senator from New Hampshire has just made, that there ought not to be a deficiency in any Department of the Government, has been made for many years.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator will allow me to suggest that I said there ought not to be a deficiency in the Fish Commission. The Senator has expanded that statement into one that there ought not to be any deficiency in any of the Departments of the Government. I beg the Senator's pardon, I did not so state.

Mr. HALE. Perhaps the Senator did not go so far, but taking charge and overhauling, as he has done, all branches of the Government service, if he has not made that statement about the others, I have no doubt he will make it before he gets through. The Committee on Appropriations in this matter had a letter of the Commissioner stating the condition of the business of his bureau, and the committee were aware of the fact that the business of the Fish Commission had largely increased for years by reason of the public demands upon it. It began in a very small way, with a very small appropriation, but the public interest became so aroused on the Atlantic coast and on the Pacific coast and in the interior and on all the streams and lakes of the country, that if any service became popular in the country it was the fish service, and from year to year Congress was called upon and willingly made increased appropriations and is making them all the time. While it may not please the Senator from New Hampshire, I have no doubt we shall be called upon to make additional appropriations next year, more than we are making now, because in all parts of the country the people of the different States are asking for the establishment of fish stations for propagating and hatching and distributing fish, and the work has grown upon the Commissioner all the time. The present Commissioner is not responsible for it any more than his predecessor.

I ask to have put into the RECORD a letter from the Commissioner of Fisheries, showing something of this situation, which was used in the House of Representatives when the bill was before that body for consideration. That is the basis on which the committee acted in increasing this appropriation from $10,000 to $20,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The communication will be printed in the RECORD, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

The communication is as follows:

UNITED STATES COMMISSION OF FISH AND FISHERIES,
Washington, D. C., February 13, 1890.

DEAR SIR: I beg to ask the early consideration by your committee of the communication herewith inclosed relating to anticipated deficiencies in the appropriations for the use of the Fish Commission for the current and past fiscal years.

I desire to call special attention to that part of the communication respecting the deficiencies on account of propagation, etc., and for the maintenance of vessels for the current fiscal year, for the reasons set forth in said communication, and to ask that provision be made for these deficiencies in the urgent deficiency bill. Unless this is done it will be necessary for me to curtail the work of the commission in all directions, and to suspend it at those stations which have been created by Congress from time to time, but for the maintenance of which no provision has been made.

The following table, giving the annual appropriations made for the propagation and distribution of food-fishes, the number of stations operated, and the results obtained for each year from 1886 to 1889, will indicate to your committee that with a decreased appropriation we have increased the total production of eggs, fry, and yearling fish from 173,000,000 in 1886 to 333,000,000 in 1889. Our results for the current year will show further improvement provided we receive the deficiencies asked for in time to prevent the necessity of curtailing work.

Comparing the appropriations of 1886 with those of the present fiscal year, it will be seen that the appropriations for 1886 are $17,000 in excess of those made for the present fiscal year, and that we are asking for an increase of only $3,000 over that year to provide for the maintenance of eight additional stations and a twofold increase of production.

Very respectfully,

M. McDONALD, Commissioner.

Hon. D. B. HENDERSON,

Chairman Subcommittee on Deficiencies,
House of Representatives.

Exhibit of the annual appropriations made for the propagation and distribution of food-fishes, the number of stations operated, the product distributed, and the miles traveled, from the fiscal year 1886 to the fiscal year 1889, inclusive.

1886.		1887.		1888.		1889.
Appropriated.....	$187,000.00	Appropriated.....	$175,000.00	Appropriated.....	$175,000.00	Appropriated.....	$161,180.00
Stations.....	13	Stations.....	13	Stations.....	15	Stations.....	19
Fish.....	173,655,083	Fish.....	210,625,413	Fish.....	238,986,117	Fish.....	333,462,689
Mileage.....	63,218	Mileage.....	87,395	Mileage.....	89,631	Mileage.....	116,012

In comparing the appropriations, work done, etc., of the year 1886 with the year 1889 we find: In appropriations, a decrease of $25,820, or 13.8 per cent.; in stations, an increase of 6, or 46 per cent.; in fish, an increase of 159,796,606, or 92 per cent.; in mileage, an increase of 53,794, or 85 per cent.; stations in 1889, 21, an increase of 8, or 61.5 per cent.

Should the deficiency of $20,000 asked for the current fiscal year be given, the increase over 1886 will be but $3,000, or but 1.6 per cent. The tables showing the amount of work done so far this year can not at present be brought together, but indications go to show that at the end of this year the increase of work over the past year, 1889, will be a very large percentage, the increase in one branch of the work alone, that of the distribution of fishes indigenous to the Mississippi Valley, being 30.5 per cent., or 100,591 fish in 1889, to 131,311 fish in 1890.

Mr. SPOONER. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to offer the following amendment to the bill, to come in after line 22, on page 4:

For court-house and post-office at Manchester, N. H.: For finishing the second story of the building in white oak instead of the white pine called for by the contract under which the building is being finished, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, on the proposition to appropriate additional funds for the Fish Commission I want to remark that while I agree with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] that this bureau or this division of the Government ought to be under some Secretary who is immediately responsible to the President, and who meets with him about his Cabinet table, I beg to remind that Senator that by means of this Fish Commission we are getting a great many valuable things we should not otherwise get. In the first place, we are getting a navy and we are getting coast fortifications and we are getting gradually and certainly a control over the railroads of the country. A large amount of railroad transportation is an adjunct of the operations of the Fish Commission, which is giving the Government gradual control over the question of railroad facilities in this country, which will undoubtedly result finally in putting the whole system under the control of this Commissioner.

We have got perhaps the most effective navy the Government owns to-day under the control of this commission, and the beginning of a system of coast defenses. The Fish Commission has an island somewhere near the mouth of the Delaware River, or it may be that it is in the Susquehanna, which it has proceeded to fortify, and which I understand to-day is absolutely impregnable, and not only impregnable, but it is a position from which the employés of that department can sail forth with great effect upon the works and the operations of neighboring nations. I therefore want to say that I regard this Fish Commission as not only proper to be maintained as a department, but I think in due time the United States will be practically a running mate of the Fish Commission. I do not want this operation to be in any wise impaired by failure to grant appropriations, and I hope no such misfortune is likely to occur, because whatever the Fish Commission asks for is granted ad m. con.

Mr. President, while this is all true, it is well to bear in mind that a Department or bureau of this Government which is entirely outside of the personal purview of the President, and which is carrying on that kind of business which is equivalent to a free lunch, requires some sort of supervision. Its present field is to distribute fish all over the country, trout, shad, salmon, and so on, but it costs money; and the fact being that this very lively function on the part of the Government is one of those things which are somewhat deceptive, if not insinuating, I think the proposition of the Senator from New Hampshire that it should be transferred into the Navy Department or some other Department is decidedly a good point. However, I would suggest to the Senator, notwithstanding the offensive and defensive functions of this great bureau of the Government, that it should go to the Department of Agriculture, and thereby be brought within the natural purview of that great Department which to-day is concerned with those matters which relate to the food-supply, its creation, and its distribution.

I hope that the Senator from New Hampshire or some other Senator will, in pursuance of that idea, introduce a bill for that purpose, and let us bring this great department of the Government under such control and at the same time in such relations with the Government proper as we may from time to time not only get the full benefit of it, but may have such control of it as will make it answer the purpose we have in view, whether offensive or defensive, or whether it relates to the food supply of the country or not.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, the appropriations for the Fish Commission have been made for a great number of years. The Senator from New Hampshire has summed them up in some documents which are before him showing an aggregate appropriation of over $2,000,000.

I remember that this system of appropriations began about the year 1870, when Professor Baird, an eminent scientist of this country, began the work. We have progressed from year to year, increasing these appropriations. These increases have been nominally made on motion of the Committees on Appropriations of the two Houses, but they have really been made by the action of the two Houses independently. We have considered it important enough during the past few years to have a committee of this body called the Committee on Fisheries, giving it all the responsibility of initiating and inaugurating legislation as respects this great interest, and from time to time this committee has made reports to the body respecting expenditures for this commission.

Under ordinary circumstances I should agree with the Senator from New Hampshire that it is better to have this commission under the control and direction of the Navy Department, especially so after listening to the statement of my friend from Kansas, who seems to understand that this Fish Commission has a sort of little navy of its own. That might be wise if the operations of the Fish Commission were confined to the propagation and distribution of sea food-fishes; but it so happens that the operations of this commission not only extend to what may be done on the sea, but in the rivers adjacent to the sea, and we have taken into account under this commission the highest altitude, I believe, in this country. There is a hatchery, if I am not mistaken, in the Rocky Mountains or the mountains of Colorado, requiring a considerable expenditure, the object being to prepare for use such fishes as can be propagated in that high altitude. We have another in a little lower altitude, in the valley of the Neosho. I do not know precisely where that is, but I think it is in the State of Missouri.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is in Newton County, in the southwest corner of the State.

Mr. PLUMB. Will the Senator allow me a word?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes.

Mr. PLUMB. I am not surprised that the Senator does not know that Neosho is in the State of Missouri, which may be a very insignificant member of the confederacy, but which is represented on this floor and is somewhat known geographically.

Mr. ALLISON. I am obliged to the Senator for the information respecting the exact location of the Neosho. I only wanted to call the attention of my colleague upon the Committee on Appropriations to the fact that this river does not flow immediately into the sea.

But what I desired especially to say is this: We all know and understand how the Fish Commission has grown. There is a hatchery in Michigan. It must have been put there for some purpose; surely the chairman of the Committee on Fisheries must know that the hatchery in Michigan is of value. I know personally it is of value, because within two months I have received more than a dozen letters from the State in which I live, where we have small streams and some beautiful creeks and lovely lakes, asking me to intercede with this Fish Commission in order that our rivers and streams might be populated with fish.

So, Mr. President, I think this expenditure is growing; I undertake to say that there is no appropriation in this bill or in any other bill that brings greater results to the people of this country compared with the amount of expenditure than does this Fish Commission through its present organization and methods. I think there is great force in what is said by the Senators here, that the commission might well be put under some Department of the Government, but I want to vindicate, so far as I can vindicate, these expenditures on behalf of the Fish Commission.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are there further amendments to the bill in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. ALLISON. I move, on page 14, after line 13, under the head of "Public-land service," to insert:

Depredations on public timber: To meet the expenses of protecting timber on the public lands, $17,963.15.

Protecting public lands: For the protection of public lands from illegal and fraudulent entry or appropriation, $19,500.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The two clauses will be treated as one amendment, if there be no objection.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I desire to repeat, in view of the remarks of the Senator from Iowa, what I said in the beginning, that I do not charge that these large expenditures for the Fish Commission, mounting up, between 1871 and 1887, to two million and a half of dollars, and an annual expense of about a quarter of a million dollars, are not advisable. I am not here now to make an attack upon the Fish Commission as not a useful institution, and upon its expenditures as not wise, although I have some doubts upon that subject. I have some doubts whether we are now receiving, or whether we are likely to receive, sufficient equivalent in the production of fishes for food consumption which would justify this expenditure yearly of a quarter of a million of dollars. I withhold my opinion upon that subject and confine myself to the proposition which I made before: First, that some way should be devised by which to avoid these deficiency appropriations; and, secondly, to this end, and for making more efficient the Fish Commission, and for giving the estimates which shall come from it greater confidence of Congress, that the commission itself should be placed under some one of the existing Departments of the Government.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from New Hampshire will allow me to say that the way in which these deficiencies occur is that after the original appropriation has been made new stations have been established; as, for example, one in Ohio and this one at Neosho, not quite completed.

Mr. COCKRELL. And one in Colorado.

Mr. ALLISON. It is necessary that this money should be expended or carrying on the operations at these new stations.

Mr. CHANDLER. Is the Senator able to state that these deficiencies were made necessary by authority given from Congress to establish these stations?

Mr. ALLISON. I can say substantially that is true, that if these new stations had not been established in the last two or three years or five years the expenditures for the Fish Commission would not have grown to their present amount.

Mr. CHANDLER. It certainly seems to me that a business of this kind, involving an expenditure of a quarter of a million of dollars a year, can be brought year by year within the scope of estimates to be made by the head of the commission and passed upon by Congress without there being any necessity of increasing 10 or 15 or 20 per cent. those appropriations to make up a deficiency.

It is true that there are many fish stations, and they are pretty well distributed throughout the country in order to insure a wide and general distribution of the benefits of the Fish Commission and to insure for the Fish Commission the proper support. It is true, as is said by the Senator from Iowa, that the attempt of the commission to propagate food-fishes is not confined to the coast alone, but it has been extended into the interior of the country, up the mountain sides, even as high as Leadville, Colo.

I also find that there are in Maine salmon stations the cost of which is $3,049.20 a year; at Wood's Holl, Mass., a station costing $11,442.95 a year; at Gloucester, Mass., one costing $4,681.27 a year; at Cold Spring Harbor, N. Y., one costing $894.79 a year; at Wytheville, Va., one costing $3,987.79 a year; at Northville, Mich., one costing $7,392.64 a year; at Alpena, Mich., one costing $3,400.76 a year; at Detroit River, Michigan, one costing $2,052.42 a year; at Sandusky, Ohio, one costing $2,829.32 a year; at Duluth, Minn., one costing $5,674.07 a year; at Bayard, Cal., one costing $8,562.14 a year; at Clackamas, Oregon, one costing $5,176.70 a year; at Havre de Grace, Md., one costing $5,926.42 a year; at Fort Washington, Md., one costing $4,183.09 a year; fish ponds, Monument lot, Washington, D. C., $5,780.76 a year; St. Jerome's, Md., $356.08; Central Station, Washington, D. C., $13,793.51; Neosho, Mo., $69.82 for fish and $6,600 for the establishment of a building, and a survey has been made at Leadville, Colo., costing $90.

Mr. President, I repeat that this extension of the work of the Fish Commission, not only along the whole coast line of the United States, but throughout our great Central States and up into the interior, even to the heights of Colorado, has made this business, which has grown from a small appropriation until now we are asked to appropriate $329,000 for this one year, so great that it is advisable that the commission should have a little additional looking after, and if the Senator from Michigan [Mr. STOCKBRIDGE], who is the chairman of the Committee on Fisheries, is not willing to have the Fish Commission put under the Navy Department, and if, because of the statement of the Senator from Iowa that fish culture has extended into the interior of the country, it ought not to go to the Navy Department, then let us put it under the Agricultural Department. It certainly must be that there is some existing Department of this Government that is fit and appropriate to supervise this work. If there is not such a Department of the Government, then I think that is a pretty good argument why we ought to discontinue the business.

Mr. PADDOCK. I should like to inquire of the Senator what good reason he is able to give for the transfer of this bureau, which has charge of all matters pertaining to the propagation of food-fishes and their distribution generally throughout the entire country, to the Navy Department. It seems to me if there is any subject which, because it relates to a food-product, is considered a proper one to locate in the Department of Agriculture this is the one. This subject, which is in charge of this bureau, relates exclusively to a food-product recognized universally as one of the most important and useful known to mankind, and it belongs properly in the Agricultural Department.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I gave up long ago the idea of putting this Fish Commission under the Navy Department. I gave it up as soon as I found that these fish stations were distributed all over the country and that, as the Senator from Iowa says, there is a constantly growing demand for them. I found that it would be necessary to go away from the Navy Department in order to get supervision of this Fish Commission by some Cabinet minister, and therefore I say to the Senator from Nebraska that my present mind is to have the Fish Commission put under the Secretary of Agriculture. I hope that will suit the Senator. The subject has nothing to do with land, but it has something to do with water; and inasmuch as we are to irrigate the whole interior of the country by some process and by the use of the public money, I think that the Fish Commission, the object of which is to produce an additional food-supply for this nation, may well be placed under the new Department, the Department of Agriculture, and I hope that at some time we shall see the Department of Agriculture changed into a department of industries, and then it will gather up these loose ends of subjects which are being cared for and fostered by the United States and we shall have them properly supervised.

But I say to the Senate that it is necessary, in my judgment, to put the Fish Commission under some Department of the Government where it can have supervision, in order to prevent an explosion of some kind which, in my judgment, will come sooner or later under the present management of the Fish Commission by a Fish Commission responsible to nobody but the two Houses of Congress and their committees.

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator yield to a question?

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly.

Mr. COCKRELL. I agree fully with the Senator in regard to the impropriety of these deficiencies, but sometimes when Congress enacts a law after the passage of a regular appropriation bill and that law is to be carried out, an additional appropriation becomes necessary to carry it out. I have no recollection of any Department of the Government being so administered under either political party as to have no deficiencies, and I would be very glad indeed if the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire would inform the Senate if when he was at the head of the Navy Department he was ever able to prevent the calling upon Congress for deficiencies.

Mr. CHANDLER. There is a very great difference between a Department of this Government that expends from fifteen to twenty millions of dollars for the current service of the Government calling for a deficiency and the requirement of a deficiency by a Fish Commissioner, whose duties are limited and whose expenditures can be accurately estimated and need not be great. Now, I call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to the fact that we have in this case $257,000 of original appropriation, requiring, according to the report of the Senate committee, an increase for this year of $33,000. I ask the Senator if he knows of any Department of the Government that has been administered so badly that it has been necessary for it to call in the way of deficiencies for 15 per cent. of its regular annual appropriations? I undertake to say that all the deficiencies that are called for by any of the Departments of the Government have been trivial and insignificant proportionally compared with this $33,000 now called for by the Fish Commissioner.

It is impossible for the Secretary of the Navy to determine exactly how much money will be expended for provisions and clothing for the Navy during the year. It is impossible to tell how much it will be necessary to expend for coal for the Navy during a given year.

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator allow me? The number of men in the Navy, the number of officers in the Navy, the number of vessels in the Navy, everything about it is permanent, and the law prescribes exactly what the salaries are and makes specific appropriations of the various amounts needed for the respective items; and the distinguished Secretary had four years to experiment upon this question, and he ought to have been able, considering the tutelage that he is giving this Fish Commission, to bring down the Navy expenditures to within a very few thousand dollars instead of having to call for thousands of dollars of deficiencies every year. I think it would have been a great deal easier to reduce the expenditures of the Navy, all fixed by law, to a given amount and to estimate accurately for them, than it has been to estimate accurately for these appropriations for the Fish Commission when Congress has been year by year at every session increasing its operations, opening new fields for the expenditure of money without making an appropriation.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not agree with the Senator from Missouri, and I am surprised to find him engaged in the rôle of defending deficiencies. The Secretary of the Navy can tell how much is wanted for the pay of the Navy with substantial accuracy, but the Secretary of the Navy can not tell how much coal it will be necessary to burn; the Secretary of the Navy can not tell how much clothing will be consumed; the Secretary of the Navy can not tell how much provisions will be consumed by the officers and men of the Navy in the drawing of rations; but the Fish Commissioner can tell, I undertake to say, within less than 15 per cent. the expenditures that will be necessary to conduct a business the whole of which costs a quarter of a million dollars a year.

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE. Mr. President, this discussion has taken rather a wide range as to whether the Fish Commission should be placed under the Navy or Agricultural Department. As to which Department of the Government it should be placed under I am not prepared to answer. I did not know that that question would come up for discussion to-day. There is upon the Calendar a bill upon that subject which will be reached, and I have no doubt that when we come to consider it we shall arrive at a wise determination upon it.

In regard to the appropriations, the statements already made by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] cover the whole ground. The simple fact is that since the estimates were made up there have been several new fish stations established, requiring largely increased expenses, and hence the necessity for these additional appropriations. I doubt whether any other quarter of a million dollars expended by the Government is expended to better purposes than the appropriations for fisheries.

I think it is pretty well established that an acre of water will produce as much valuable food supply as any acre of land in the country. Under the operations of the commission here this interest has been developed to a very great extent and various States have embarked in the enterprise and are themselves spending large amounts of money for this purpose.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] read of a number of fish-hatcheries along the Great Lakes, at Detroit, at Northville, Mich., and also one on Lake Erie. Now, there are millions and millions of fish produced from these hatcheries in the Great Lakes, and but for that work of the propagation of fish in the lakes the supply of whitefish would be almost exhausted at this time.

I do not wish to prolong this debate, but at some future time I may have some remarks to make upon this general subject. It is generally known, however, to those who are well informed that the supply of shad would undoubtedly have been nearly extinct but for the operations of the Fish Commission.

As to placing the commission under some Department of the Government, I am glad that in the light of the short discussion here the Senator from New Hampshire has changed his mind as to which Department it had better be under. He did not seem to be aware that the operations of the Fish Commission extended to the interior of the country.

Mr. CHANDLER. I knew they went to Michigan.

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE. You did?

Mr. CHANDLER. Yes, I knew that.

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE. You did not know that they went into Colorado.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have learned of that.

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE. The Senator can learn a great deal about the matter if he will investigate it.

I hope there will be no opposition to this amendment, for I think it is an entirely proper and wise use of the public money.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] concerning depredations upon the public lands.

Mr. HAMPTON. I wanted to say something in regard to the Fish Commission. Is that subject under consideration now?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is, but another amendment is pending.

Mr. HAMPTON. Mr. President, I think the suggestion made to place this Fish Commission under some Department is advisable and worthy of very serious consideration, but I would suggest that it is rather premature to do it now, as the proper committee have had no opportunity of considering that matter. I do not propose to discuss that, but I wish to call the attention of the Senate to a fact that bears upon this question very directly.

At the last session it was proposed by our Fisheries Committee to buy the island at Havre de Grace. The Government had expended $85,000 in improvements upon that place. It was offered at a reasonable price, and our committee recommended the purchase and, if I remember aright, the Senate passed it. The Fish Commissioner took the ground that all the accretions to the island belonged to the General Government and moved off some buildings. That involved a suit in the Maryland courts, and they have now decided unanimously that all the accretions on the land, the whole of the island, belong to Major Ferguson, and it will be necessary either to buy that island now or lose all the money that has been expended by the Government. I hope that we shall have a meeting of our committee very soon and consider the question of this transfer of this commission to some Department. I think it is very well that it should be put under some responsible head. I hope we shall also consider the question of this hatchery at Havre de Grace.

Mr. HALE. Is there an amendment before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment before the Senate is that proposed by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON]. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 14, after line 13, add:

Depredations on public timber: To meet the expenses of protecting timber on public lands, $17,962.15.

Protecting public lands: For the protection of public lands from illegal and fraudulent entry or appropriation, $19,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole be concurred in in the Senate?

The amendments were concurred in.

Mr. PLUMB. I will, I think, venture to offer an amendment to an amendment of the committee, which has been agreed to, if that be in order, to increase the amount on page 4, line 21, $552. I have information from the Treasury Department which has not been verified as yet that the amount should be $552 greater, making the sum appropriated for the court-house and post-office building at Leavenworth, Kans., $7,946.62. I have information from the Treasury Department that the amount ought to be greater. It has not been verified, but still I am under the impression that that is the case, and it can be arranged in conference if this be a mistake.

Mr. HALE. I have no objection to the amendment, under that statement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment moved by the Senator from Kansas will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the amendment of the committee on page 4, line 21, it is proposed to strike out "394" before the word "dollars" and to insert "946;" so as to read: "$7,946.62."

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

TRANSFER OF REVENUE-MARINE.

The bill (H. R. 6944) to transfer the revenue-marine service from the Treasury Department to the Navy Department was read twice by its title.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask that that bill be printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT CEDAR RAPIDS, IOWA.

Mr. ALLISON. Last evening I asked the Senate to consider the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill relating to the public building at Cedar Rapids. A member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds is of the opinion that the phraseology in one of the amendments does not make very good sense in connection with the text of the bill. Therefore, I ask unanimous consent that the question on amendments to that bill may be reconsidered in order that I may move the reference of the bill, with the House amendments, to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The vote by which the Senate agreed to the amendments made in the House of Representatives will be reconsidered if there be no objection, and the bill, with the amendments of the House, will be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

TERRITORY OF OKLAHOMA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 895) to provide a temporary government for the Territory of Oklahoma.

Mr. PLATT. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House of Representatives and request a conference upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. PLATT, Mr. CULLOM, and Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, were appointed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 6419) to amend section 2294 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and for other purposes; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 346) to extend "An act to grant the right of way to the Kansas City and Pacific Railroad Company through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes."

AID TO COMMON SCHOOLS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived the Senate resumes the consideration of the unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 185) to aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools.

[Mr. HAWLEY addressed the Senate. His speech is withheld for revision. See Appendix.]

Mr. MOODY. Mr. President, I send to the Secretary's desk some amendments to this bill that I propose to offer, and I ask to have them read.

Mr. BLAIR. Will the Senator from South Dakota allow me to read a telegram I have just received?

Mr. MOODY. Certainly.

Mr. BLAIR. I have just received this telegram, dated Cincinnati, Ohio, to-day, March 18, addressed to myself:

CINCINNATI, OHIO, March 18, 1890.

Senator HENRY W. BLAIR, 201 East Capitol Street:

The National Camp of the United States Patriotic Order, Sons of America, representing two hundred and seventy-five thousand native-born sons of America throughout thirty-eight States and Territories, urgently request the adoption of the Blair educational bill, believing that free education is the basis of national and individual liberty and prosperity, and that the provisions of that bill are wise and judicious and for the best interests of all classes and sections.

GEORGE P. SMITH,

National President.

FRANK W. HENDLEY,

National Secretary, 255 West Eighth Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments submitted by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. MOODY] will be read.

The SECRETARY. The first amendment is in line 7 of section 14 of the amended bill, after the word "authorize," to insert "and required," and in line 11 of the same section to insert "including the illiterates of the Indian population resident therein," and at the close of the same section to add:

And in any subsequent apportionment in said States and Territories, or in any of said Territories after they shall be admitted as States, the illiterate Indians living therein shall be included in the basis of such apportionment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the Senator to give notice of these amendments.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. President, I have submitted for the consideration of the Senate the amendments just read, and I move their adoption. I am not satisfied that the provisions of the bill would not include precisely what is intended to be included by these amendments, but out of abundance of caution I have offered them, and I trust they will be considered as pertinent and will not be objected to, and if they are adopted the fourteenth section will then read as follows:

SEC. 14. That the apportionment of the money that shall be appropriated in pursuance of this act for the purpose of education in the Territories shall be upon the basis of the illiteracy therein, as provided in section 16; but in determining the number of illiterates therein, and also in the States of South Dakota, North Dakota, Montana, and Washington, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and required to receive and consider, in addition to the census returns of 1880, any evidence that may be submitted to him showing the number of illiterates in any such Territories and the States named in this section, including the illiterates of the Indian population resident therein, and shall determine therefrom, before the first distribution is made, the amount to which such Territory or State is entitled; and in any subsequent apportionment in said States and Territories, or in any of said Territories after they shall be admitted as States, the illiterate Indians living therein shall be included in the basis of such apportionment.

Mr. President, I do not intend to enter into an extended discussion of the merits of this bill. From my standpoint, representing as I do in part the State of South Dakota, I am in favor of its provisions, and if a just basis of distribution is made for my own State by the adoption of these amendments I shall gladly and cheerfully support this measure by my vote.

In the State of South Dakota, among its resident population, there are about thirty thousand Indians. A comparatively small portion of the children of these Indians are being educated by the Government. But notwithstanding the efforts of the Government in that behalf the State will of necessity be called upon to provide means of education immediately for a large number of the children of these Indians within the school age. Many of them have already taken lands in severalty, and under the provisions of the law of Congress they will become citizens of the State. They are surrounded by white settlers and are intermingled among them. Others are taking lands in severalty upon the ceded portion, and we confidently look forward to a time in the near future when these Indians will necessarily be absorbed into the population of the State and become subject to its laws and be entitled to the rights and privileges of citizens of the State, including a right to the beneficial provisions which the State has already made for the free education of all of its children.

Many of these Indians are by the allotment system removed from their agencies and agency schools, their settlements are mingled among those of the whites, and their children must necessarily attend the same schools as the white children and be provided with the means of education by the taxes which are common to all the whites who own property.

The frontier has disappeared. No longer can the Indian problem be solved by following the example of the older States in pushing the Indian out beyond their borders. We must take care of, protect, educate, civilize, and enlighten the Indians who are among us, in order that they may become useful citizens, homogeneous in everything with the white population. Their education both in books and in industrial pursuits must necessarily be pushed with all the vigor and means at the State's command. In these things it is but right and just that the aid of the General Government, whose wards these Indians have been and whose wards many of them will continue for years to be, should be granted. It is but just that in the distribution of the funds provided in this beneficial measure provision should be made for the new States and the Territories of means to educate the illiterates among that class of people as well as among all other classes.

Therefore I have taken the liberty to offer these amendments, and I am much gratified to be able to say that they meet with the hearty concurrence of the distinguished promoter of this bill, whose kindly nature and great heart does not stop at the line of any class of inhabitants in this country. All, white, black, Indian, Mongolian, and mixed, are alike the subject of his kindly and benevolent consideration.

If the merely selfish, moneyed interests of our people were to govern me in the vote which it becomes my duty to declare upon the Blair educational bill, such selfish interest would dictate that I vote against it.

The ratio of illiteracy in the whole Territory of Dakota by the census of 1880, as given in the tables submitted by the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire, is 2.29 per cent., the fourth in the lowest ratio of all the States and Territories of the United States. By the census of 1885, so far as it can be ascertained and calculated from the defective returns and the want of returns in some of the States, our statisticians and educators have confidently asserted that South Dakota was the lowest in the ratio of illiteracy of any State or Territory, and the probabilities are, judging from the population that has been since the census of 1880 constantly coming into South Dakota, from their character, their intelligence, and their liberal support of public schools, by the census which is now pending the ratio of illiteracy among the white and black population will be shown to be as low, if not the lowest, of any State in the entire United States. The brightest and the best of the young men and the young women from the Eastern, Middle, and Western States have populated South Dakota. Universities, colleges, commercial schools, the higher public and private schools, have sent their graduates there to build a splendid empire.

The natural sequence has been, and without having the statistics at hand to present I confidently assert, that more money has been expended during the past ten years in South Dakota for the public schools therein, in the employment of teachers, in the erection of school-houses and the purchasing of apparatus, than in any other State in proportion to the population. The logical result is, then, that by a distribution of governmental funds for educational purposes, appropriated upon the basis of illiteracy, the people of my State would pay, in paying their proportion of the sum apportioned to all the States, more than it would receive, because the ratio of illiteracy is so vastly below the average.

Now, in a measure, because we have not been an organized community a sufficient length of time to have accumulated any great wealth, and therefore having no surplus, I must pay some heed to the economic character of the question involved by including that class of our population whom, as I have said, we must necessarily absorb and educate. I hope somewhat by this to correct the financial injury that might apparently result to us from the adoption of the bill without such provision. Nevertheless, Mr. President, I must say that from many of the excellent classes of our people, from those who are giving attention to benevolent and christian work, from those who are enthusiasts, and rightly so, in their desire for education throughout the country of those who are ignorant, and because of their ignorance depressed and degraded, I have been daily in receipt of appeals to support this measure. Not one citizen of South Dakota, so far as I know, has remonstrated against my support of it, though my intention to do so has therein been publicly proclaimed.

It is not for me, especially at this late day in the discussion, to enter into any argument in behalf either of the principle upon which this measure is based or upon the provisions therein which aim at carrying into operation that principle.

No one in these modern days, in this now universally free country, will need to have it spoken in his ear that the education of all our people is not only a blessing but a prime necessity. Conceded is it everywhere, by every one whose mind is not wandering in some crooked path, that if private effort can not or will not procure this education of the people, then the government of the States or the General Government, one or both, must produce that result.

No considerable portion of the American people can safely be left in ignorance, and its consequent vices, for any length of time without endangering the very citadel that we have built with such magnificent grandeur.

I would not if I could enter into any discussion of what has been termed "the race question," as that question is involved in any part of our common country. It seems to me that that question has no proper place in the consideration of this measure, except in so far as it illustrates what is conceded to be a danger to our free institutions.

The very scenes and incidents and conditions that have been so graphically pictured, so sincerely deplored by Senators upon this floor as existing in some of the Southern States, may well illumine the proposition we are considering and guide us in finding the true solution.

If under our Government a majority can be overruled for any considerable time by a minority, no matter whether such result is accomplished by force or by fraud, the system and foundation upon which the Government is based is violated, denied, and annulled, and therefore to that extent the system is abrogated.

If the ignorance of the majority either permits or necessitates this abrogation of the system of free government by the majority, then that ignorance must be removed in order that the true condition may again assert itself. Danger common alike to all, to those who breathe the aroma of the ever-blooming flowers and to those whose ice-loaded atmosphere stimulates to more constant exertion, lurks in every truthful assertion that any considerable portion of our people have been, are, or will be deprived of their natural, personal, or political rights by reason of their ignorance and superstition unless such assertion is accompanied by the expressed intention of removing such ignorance and ceasing the usurpation.

Believing as I do that the common and rightful heritage of every American citizen is to have placed within his reach the opportunity for education and that this bill tends to bring every child of liberty into his own, I cheerfully give it my cordial support.

It is no new departure in its principles; it does not invade by one hair's breadth the sacred doctrine of local rule. From the early years of our history, the General Government has by its grants, either in lands, in money, or its equivalent, aided the States in their support of public schools. No one now questions the far-seeing wisdom of such procedure. A portion of the States profited immeasurably by this and laid the foundation and reared the structure for universal education.

Because of the peculiar condition existing in other of the States they did not reap the full benefit of these wise provisions, but left a large portion of their population in ignorance and vice.

If this measure under consideration shall tend to bring about an equality in this direction, as it is hoped by its promoters, as the years go on, no man will question the wisdom of its enactment, and all portions of our common country will be alike benefited thereby.

I am gratified to be able, as I said, to believe that the almost universal sentiment in my own State is in favor of this bill. Our people, in their infancy financially, have already seen the great benefits that have accrued from extraordinary expenditures for educational purposes, the means for which have been created by voluntary taxation of themselves. They would not deny to any portion of the people the like benefits, even at the expense of the General Government.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I will occupy a brief period by stating to the Senate the reasons why I shall vote for this beneficent measure of legislation. The Legislature of New Hampshire in 1887 adopted the following resolution:

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), In view of the alarming state of illiteracy now existing in certain sections of our country and considering the great danger to republican institutions that may result therefrom unless some adequate relief is afforded, that we approve of the measure known as the Blair educational bill substantially as it passed the Senate of the United States in 1890; and the secretary of state is hereby directed to send copies of this resolution to the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives at the meeting of the next Congress.

This resolution was passed by the house and also was passed by the State senate on the 31st day of August, 1887. This resolution of the Legislature which first elected me to this Senate was in accordance with a previous resolution of the Legislature of 1881. I have an extract from a joint resolution of that Legislature, approved August 19, 1881, which was draughted by myself as a member of its committee on national affairs:

SEC. 2. That universal popular education is essential to develop in the coming generations that intelligence and virtue which are the surest safeguards of free and republican government; and it is therefore the duty of Congress, by all apt means, to encourage the American common-school system, and, if necessary, to compel and aid in the establishment of unsectarian free schools in every State in the Union.

Therefore, Mr. President, my own convictions and the wishes of the people of my State go with my vote for this bill. I had hoped that we might have upon the passage of a bill of this character substantial unanimity in the Senate. I had hoped so because no man will deny that the evil which is sought to be removed by this bill is great. Illiteracy exists in large measure in the United States, not only in the South, but in the North.

I present in a condensed form facts of illiteracy which have hitherto been stated by others.

According to the census of 1890, in a population of 50,155,783 there were, over the age of ten years, 4,923,451 who could not read and 6,239,958 who could not write.

Among 10,000,000 of legal voters there were 2,000,000, one-fifth of the whole, unable to read and write: 900,000 whites and 1,100,000 colored; and undoubtedly 4,000,000, two-fifths of the whole, so imperfectly educated that their education is worth practically nothing.

Out of 15,803,535 children of school age, 6,022,762 were not enrolled; and from the 9,780,773 children enrolled an average daily attendance of only 5,804,993 is secured.

To furnish school-houses to increase the average attendance by 6,000,000 children, 120,000 school-houses are needed immediately, which, at a cost of only $300 each, would require $36,000,000.

I present a table showing the percentage of illiteracy in population according to the census of 1880 in sixteen States of the Union.

Table showing the percentage of total population over ten years of age who can not write.

States.	Colored.	White.
	Per cent.	Per cent.
Alabama.....	54	17
Arkansas.....	49	16
Delaware.....	42	7
Florida.....	48	14
Georgia.....	54	16

North Carolina.....	51	22
South Carolina.....	51	15
Tennessee.....	48	19
Texas.....	48	10
Virginia.....	50	13
West Virginia.....	39	13

The average total percentage of colored people in the United States, including Indians, Chinese, and Japanese, over ten years of age, who can not write is 47.70, or, in round numbers, 48.

The same average of the white population is 6.96 per cent., or, in round numbers, 7.

The greatest percentage of whites in the States, excluding Territories, is 22, in North Carolina; and the smallest is 2.43, in Nebraska. I have also the following:

Table showing the number of illiterate voters in the same sixteen States of the Union.

Total.....	4,154,125	410,550	944,424	1,354,974

Of the above illiterate voters, 70 per cent. are colored and 30 per cent. are whites. In each of six of the States the illiterate voters are about 50 per cent; in South Carolina they are 52 per cent. In 1880 the popular vote for President was: In Alabama, 151,507; in Georgia, 155,651; in Mississippi, 117,078; and in Louisiana, 97,201.

I suppose, Mr. President, it is conceded that illiteracy in the United States is not upon the decrease, but is rather upon the increase, and I apprehend that when the figures come in of the census of 1890 it will be found that, instead of having gained upon this illiteracy, in the South and in many of the other States the illiteracy will have increased. In the South there are special and local reasons why the illiteracy does not diminish, and in the Northern States there is a constant flood of immigration of persons who can not read and write, so that in the Northern States, by reason of this immigration, illiteracy on the whole is not diminishing.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Will the Senator yield to me a moment?

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. He does not name a Northern State where he thinks the percentage of illiteracy may have increased. I wish to relieve the State which I in part represent from any possible inclusion in that list of States, and to state that the percentage of illiteracy is not only diminishing constantly in Iowa, but that it has reached now a point represented by only 1.2 per cent., which I think, notwithstanding the statement made by the Senator from South Dakota, is the lowest point reached by any State in the Union.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not doubt, Mr. President, that the Senator from Iowa is correct. The immigration into Iowa is of an exceptionally excellent kind, and I apprehend that in most of the Northern States where there are not great cities into which is pouring an almost overwhelming influx of immigration the percentage of illiteracy will be found to have decreased, according to the census of 1890. But I repeat that, in the Southern States and in several of the Northern States where there are large cities into which this immigration pours, it is more than probable it will be found that the illiteracy has increased rather than diminished, and it is quite likely that the total percentage of illiteracy in the United States will be found to have increased rather than diminished during the decade.

Mr. President, with this great evil upon the country, why should not the nation help remove it? Why should not the United States from its Treasury assist in overcoming this obstacle to our progress? The Treasury is full. We are in a condition of unbounded prosperity. We have a large surplus of money. There can not be, therefore, when this bill comes up for consideration, any disposition to withhold national aid because the national Treasury is empty or because the United States are poor, for the contrary is the case, and the committees of Congress are to-day engaged in finding ways of reducing the revenue of the United States. This is, therefore, a most appropriate time to take some money from our overflowing Treasury and send it throughout the country for the purpose of grappling with and reducing the gigantic evil so startlingly presented by the figures which I have submitted to the Senate. The ability to aid in removing national illiteracy exists in connection with the desire to remove it.

I wish to allude briefly to some of the objections which have been made to the adoption of this bill. I will not detain the Senate by undertaking elaborately to refute those objections, but will simply state the reasons why they carry no weight to my mind and will not influence my vote.

It is said that this bill is an invasion of State rights, and its constitutionality is challenged. I do not concede that the question of the lawfulness of the appropriation of money from the Treasury for the present object is at this day fairly open to serious debate. It may be conceded that one hundred years ago a reading of the Constitution would not have shown the power to appropriate money raised by taxation for the education of the children in the several States.

The argument based upon the fact that all powers not expressly granted by the Constitution to the General Government were reserved to the States, and that the General Government was one of limited and express powers, would have had force at that day and under those conditions; but now we are one hundred years from the organization of the Government under the Constitution, and during that time the country has grown until it is now a nation of sixty millions of people. Its territory then was restricted; it now extends from ocean to ocean; and during these one hundred years a construction has been placed upon the Constitution which is a sufficient warrant for this appropriation.

We are not to deal with the question as an original question. We are not to go back, like the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY], to argue in favor of the doctrine of State rights and the limitations of national power as they may have existed one hundred years ago, but we are to take the Constitution with the interpretations which have been put upon it by the practice of those who have preceded us; and we find that in the practical adaptation of the Constitution to the wants of an enlightened, an enterprising, and an increasing population the power of appropriation has been expanded until it covers substantially the appropriation of the money of the United States found in the Treasury for any purpose deemed by Congress useful for the public welfare.

But, Mr. President, if this were not so, if there might be ground on a strict construction of the Constitution for doubts about this power, I have hoped that those doubts would not be raised upon this bill. I have hoped that a strict construction of the Constitution would not be urged in connection with an appropriation for such a beneficent purpose as this. This is not a charity. It has an appropriation of money to discharge a duty which the Government owes to its people. But although it is not a charity it is a beneficence, it is a great benevolent object which is sought to be accomplished by this bill, and therefore it seems to me that we ought, in considering and acting upon it, to raise no nice or doubtful questions of constitutional law. The most persistent advocate of State rights, the most strict constructionist of the powers of the Federal Constitution, might well waive all his arguments in order to favor a bill which proposes to carry education and enlightenment to so many thousands of illiterates in the United States.

I have felt that the Southern States which are to be so largely benefited by this act ought not to hesitate to take the money which is to be furnished them to be applied to the education of their children through any fear that the action would be made a precedent for the passage of other bills, and I have felt that Senators and Representatives from the Northern States ought to vote for this bill feeling that it would constitute no precedent for the passage of any other bill, but that it should be taken just as it is, as a grand monument of the beneficence of the National Government towards the school children and towards the illiterates of this nation wherever they may be, whether North or South.

Mr. President, I have further heard it alleged—I do not know whether the objection has been stated in this debate or not—that there is an objection to the passage of this bill and the granting of this $77,000,000 for education, $50,000,000 of which is to be expended in the Southern States, because the General Government does not retain sufficient control over the expenditure of the money which is appropriated. My answer to that objection, satisfactory to myself and I believe such as should be satisfactory to others, is twofold: First, it seems to me the bill does retain a sufficient control over the expenditure of the money. The State must accept the provisions of the bill and pledge itself to obey its conditions. Each State which takes this money and expends it for the benefit of its school children must, before it can receive a second or a subsequent year's appropriation, make a statement in detail to the Secretary of the Interior, showing him every item of the previous year's expenditure. All this must be carefully written down, and unless the Secretary of the Interior can see that the money has been faithfully applied and that all the conditions of the bill have been complied with, no more money will be sent by the General Government to that State for expenditure for the benefit of its schools.

In addition, the power to investigate the expenditure of this money does exist and will not be objected to. The General Government can ascertain where every dollar of the expenditure has gone. The General Government can investigate every complaint that the money has not been wisely expended, and the result will be made publicly known to the people of the United States.

Under these circumstances it is utterly futile for any opponent of this bill to claim that any of the money will be wasted, or that it will be expended contrary to the provisions of the gift, or that there is any reason to believe that it will be misappropriated by any one of the States of the Union. We can afford to risk this money, we can afford to give it, not only to the States of the North, but we can afford to give it to the States of the South upon this sacred and solemn trust that it shall be expended for the benefit of the school children of those States, black and white, in accordance with the provisions of the bill, and I scout the idea that there is any possibility that this money thus given for this beneficent purpose will be misappropriated or used in any way contrary to the spirit and letter of the donation.

It is also said that there is an objection to the appropriation of national money as provided in the bill, because, while it is apportioned among the several States according to the illiteracy within the various States, it is to be expended by the States for the benefit of all the children of school age. I suppose the objection is that this money appropriated to remove illiteracy can not be made to reach that large class of illiterates who are adults, beyond the reach of school education, and that therefore the apportionment is unfair; but my answer is that this bill is the only one that can be framed, this method is the only method that can be devised by which it is practicable for the General Government to appropriate money from its overflowing Treasury for the removal of the illiteracy in the States. I ask those who object to the method that is provided by this bill what can be fairer than to take the money and to give it to the States in proportion to the illiteracy? The bill proceeds upon the theory that illiteracy is a danger to the Republic and that the National Government is called upon at this time to aid in removing it by money from the public Treasury. What better method can be devised of reaching that illiteracy than to take the money and give it to the various States in proportion to their illiteracy? And when the money is given to a State, in what way can the State better reach the evil which is complained of than by appropriating it for the benefit of all the children of school age, without regard to color?

It may be admitted that this method of distributing the money among the States and of expending it within the States does not work literal and exact justice to all the States and to all the children in the States; but the point is that it is the only practicable and feasible method of doing this thing. It is the only way in which the National Government can do it.

There has been much discussion on this bill during the last ten years, and there has been much fault found with its provisions. There has been much criticism of this particular provision, and I have heard Senators who are opposed to it say that they would be willing to appropriate a sum of money to be applied directly to illiteracy in certain of the States and that such is the proper method of rendering the aid; but I have not noticed that those Senators have devised any bill for doing what they say they favor. The Senators who have criticised the clause in the bill under discussion and have said that they were willing that national money should be voted to aid in removing illiteracy if it could be done in some other way have not devised the other way. They have proposed no suitable amendment to this bill; neither have they discovered any bill of their own which they are satisfied to propose to carry out the beneficent object which it is sought to accomplish.

And so, Mr. President, I say the method in this bill provided is as good as can be devised. It is not perfect, perhaps, but I would ask what great scheme of benevolence to great numbers of people ever was perfect? I ask what scheme of taxation (and it is a fundamental principle of taxation that taxation shall be equal) ever was made absolutely and exactly equal? It is in the nature of great measures of this kind that they shall be more or less imperfect; it is in their nature that they shall be more or less unequal, and this mode of taking money from the national Treasury year by year, first a small sum, then a larger sum, and then a decreasing sum, and giving it to all the States alike in proportion to their illiteracy, and then allowing and requiring the States to expend the money given them among all the children of school age, is as good and perfect, as equal and exact, a system of distribution as can be devised.

So as to the objection that this bill gives money raised by taxation or found in the Treasury of the United States not only to States that are not well able to raise the money themselves, but also gives money to States that are able to raise it, and therefore that do not need this national benefaction, my answer is that the system in that respect is not perfect, but yet it is a good system. It is not a potent objection that in order to make an equal distribution of public money for the removal of widespread illiteracy, something near an equal and just distribution throughout the United States, the money is given to all the States, to each its proportion, to States that are able to raise all the money they need to expend for school purposes, and also to States which are not able to raise the money they need for school purposes. It might be a just objection if it could be demonstrated that the result would be that any State would be required to spend more money for school purposes by reason of this donation and the obligation imposed to spend an equal amount of its own money than would be really needed by the school children of the State.

But that is not pretended by any one. On the contrary, it has been shown by my colleague that every State already spends more money for school purposes than will be given it in any one year by this bill from the national Treasury. I ask my colleague, that I may be distinct on that point, if there is any State which now annually spends less money for school purposes than the sum which it will receive in the largest year under this bill?

Mr. BLAIR. Not a single State. Unless I am greatly mistaken, I think every one spends several hundred thousand dollars more than it will receive under this bill in any year.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then we are not forcing any State by this bill to expend more of its own money for its schools than it now spends. On the contrary we are doing exactly what the friends of this bill wish to do: We are aiding for eight years each State to supplement its existing school system by better provision for the common-school children, and we are not producing an unnatural stimulus, but are only wisely aiding the State for the time being; and therefore, although we do give money to some States which do not need it and are able to raise all the money which they need for their schools by local taxation, yet that is not an objection in view of the fact that the money is unquestionably needed for the schools, and in view of the further fact that this is the simplest, most natural, and most appropriate method of reaching the illiteracy which exists to some extent in all the States, namely, by taking a gross sum of money from the national Treasury and apportioning it to all the States precisely according to the existing illiteracy in those States.

Mr. President, there has been very prominently put forth in the discussion of this subject the idea that the expenditures which are to be made of national money in the States during the eight years of the operation of this bill will be injurious in the end to the schools of the States because it will discourage self-help, and that after a long period of time the schools will have been injured instead of benefited by these appropriations. That idea is the favorite idea of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY], who has addressed the Senate this afternoon, and it is to be found running more or less through all the discussion of this bill by its opponents. I do not wish to say that I do not think those who adduce this argument are sincere when they make it, and yet I must think that they are grossly mistaken. There may be such provision for the wants of a man or a State as will paralyze self-help and will prevent self-exertion; but it can not be that there is any danger that this money, given as it is and taken away as it is to be, will paralyze the school system of the States or will do anything except that which all wisely and judiciously administered aid always does: encourage and stimulate the object for which it is applied.

The school system of all the States is firmly embedded in their institutions. If there be any considerable exception I do not know of it. If there be any State where there is now no foothold for the common-school system, I am not acquainted with it. In every one of the States there is a school system well devised, well elaborated, and in full operation. There is nothing to which the people of each and every State of the Union are pledged more firmly than they are to a maintenance of common schools, and under these circumstances when it is proposed for a short series of years to assist each of these States to accomplish a better administration of its school system and a better management of its schools it can not safely be contended that the money thus furnished will do anything but stimulate the inhabitants of the State and the teachers of the State to continued exertion after the Government aid shall have been withdrawn.

Mr. President, the trouble is not that the people of any State do not wish to liberally maintain their schools. The trouble is not that there is a disposition to sacrifice the school system of any State and leave it to go to pieces. Money is not wanted in order to make the people of any State willing to keep up their common schools; but money from the national Treasury is wanted in the States where most of this money is to go in order to enable them to give scope to their desire to maintain effectively their school system and in order to enable them to overcome their poverty and want of resources and place their school system upon such a basis that eight years from now, illiteracy having been in a great measure removed, it will proceed of its own accord and without any further necessity of national aid.

Therefore, I am confident that the effect of this bill on the whole will be beneficial to the school system of every State, that the money which is used will be applied to placing the school system of the various States upon firm and substantial foundations, and that those States which receive this aid and which to-day need it most will find themselves at the end of the eight-year period with a school system which will take care of itself, for which the people of the State will willingly make appropriations which will amply sustain it, and will show that the aid which the Government has given has not been an injury, has not paralyzed self-help, but has placed the school system upon a foundation which will be perpetual.

Mr. President, the great need, as I conceive, of this measure at this time, and the great need that has existed for its passage during the last decade, is the poverty of the Southern States. It has been argued here by Senators that the Southern States do not need this help. It has also been argued by other Senators that they do need this help; and beyond all question, referring to the sixteen Southern States to which I have hitherto alluded, the larger proportion of them are not able now, in justice to other objects of expenditures, to appropriate the money which is needed for the maintenance of an adequate common-school system and for the removal of the illiteracy now existing within their borders.

It is difficult for us to realize what a complete destruction of property took place in the South during the war. To be sure, it is now twenty-five years since the war closed and the Southern States have been making wonderful progress; but consider how they stood in 1865, when the war closed. There had been almost an utter annihilation of all values except those of real estate. The slave property had been destroyed; the slaves remained and constituted the laborers of the section, but the labor system of the South was disorganized; the currency was destroyed, and all business interests were broken up. From one end of the South to the other there was almost no taxable property except the land and the buildings. The Southern States at once began the work of building anew their industries, but they have been able, many of them, to barely make both ends meet. I say from a careful consideration of the subject that a majority of these sixteen Southern States are not able to raise at this time the money that ought to be expended in those States for the education of the black and white children and for the purpose of preventing the increase of illiteracy, and therefore it is that I believe the whole nation ought to make this contribution in aid of the Southern States. The North ought to give it, so far as they give more of it than the other section, in a spirit of liberality and of justice, and the South ought without hesitancy to accept it as an appropriation which the North is willing to make to aid the South in overcoming the injuries of the war and in providing for the children of the South, black and white, that education which they can not at present, at least fully, obtain in any other way.

Mr. President, there is another reason why I think this bill should be adopted. That reason has been foreshadowed by others who have spoken on this subject. It is that in education we see the only remedy for the difficulties of what is called the Southern question, which it is agreed by men from all sections tends to afford help in our sectional trouble. The education of the masses of the people, the education of the blacks and the whites alike in the South, will be a remedy to some extent for the existing troubles in that section. The colored people, becoming more enlightened, becoming more intelligent, will be more likely to get on well with the white citizens of the South, and the white citizens of the South, becoming more intelligent, illiteracy being removed, prejudice being overcome through education and enlightenment, will be more likely to get on well with the black people of the South.

The Southern question is full of trouble and doubt, but I believe, adopting the illustration made yesterday by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL], that we ought to pursue this one star of hope, this one light that we see in the distance, which promises some help and some possibility of solution. With education and with increased religious sentiment at the South, developed by education, will come greater forbearance towards each other on the part of the two races. The great lesson, as it seems to me, for the Southern whites to learn in dealing with the black man is forbearance and justice. In proportion as the people of the South become better educated, in proportion as illiteracy is removed, the principles of the christian religion will make advance. Religion largely consists of self-control, and self-control on the part of the white people of the South is what is needed more than anything else to help them in the present difficulties that are upon them.

So I believe that with increased education will come higher religious convictions, and just so far as education and religion can be advanced throughout the country, North and South, and the spirit of forbearance and self-control can be made to prevail with those who have to deal with the colored people in their midst, in the same proportion shall we approach peace and harmony in the management of all our sectional questions.

So, Mr. President, I hope this bill will pass with as large a majority as possible. I hope it will pass with as many votes as possible on both sides of the Chamber, in order that through education and the growth of religious principle and the progress of christian civilization we may hopefully approach a solution of the troublesome Southern question which now afflicts the nation.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask unanimous consent of the Senate for the consideration and passage of Senate bill 1644. It is an important bill in itself, and yet it is a bill which I think will not lead to any discussion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be informally laid aside to enable him to ask for the consideration of Senate bill 1644.

Mr. BLAIR. It is necessary that the education bill should make all possible progress in the matter of debate, and I understood the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] desired to make some remarks upon it.

Mr. REAGAN. If the Senator from Florida wishes to discuss the pending bill this evening I shall give way, though the bill which I desire to have considered looks to negotiations by the President and to avoid a complication with Mexico, and it ought to be passed and go to the President as early as possible.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BLAIR. I only want to say that the discussion of the education bill extends only to to-day and to-morrow, and the day is pretty much absorbed already by speakers who are known to be desirous of addressing the Senate. I supposed the Senator from Florida, perhaps, would proceed to-night.

Mr. REAGAN. If the Senator from Florida or any other Senator desires to speak on the education bill I will withdraw my request.

Mr. CALL. I have but little to say upon the subject, and if there is no opportunity I will cheerfully forego saying anything.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill named by the Senator from Texas?

Mr. HARRIS. Let the bill be read at length, subject to objection.

Mr. BLAIR. I have no objection to the present order being informally laid aside if no one cares to speak upon it at the present time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is ready to recognize any Senator to take the floor on the unfinished business. If there be no objection, the bill called up by the Senator from Texas will be read for information, subject to objection.

IRRIGATION IN RIO GRANDE VALLEY.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1644) concerning the irrigation of arid lands in the valley of the Rio Grande River, the construction of a dam across said river at or near El Paso, Tex., for the storage of its waste waters, and for other purposes.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment proposed by the Select Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert a substitute.

Mr. DOLPH. I do not like to object to the Senator's bill, but it seems to me, and indeed I am quite certain, that it was never before the Committee on Foreign Relations. It involves matters in which the citizens of the two Republics are interested, and it seems to me it is a subject for consideration by the Committee on Foreign Relations. I see no other member of the committee present, and I will ask the Senator from Texas to let the bill go over until they can be here.

Mr. REAGAN. The bill has a double purpose. It is a matter of so much importance that it should be acted upon that if the Senator will let me make a statement I think he will not delay action on the bill. It has been reported from the Committee on Irrigation, to which it was referred.

Mr. DOLPH. There are facts within my knowledge that would induce me to object to the consideration of the bill to-day until some other member of the Committee on Foreign Relations is present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oregon insist on his objection?

Mr. DOLPH. I will withhold the objection until the Senator can make a statement. I have no objection to hearing his statement.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President, the Rio Grande River forms the boundary between the United States and Mexico for some 1,200 miles. At El Paso, where that stream passes out of the territory of the United States and forms the boundary, there is on each side of the river a city. On the Mexican side there is the city of Juarez, formerly called Paso del Norte. On the American side is the city of El Paso. The city of Juarez has now about 25,000 inhabitants. It is a city that has been occupied by the Mexicans for more than one hundred years.

They depend upon irrigation for their cultivation, and the taking out of the water by the irrigation in Colorado and New Mexico has made that river, during the dry season and during the season when crops are made, dry for about 500 miles, that place being about the center, the dividing point of these 500 miles. The river, by the accumulation of snows in the winter and rain in the spring, in its torrential flow from April to July, frequently makes very great floods, and changes, as this report shows, the channel of the river for many miles, involving questions that will be better understood if the Senate will bear with me until I read one or two pages of the report, showing the necessity for action and how it arises.

In the report of the troubles on the Rio Grande, transmitted to the House of Representatives by the Secretary of War in 1878, Executive Document No. 84, Forty-fifth Congress, second session, Colonel Hatch says, among other things:

One [trouble] which must be looked for sooner or later is in connection with the water taken from the Rio Grande for irrigation, as soon as the attempt is made to largely extend cultivation in this valley (there will not be enough water for all, and both sides have an equal right). From this troubles are certain to arise sooner or later which may involve the two countries seriously.

In the report of the board of officers (Ex. Doc. No. 93, Forty-fifth Congress, second session), March 16, 1878, is to be found the following statement:

The Rio Grande, at this season of the year even an insignificant stream, its channel often shifting and always erratic, but during the heats of summer some times dry, affords, by being directed into acequias on either bank, a scant and variable supply of water to the people of both nationalities, but is utterly insufficient to irrigate this extensive valley, where the yearly rainfall measures but a few inches. As time progresses and the country is opened by accessions to its population, sure to come—for it is a most fertile region and gloriously rewards the labor spent in irrigation—the question must grow in importance and may occasion trouble beyond the reach of diplomacy to settle.

Then, in the report of General Stanley, of last year, to the Secretary of War, he uses this language:

Our relations with our Mexican neighbors upon the long line of the Rio Grande have been kindly, although they are good deal excited over what they deem the violation of their riparian rights through our people taking all the water of the Rio Grande for the irrigation of the San Luis Valley, which leaves the Rio Grande a dry bed for 500 miles. The question is one that must be settled by the State Department, and thus far there has been no call for military force. The remedy for this water famine and consequent ruin to the inhabitants of the Rio Grande Valley, must be found in storage reservoirs, so easy of construction, one in the cañon opposite Taos and the other in the cañon near and north of El Paso.

In the report of the committee this statement is made:

These floods have sometimes become devastating torrents, inundating the whole valleys for miles, cutting new channels, and sweeping everything before them. In 1842, in the El Paso Valley, the river changed its bed for a distance of 30 miles, and in some places 7 miles laterally. Hundreds of smaller changes have been made since. In 1844 it began moving back from the Mexican side at this point, and in a few months carried away 15 miles of the Southern Pacific Railroad, and threw a single body of over 5,000 acres of land on the south side of the river, although it is still claimed to be within the domain of Texas. This land was just above the Mexican town of San Ygnacio, and as the river left the town for miles, its people were compelled to take a canal from the river where it is entirely in Texas, and carry it for more than 3 miles over Texan soil to irrigate their land and for domestic purposes. The situation is further well described in an able report submitted in the last Congress by Hon. Mr. HITT, of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, as follows:

"It (the Rio Grande) has shifted its channels so often and so far, in some cases gradually, in others abruptly and by cut-offs, that no man knows accurately where the boundary is to-day. Sometimes the stream will suddenly cut a new channel, abandoning the old ones altogether, and in a single day, by a cut-off, a tract or 'banco' of a hundred acres will be found to be on the other side of the river. These causes have produced uncertainty as to the boundary, and this encourages smuggling, which is always carried on more or less on the border. When a man smuggles from a 'banco' it is almost impossible to catch and convict him. No surveys are made nor official records kept of the time and place of cut-off changes, and no one can tell with accuracy the extent of a cut-off. The bed of the old channel is the boundary, though it may be long since dry. There are sometimes two or three old beds, and it is hard to tell where is the middle of the old bed contemplated by the treaty."

"At the last term of the United States district court at Brownsville the most noted case of smuggling was lost by the Government for want of that accurate knowledge that would satisfy the court. * * * These 'bancos' with their uncertain boundaries afforded retreats for smugglers, thieves, kidnappers, murderers, and every class of criminals, as well as bases of supplies from which to carry on their operations free from interference by either Government."

Mr. HARRIS. I should like to ask the Senator from Texas, before proceeding further with this matter, if this bill contemplates authorizing the President to negotiate with the Republic of Mexico for authority for a private enterprise to construct a dam to store water for the purposes of irrigation or does it contemplate that the two Governments or either of them shall construct such a dam?

Mr. REAGAN. In answer to the question of the Senator from Tennessee I will state that the language of the bill was framed expressly so as to cover either contingency, as the Senator will see, and that, while it is a matter of interest to private persons, it is a great national problem which this Government is under obligation to its own citizens and to the citizens of Mexico to ask the settlement of. As I stated, outside of the city of Juarez and independent of that, there are 25,000 people deprived of their supply of water who have lived there in the city that has been in existence for more than a hundred years.

Our Committee on Irrigation last summer were invited by the authorities of Mexico to pass through that city to see grape-vines and fruit trees dying for want of water, and we were informed that one-fourth of the population had already been compelled to leave, and now they feel that it is a grievance that the people of the United States higher up the Rio Grande have taken from them their supply of water, and they feel that, while they may not legally have the right to claim a restoration of their water privileges, good neighborhood and fairness between government and government make it appropriate that the United States Government should take such steps in connection with the Mexican Government as to relieve them, and to relieve them by building a dam in a narrow gulch just above El Paso, storing the torrential flow of water, so as to be able to supply water to both sides of that great valley and at the same time so regulate the flow as to prevent any further changes of the channel of the river, with the power to the President to agree to a commission that shall fix where the real boundary between the two countries is.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to say to the Senator that so far as any legislation may be necessary to avoid any international complications with Mexico or any other country, I certainly should not object; but if this bill contemplates entering upon a plan of committing this Government to building dams across the Rio Grande or any other gulch or stream for the purpose of storing water in order to irrigate farms, then I shall want a full Senate when it is considered, and I feel bound to object to its consideration this evening.

Mr. REAGAN. Very well; but I desire before the Senator takes his seat to say that that problem of controlling the channel can not be mastered without building the proposed dam, and it ought not to be an objection, in settling or in providing for the settlement of a serious national trouble, that it may contribute great benefit to the people on both sides of the river.

Mr. HARRIS. Does the Senator mean that the dam is necessary to fix the boundary between the two countries?

Mr. REAGAN. That is what all the authorities say.

Mr. HARRIS. So far as any action is necessary to fix the boundary, I shall not object, but if the bill contemplates, directly or contingently, that the Government is to construct a dam to store water for the purposes of irrigation, that is to my mind a very different question.

Mr. REAGAN. I would say to the Senator from Tennessee that the bill makes no appropriation of money whatever, and nothing can be done without the future action of Congress. So, if the Senator will let the bill go, the negotiations can be made and Congress will at all times hereafter have the control of the question as to whether the dam shall be built in one way or another.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the Senator from Tennessee to object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. I was asking for information. To some phases of it

I certainly would not object, but if it does contemplate the construction of a dam to store water for irrigation purposes I should object.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, I do object. The bill is too important to be passed at this hour in the session and without a full Senate. I desire to say also that there has been a treaty with Mexico and a commission appointed to fix the boundary line and the basis upon which it is to be determined, and the Senator from Texas ought to know also that the subject-matter is now before another committee of the Senate in another shape.

Mr. REAGAN. I do not know it, and the Senator will see that the problem is one which appropriately comes before the Committee on Irrigation, and the Committee on Foreign Relations ought not, on a technical ground, to arrest a measure necessary for the peace of the two countries.

Mr. DOLPH. I must insist on my objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill goes over.

RAILWAY MAIL SERVICE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the bill (H. R. 4975) providing for the appointment of an assistant general superintendent and a chief clerk, railway mail service; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. SAWYER. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of that bill at this time. A Senate bill has been reported from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, which is on the Calendar, and which is verbatim the same as this House bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. It had better be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. SAWYER. The Senate bill is on the Calendar.

Mr. COCKRELL. We have not reached it on the Calendar. Let this bill be printed and lie on the table, and the Senator can call it up at some other time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the bill will lie on the table and be printed without being referred.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand the bill is to be printed without a reference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be printed without a reference to a committee.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT HOULTON, ME.

Mr. FRYE. I should like very much to have the Senate consider House bill 417, Order of Business 654, the last bill on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent that the pending business may be informally laid aside and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a bill the title of which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 417) for the erection of a public building at Houlton, Me.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. BLAIR. Let it be understood that the unfinished business is informally laid aside.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the understanding.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY B. LE ROY.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 314, Order of Business 553, which is a pension bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 314) for the relief of Mary B. Le Roy. It proposes to pay out of the naval pension fund to Mary B. Le Roy, widow of the late Rear-Admiral William E. Le Roy, $50 per month during her widowhood, in lieu of her present pension.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT TAUNTON, MASS.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to make a similar request to that made by the Senator from Maine, for the consideration of a public-building bill. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 1543.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1543) for the erection of a public building at Taunton, Mass.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site, and cause to be erected thereon a suitable building, including fire-proof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, for the use and accommodation of the United States post-office and other Government offices in the city of Taunton and State of Massachusetts, the cost of said site and building, including said vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, complete, not to exceed the sum of $75,000, which said sum of $75,000 is hereby appropriated for said purpose, out of any moneys in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Proposals for the sale of land suitable for said site shall be invited by public advertisement in one or more of the newspapers of said city of largest circulation for at least twenty days prior to the date specified in said advertisement for the opening of said proposals.

Proposals made in response to said advertisement shall be addressed and mailed to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall then cause the said proposed sites, and such others as he may think proper to designate, to be examined in person by an agent of the Treasury Department, who shall make written report to said Secretary of the results of said examination, and of his recommendation thereon, and the reasons therefor, which shall be accompanied by the original proposals and all maps, plans, and statements which shall have come into his possession relating to the said proposed sites.

If, upon consideration of said report and accompanying papers, the Secretary of the Treasury shall deem further investigation necessary, he may appoint a commission of not more than three persons, one of whom shall be an officer of the Treasury Department, which commission shall also examine the said proposed sites, and such others as the Secretary of the Treasury may designate, and grant such hearings in relation thereto as they shall deem necessary; and said commission shall, within thirty days after such examination, make to the Secretary of the Treasury written report of their conclusion in the premises, accompanied by all statements, maps, plans, or documents taken by or submitted to them, in like manner as hereinbefore provided in regard to the proceedings of said agent of the Treasury Department; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon finally determine the location of the building to be erected.

The compensation of said commissioners shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, but the same shall not exceed $5 per day and actual traveling expenses: Provided, however, That the member of said commission appointed from the Treasury Department shall be paid only his actual traveling expenses.

So much of the appropriation herein made as may be necessary to defray the expenses of advertising for proposals, actual traveling expenses of said agent, and the compensation and actual traveling expenses of said commissioners, and other expenses incident to the selection of the site, and for necessary survey thereof shall be immediately available.

So much of said appropriation as may be necessary for the preparation of sketch-plans, drawings, specifications, and detailed estimates for the building by the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department shall be available immediately upon the approval by the Secretary of the Treasury of such site.

No money appropriated by this act shall be available, except as hereinbefore provided, until a valid title to the site for said building shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Massachusetts shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein.

After the said site shall have been paid for and the sketch-plans and detailed estimates for the building shall have been prepared by the Supervising Architect and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Postmaster-General, the balance of said appropriation shall be available for the erection and completion of the building, including fire-proof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches.

The building shall be unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet on each side, including streets and alleys.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for the purchase of a site, and the erection of a public building thereon, at Taunton, in the State of Massachusetts."

ANNIE D. RUNDLETT.

Mr. MITCHELL. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of Order of Business 545, Senate bill 640.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 640) granting pensions to Annie D. Rundlett and Annie Howard Rundlett.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there not an amendment to that bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT in the chair). There are several amendments to the bill, which will be stated in their order.

The amendments of the Committee on Pensions were, in line 6, after the word "widow," to strike out "and Annie Howard Rundlett, minor child;" in line 8, after the word "pay," to strike out the words "the widow" and insert "her;" in the same line, before the word "dollars," to strike out "fifty" and insert "thirty;" in line 9, after the word "dollars," to strike out "and daughter $12;" and in the same line, after the word "month," to strike out "respectively, from May 25, 1873, the date of the death of said Rundlett;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Annie D. Rundlett, widow of Howard M. Rundlett, passed assistant surgeon, United States Navy, and pay her $30 per month.

Mr. MITCHELL. The amendments limit the pension to the widow alone.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to Annie D. Rundlett."

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SPOKANE FALLS, WASH.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 1029) providing for the erection of a public building in the city of Spokane Falls, Wash.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site, for a building for the use and accommodation of the United States courts, post-office, land office, and other Government offices, in the city of Spokane Falls and State of Washington, the cost of said site not to exceed the sum of $100,000, which said sum of $100,000 is hereby appropriated for said purpose, out of any moneys in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Proposals for the sale of land suitable for said site shall be invited by public advertisement in one or more of the newspapers of said city of largest circulation for at least twenty days prior to the date specified in said advertisement for the opening of said proposals.

Proposals made in response to said advertisement shall be addressed and mailed to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall then cause the said proposed sites, and such others as he may think proper to designate, to be examined in person by an agent of the Treasury Department, who shall make written report to said Secretary of the results of said examination, and of his recommendation thereon, and the reasons therefor, which shall be accompanied by the original proposals and all maps, plats, and statements which shall have come into his possession relating to the said proposed sites.

If, upon consideration of said report and accompanying papers, the Secretary of the Treasury shall deem further investigation necessary, he may appoint a commission of not more than three persons, one of whom shall be an officer of the Treasury Department, which commission shall also examine the said proposed sites and such others as the Secretary of the Treasury may designate, and grant such hearings in relation thereto as they shall deem necessary; and said commission shall, within thirty days after such examination, make to the Secretary of the Treasury written report of their conclusion in the premises, accompanied by all statements, maps, plats, or documents taken by or submitted to them, in like manner as hereinbefore provided in regard to the proceedings of said agent of the Treasury Department; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon finally determine the location of the building to be erected.

The compensation of said commissioners shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, but the same shall not exceed $6 per day and actual traveling expenses: Provided, however, That the member of said commission appointed from the Treasury Department shall be paid only his actual traveling expenses.

So much of the appropriation herein made as may be necessary to defray the expenses of advertising for proposals, actual traveling expenses of said agent, and the compensation and actual traveling expenses of said commissioners, and other expenses incident to the selection of the site, and for necessary survey thereof shall be immediately available.

No money appropriated by this act shall be available, except as hereinbefore provided, until a valid title to the site for said building shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Washington shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein.

The building to be erected shall be unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet on each side, including streets and alleys.

Mr. SPOONER. I move to amend the amendment of the committee by inserting after the word "building," in line 5, the words "to be erected thereon."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 5 of the proposed amendment, after the word "building," it is proposed to insert "to be erected thereon;" so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site for a building to be erected thereon for the use and accommodation of the United States courts, post-office, land office, and other Government offices, in the city of Spokane Falls.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for the purchase of a site for a public building at Spokane Falls, in the State of Washington."

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SAGINAW, MICH.

Mr. McMILLAN. I ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 1453) for the erection of a public building at Saginaw, Mich.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site, and cause to be erected thereon a suitable building, including fire-proof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, for the use and accommodation of the United States post-office and other Government offices in the city of Saginaw and State of Michigan, the cost of said site and building, including said vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, complete, not to exceed the sum of $250,000, which said sum of $250,000 is hereby appropriated for said purpose, out of any moneys in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Proposals for the sale of land suitable for said site shall be invited by public advertisement in one or more of the newspapers of said city of largest circulation for at least twenty days prior to the date specified in said advertisement for the opening of said proposals.

Proposals made in response to said advertisement shall be addressed and mailed to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall then cause the said proposed sites, and such others as he may think proper to designate, to be examined in person by an agent of the Treasury Department, who shall make written report to said Secretary of the results of said examination, and of his recommendation thereon, and the reasons therefor, which shall be accompanied by the original proposals and all maps, plats, and statements which shall have come into his possession relating to the said proposed sites.

If, upon consideration of said report and accompanying papers, the Secretary of the Treasury shall deem further investigation necessary, he may appoint a commission of not more than three persons, one of whom shall be an officer of the Treasury Department, which commission shall also examine the said proposed sites, and such others as the Secretary of the Treasury may designate, and grant such hearings in relation thereto as they shall deem necessary; and said commission shall, within thirty days after such examination, make to the Secretary of the Treasury written report of their conclusion in the premises, accompanied by all statements, maps, plats, or documents taken by or submitted to them, in like manner as hereinbefore provided in regard to the proceedings of said agent of the Treasury Department; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon finally determine the location of the building to be erected.

The compensation of said commissioners shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, but the same shall not exceed $6 per day and actual traveling expenses: Provided, however, That the member of said commission appointed from the Treasury Department shall be paid only his actual traveling expenses.

So much of the appropriation herein made as may be necessary to defray the expenses of advertising for proposals, actual traveling expenses of said agent, and the compensation and actual traveling expenses of said commissioners, and other expenses incident to the selection of the site, and for necessary survey thereof shall be immediately available.

So much of said appropriation as may be necessary for the preparation of sketch-plans, drawings, specifications, and detailed estimates for the building by the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department shall be available immediately upon the approval by the Secretary of the Treasury of such site.

No money appropriated by this act shall be available, except as hereinbefore provided, until a valid title to the site for said building shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Michigan shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein.

After the said site shall have been paid for and the sketch-plans and detailed estimates for the building shall have been prepared by the Supervising Architect and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Postmaster-General, the balance of said appropriation shall be available for the erection and completion of the building, including fire-proof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches.

The building shall be unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet on each side, including streets and alleys.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Saginaw, in the State of Michigan."

PUBLIC BUILDING AT TACOMA, WASH.

Mr. SQUIRE. I ask for the consideration of the bill (S. 1030) providing for the erection of a public building at the city of Tacoma, Wash.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site for a building for the use and accommodation of the United States courts, post-office, custom-house, and other Government offices, in the city of Tacoma and State of Washington, the cost of said site not to exceed the sum of $100,000, which said sum of $100,000 is hereby appropriated for said purpose, out of any moneys in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Proposals for the sale of land suitable for said site shall be invited by public advertisement in one or more of the newspapers of said city of largest circulation for at least twenty days prior to the date specified in said advertisement for the opening of said proposals.

Proposals made in response to said advertisement shall be addressed and mailed to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall then cause the said proposed sites, and such others as he may think proper to designate, to be examined in person by an agent of the Treasury Department, who shall make written report to said Secretary of the results of said examination and of his recommendation thereon and the reasons therefor, which shall be accompanied by the original proposals and all maps, plats, and statements which shall have come into his possession relating to the said proposed sites.

If, upon consideration of said report and accompanying papers, the Secretary of the Treasury shall deem further investigation necessary, he may appoint a commission of not more than three persons, one of whom shall be an officer of the Treasury Department, which commission shall also examine the said proposed sites, and such others as the Secretary of the Treasury may designate, and grant such hearings in relation thereto as they shall deem necessary; and said commission shall, within thirty days after such examination, make to the Secretary of the Treasury written report of their conclusion in the premises, accompanied by all statements, maps, plats, or documents taken by or submitted to them, in like manner as hereinbefore provided in regard to the proceedings of said agent of the Treasury Department; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon finally determine the location of the building to be erected.

The compensation of said commissioners shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, but the same shall not exceed $6 per day and actual traveling expenses: Provided, however, That the member of said commission appointed from the Treasury Department shall be paid only his actual traveling expenses.

So much of the appropriation herein made as may be necessary to defray the expenses of advertising for proposals, actual traveling expenses of said agent, and the compensation and actual traveling expenses of said commissioners, and other expenses incident to the selection of the site, and for necessary survey thereof shall be immediately available.

No money appropriated by this act shall be available, except as hereinbefore provided, until a valid title to the site for said building shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Washington shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein.

The building to be erected shall be unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet on each side, including streets and alleys.

Mr. SPOONER. I move to amend the amendment, in line 5, by in-serting, after the word "building," the words "to be erected thereon;" a mere verbal change.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.
The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for the purchase of a site for a public building at Tacoma, in the State of Washington."

DENISON AND WASHITA VALLEY RAILWAY.

Mr. COKE. I move to take from the table the bill (H. R. 856) to amend section 1 and section 9 of an act entitled "An act to authorize the Denison and Washita Valley Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," approved July 1, 1886.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate a bill from the House of Representatives.

The bill (H. R. 856) to amend section 1 and section 9 of an act entitled "An act to authorize the Denison and Washita Valley Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," approved July 1, 1886, was read twice by its title.

Mr. COKE. There is a bill on the Calendar, being Order of Business 603, with exactly the same title, reported from the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, like the bill which has come from the other House with some few verbal exceptions. I ask for the present consideration of the House bill, and when it is taken up I shall move to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert in lieu thereof the bill reported from the Senate committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill. Is there objection? By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. COKE. I move to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill, and to insert what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill, and to insert:

That the act entitled "An act to authorize the Denison and Washita Valley Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," approved July 1, 1886, be, and the same is hereby, amended as follows:

"That said railway company is hereby authorized, in the manner and with the limitations, restrictions, and requirements in said act contained, to continue the railway in said act authorized, from the terminus therein specified, namely: 'A point of intersection with the projected line of the St. Louis and San Francisco Railway in the Indian Territory from Fort Smith to Paris, in the State of Texas, in a northeasterly direction to Fort Smith, Arkansas, and also to construct, with the same limitations, restrictions, and requirements, a branch line of railway from a point on said main line not exceeding fifty miles from Red River, to be selected by said company, and running thence in a north-westerly direction through the Indian Territory and the country known as Oklahoma to a point on the southern line of the State of Kansas at or about where the same is crossed by the one hundredth meridian, by the most practicable route thereto.

"Sec. 2. That said railway company shall build at least 50 miles of its railway on its main line and 50 miles of its railway on its branch line within three years from the passage of this act, and shall complete both the main and branch lines within two years thereafter, or all the rights herein granted shall be forfeited as to that portion of the main line and branch line not then built.

"Sec. 3. That said act of July 1, 1886, is hereby continued in force, and made applicable to said railway and branch line in all its provisions, except as herein otherwise provided."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate bill, being the bill (S. 3042) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the Denison and Washita Valley Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," approved July 1, 1886, will be indefinitely postponed, if there be no objection.

NORTH AND SOUTH DAKOTA BOUNDARY.

Mr. PADDOCK. I ask the Senate to consider at this time the bill (S. 3089) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to survey and mark the seventh standard parallel between the States of North and South Dakota.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY E. HARNEY.

Mr. TURPIE. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 916) granting a pension to Mary E. Harney.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out the words "one hundred" and insert "fifty;" so as to make the bill read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary E. Harney, widow of William S. Harney, late brigadier-general and brevet major-general United States Army, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT DEADWOOD, S. DAK.

Mr. MOODY. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 1319) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Deadwood, S. Dak.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site, and cause to be erected thereon a suitable building, including fire-proof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, for the use and accommodation of the United States courts, post-office, and other Government offices, in the city of Deadwood and State of South Dakota, the cost of said site and building, including said vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, complete, not to exceed the sum of $200,000, which said sum of $200,000 is hereby appropriated for said purpose, out of any moneys in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Proposals for the sale of land suitable for said site shall be invited by public advertisement in one or more of the newspapers of said city of largest circulation for at least twenty days prior to the date specified in said advertisement for the opening of said proposals.

Proposals made in response to said advertisement shall be addressed and mailed to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall then cause the said proposed sites, and such others as he may think proper to designate, to be examined in person by an agent of the Treasury Department, who shall make written report to said Secretary of the results of said examination, and of his recommendation thereon, and the reasons therefor, which shall be accompanied by the original proposals and all maps, plats, and statements which shall have come into his possession relating to the said proposed sites.

If, upon consideration of said report and accompanying papers, the Secretary of the Treasury shall deem further investigation necessary, he may appoint a commission of not more than three persons, one of whom shall be an officer of the Treasury Department, which commission shall also examine the said proposed sites, and such others as the Secretary of the Treasury may designate, and grant such hearings in relation thereto as they shall deem necessary; and said commission shall, within thirty days after such examination, make to the Secretary of the Treasury written report of their conclusion in the premises, accompanied by all statements, maps, plats, or documents taken by or submitted to them, in like manner as hereinbefore provided in regard to the proceedings of said agent of the Treasury Department; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon finally determine the location of the building to be erected.

The compensation of said commissioners shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, but the same shall not exceed $6 per day and actual traveling expenses: Provided, however, That the member of said commission appointed from the Treasury Department shall be paid only his actual traveling expenses.

So much of the appropriation herein made as may be necessary to defray the expenses of advertising for proposals, actual traveling expenses of said agent, and the compensation and actual traveling expenses of said commissioners and other expenses incident to the selection of the site, and for necessary survey thereof shall be immediately available.

So much of said appropriation as may be necessary for the preparation of sketch-plans, drawings, specifications, and detailed estimates for the building by the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department shall be available immediately upon the approval by the Secretary of the Treasury of such site.

No money appropriated by this act shall be available, except as hereinbefore provided, until a valid title to the site for said building shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of South Dakota shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein.

After the said site shall have been paid for and the sketch-plans and detailed estimates for the building shall have been prepared by the Supervising Architect and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Postmaster-General, the balance of said appropriation shall be available for the erection and completion of the building, including fire-proof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches.

The building shall be unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet on each side, including streets and alleys.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Deadwood, in the State of South Dakota."

PORTS OF DELIVERY IN ALASKA.

Mr. DOLPH. I ask for the consideration of the bill (S. 2692) to establish certain ports of entry in Alaska Territory.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to constitute Mary Island, Wrangel, Juneau, Sand Point, Kodiak, and Ounalaska ports of delivery within the collection district of Alaska. The Secretary of the Treasury is to designate customs officers to be stationed at each of these ports, with authority to enter and clear vessels, receive duties, fees, and other moneys, and perform such other services as in his judgment the exigencies of commerce may require.

The Secretary of the Treasury is also authorized to provide the necessary buildings for the transaction of the public business at Mary Island and Sand Point, at a cost not to exceed in the aggregate $25,000.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to establish certain ports of delivery in Alaska Territory."

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SEATTLE, WASH.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 1031) providing for the erection of a public building at the city of Seattle, Wash.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site for a building for the use and accommodation of the United States courts, post-office, custom-house, land office, and other Government offices, in the city of Seattle and State of Washington, the cost of said site not to exceed the sum of $100,000, which said sum of $100,000 is hereby appropriated for said purpose, out of any moneys in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Proposals for the sale of land suitable for said site shall be invited by public advertisement in one or more of the newspapers of said city of largest circulation for at least twenty days prior to the date specified in said advertisement for the opening of said proposals.

Proposals made in response to said advertisement shall be addressed and mailed to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall then cause the said proposed sites, and such others as he may think proper to designate, to be examined in person by an agent of the Treasury Department, who shall make written report to said Secretary of the results of said examination, and of his recommendation thereon, and the reasons therefor, which shall be accompanied by the original proposals and all maps, plats, and statements which shall have come into his possession relating to the said proposed sites.

If, upon consideration of said report and accompanying papers, the Secretary of the Treasury shall deem further investigation necessary, he may appoint a commission of not more than three persons, one of whom shall be an officer of the Treasury Department, which commission shall also examine the said proposed sites, and such others as the Secretary of the Treasury may designate, and grant such hearings in relation thereto as they shall deem necessary; and said commission shall, within thirty days after such examination, make to the Secretary of the Treasury written report of their conclusion in the premises, accompanied by all statements, maps, plats, or documents taken by or submitted to them, in like manner as hereinbefore provided in regard to the proceedings of said agent of the Treasury Department; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon finally determine the location of the building to be erected.

The compensation of said commissioners shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, but the same shall not exceed $5 per day and actual traveling expenses; Provided, however, That the member of said commission appointed from the Treasury Department shall be paid only his actual traveling expenses.

So much of the appropriation herein made as may be necessary to defray the expenses of advertising for proposals, actual traveling expenses of said agent, and the compensation and actual traveling expenses of said commissioners, and other expenses incident to the selection of the site, and for necessary survey thereof shall be immediately available.

No money appropriated by this act shall be available, except as hereinbefore provided, until a valid title to the site for said building shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Washington shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein.

The building to be erected shall be unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet on each side, including streets and alleys.

Mr. SPOONER. I move, in the fifth line of the amendment, after the word "building," to insert the words "to be erected thereon;" so as to read:

For a building to be erected thereon for the use and accommodation, etc.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for the purchase of a site for a public building at Seattle, in the State of Washington."

PUBLIC BUILDING AT DOVER, N. H.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (S. 188) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Dover, in the State of New Hampshire.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site and cause to be erected thereon a suitable building, including fire-proof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators and approaches, for the use and accommodation of the United States post-office and other Government offices in the city of Dover and State of New Hampshire, the cost of said site and building, including said vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, complete, not to exceed the sum of $100,000, which said sum of $100,000 is hereby appropriated for said purpose, out of any moneys in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Proposals for the sale of land suitable for said site shall be invited by public advertisement in one or more of the newspapers of said city of largest circulation for at least twenty days prior to the date specified in said advertisement for the opening of said proposals.

Proposals made in response to said advertisement shall be addressed and mailed to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall then cause the said proposed sites, and such others as he may think proper to designate, to be examined in person by an agent of the Treasury Department, who shall make written report to said Secretary of the results of said examination, and of his recommendation thereon, and the reasons therefor, which shall be accompanied by the original proposals and all maps, plats, and statements which shall have come into his possession relating to the said proposed sites.

If, upon consideration of said report and accompanying papers, the Secretary of the Treasury shall deem further investigation necessary, he may appoint a commission of not more than three persons, one of whom shall be an officer of the Treasury Department, which commission shall also examine the said proposed sites, and such others as the Secretary of the Treasury may designate, and grant such hearings in relation thereto as they shall deem necessary; and said commission shall, within thirty days after such examination, make to the Secretary of the Treasury written report of their conclusion in the premises, accompanied by all statements, maps, plats, or documents taken by or submitted to them, in like manner as hereinbefore provided in regard to the proceedings of said agent of the Treasury Department; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon finally determine the location of the building to be erected.

The compensation of said commissioners shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, but the same shall not exceed $5 per day and actual traveling expenses; Provided, however, That the member of said commission appointed from the Treasury Department shall be paid only his actual traveling expenses.

So much of the appropriation herein made as may be necessary to defray the expenses of advertising for proposals, actual traveling expenses of said agent, and the compensation and actual traveling expenses of said commissioners, and other expenses incident to the selection of the site, and for necessary survey thereof shall be immediately available.

So much of said appropriation as may be necessary for the preparation of sketch-plans, drawings, specifications, and detailed estimates for the building by the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department shall be available immediately upon the approval by the Secretary of the Treasury of such site.

No money appropriated by this act shall be available, except as hereinbefore provided, until a valid title to the site for said building shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of New Hampshire shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein.

After the said site shall have been paid for and the sketch-plans and detailed estimates for the building shall have been prepared by the Supervising Architect approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Postmaster-General, the balance of said appropriation shall be available for the erection and completion of the building, including fire-proof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches.

The building shall be unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 30 feet on each side, including streets and alleys.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon, at Dover, in the State of New Hampshire."

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLAIR. The next order of business is a bill for a public building in a city in the adjoining district. The two bills have been passed at two previous Congresses and have gone along together. I should like consent to have them both disposed of at the present time.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think we had better not do that.

Mr. CULLOM. I am willing to yield after I have had my turn, but I desire to call up Senate bill 1075. I have been waiting for quite a while.

Mr. BLAIR. They are twin bills and never have been separated over night.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think they had better be separated. We can not do that now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois has the floor.

PUBLIC BUILDING IN WALLA WALLA, WASH.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 1075) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Walla Walla, Wash.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site for a building for the use and accommodation of the United States post-office, courts, land office, and other Government offices, in the city of Walla Walla and State of Washington, the cost of said site not to exceed the sum of $20,000, which said sum of $20,000 is hereby appropriated for said purpose out of any moneys in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Proposals for the sale of land suitable for said site shall be invited by public advertisement in one or more of the newspapers of said city of largest circulation for at least twenty days prior to the date specified in said advertisement for the opening of said proposals.

Proposals made in response to said advertisement shall be addressed and mailed to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall then cause the said proposed sites, and such others as he may think proper to designate, to be examined in person by an agent of the Treasury Department, who shall make written report to said Secretary of the results of said examination and of his recommendation thereon, and the reasons therefor, which shall be accompanied by the original proposals and all maps, plats, and statements which shall have come into his possession relating to the said proposed sites.

If, upon consideration of said report and accompanying papers, the Secretary of the Treasury shall deem further investigation necessary, he may appoint a commission of not more than three persons, one of whom shall be an officer of the Treasury Department, which commission shall also examine the said proposed sites, and such others as the Secretary of the Treasury may designate, and grant such hearings in relation thereto as they shall deem necessary; and said commission shall, within thirty days after such examination, make to the Secretary of the Treasury written report of their conclusion in the premises, accompanied by all statements, maps, plats, or documents taken by or submitted to them, in like manner as hereinbefore provided in regard to the proceedings of said agent of the Treasury Department; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon finally determine the location of the building to be erected.

The compensation of said commissioners shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, but the same shall not exceed $5 per day and actual traveling expenses: Provided, however, That the member of said commission appointed from the Treasury Department shall be paid only his actual traveling expenses.

So much of the appropriation herein made as may be necessary to defray the expenses of advertising for proposals, actual traveling expenses of said agent, and the compensation and actual traveling expenses of said commissioners, and other expenses incident to the selection of the site, and for necessary survey thereof, shall be immediately available.

No money appropriated by this act shall be available, except as hereinbefore provided, until a valid title to the site for said building shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Washington shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein.

The building to be erected shall be unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet on each side, including streets and alleys.

Mr. CULLOM. I offer an amendment in the fifth line of the proposed amendment. After the word "building" I move to insert the words "to be erected thereon;" so as to read:

A site for a building to be erected thereon for the use and accommodation of the United States post-office, etc.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for the purchase of a site for a public building at Walla Walla, in the State of Washington."

WILLIAM DE FORD.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask for the consideration of the bill (S. 1136) for the relief of William De Ford, trustee for C. D. De Ford & Co.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay to William De Ford, assignee in trust of William Y. De Ford and George T. De Ford, co-partners trading as C. D. De Ford & Co., $4,653.75, or so much thereof as the trustee shall prove to the satisfaction of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue that he or the firm have expended in the purchase of revenue stamps used by him or them to stamp packages containing cigars upon which he or they shall prove to the satisfaction of the Commissioner that a tax had been previously paid under the revenue laws in force at the time of manufacture and sale, but which were made liable to be stamped under the act of July 20, 1868.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SIOUX FALLS, S. DAK.

Mr. MOODY. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1354) for the erection of a public building at Sioux Falls, S. Dak.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site, and cause to be erected thereon a suitable building, including fire-proof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, for the use and accommodation of the United States courts, post-office, and other Government offices, in the city of Sioux Falls and State of South Dakota, the cost of said site and building, including said vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, complete, not to exceed the sum of $250,000, which said sum of $250,000 is hereby appropriated for said purpose, out of any moneys in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Proposals for the sale of land suitable for said site shall be invited by public advertisement in one or more of the newspapers of said city of largest circulation for at least twenty days prior to the date specified in said advertisement for the opening of said proposals.

Proposals made in response to said advertisement shall be addressed and mailed to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall then cause the said proposed sites, and such others as he may think proper to designate, to be examined in person by an agent of the Treasury Department, who shall make written report to said Secretary of the results of said examination and of his recommendation thereon, and the reasons therefor, which shall be accompanied by the original proposals and all maps, plats, and statements which shall have come into his possession relating to the said proposed sites.

If, upon consideration of said report and accompanying papers, the Secretary of the Treasury shall deem further investigation necessary, he may appoint a commission of not more than three persons, one of whom shall be an officer of the Treasury Department, which commission shall also examine the said proposed sites, and such others as the Secretary of the Treasury may designate, and grant such hearings in relation thereto as they shall deem necessary; and said commission shall, within thirty days after such examination, make to the Secretary of the Treasury written report of their conclusion in the premises, accompanied by all statements, maps, plats, or documents taken by or submitted to them, in like manner as hereinbefore provided in regard to the proceedings of said agent of the Treasury Department; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon finally determine the location of the building to be erected.

The compensation of said commissioners shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, but the same shall not exceed $6 per day and actual traveling expenses: Provided, however, That the member of said commission appointed from the Treasury Department shall be paid only his actual traveling expenses.

So much of the appropriation herein made as may be necessary to defray the expenses of advertising for proposals, actual traveling expenses of said agent, and the compensation and actual traveling expenses of said commissioners, and other expenses incident to the selection of the site, and for necessary survey thereof shall be immediately available.

So much of said appropriation as may be necessary for the preparation of sketch-plans, drawings, specifications, and detailed estimates for the building by the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department shall be available immediately upon the approval by the Secretary of the Treasury of such site.

No money appropriated by this act shall be available, except as hereinbefore provided, until a valid title to the site for said building shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of South Dakota shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein.

After the said site shall have been paid for and the sketch-plans and detailed estimates for the building shall have been prepared by the Supervising Architect and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Postmaster-General, the balance of said appropriation shall be available for the erection and completion of the building, including fire-proof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches.

The building shall be unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet on each side, including streets and alleys.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Sioux Falls, in the State of South Dakota."

PENITENTIARY BUILDING IN NORTH DAKOTA.

Mr. PIERCE. I ask for the consideration of the bill (S. 3060) to carry out the provisions of section 15 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the division of Dakota into two States, and to enable the people of North Dakota, South Dakota, Montana, and Washington to form constitutions and State governments and to be admitted into the Union," approved February 22, 1889.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The preamble recites that by the act of March 2, 1881, $30,000 was appropriated for the purpose of erecting, under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior, a penitentiary in the Territory of Dakota at or near the village of Sioux Falls; and that section 15 of the act approved February 22, 1889, for the division of Dakota into two States, etc., granted to the State of South Dakota the lands purchased and the buildings erected under and by virtue of that appropriation, with the proviso that the State of North Dakota should have like grants for the same purpose and subject to like terms and conditions.

The bill proposes to appropriate $30,000 for the purpose of erecting, under the direction and supervision of the Secretary of the Interior, a penitentiary building in the State of North Dakota upon such tract or parcel of land at or near the city of Grafton, in the county of Walsh, as shall be designated by the Secretary of the Interior.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT NASHUA, N. H.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask for the consideration of the bill (S. 189) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Nashua, in the State of New Hampshire.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site and cause to be erected thereon a suitable building, including fire-proof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, for the use and accommodation of the United States post-office and other Government offices, in the city of Nashua and State of New Hampshire, the cost of said site and building, including said vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and approaches, complete, not to exceed the sum of $100,000, which said sum of $100,000 is hereby appropriated for said purpose, out of any moneys in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Proposals for the sale of land suitable for said site shall be invited by public advertisement in one or more of the newspapers of said city of largest circulation for at least twenty days prior to the date specified in said advertisement for the opening of said proposals.

Proposals made in response to said advertisement shall be addressed and mailed to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall then cause the said proposed sites, and such others as he may think proper to designate, to be examined in person by an agent of the Treasury Department, who shall make written report to said Secretary of the results of said examination, and of his recommendation thereon, and the reasons therefor, which shall be accompanied by the original proposals and all maps, plats, and statements which shall have come into his possession relating to the said proposed sites.

If, upon consideration of said report and accompanying papers, the Secretary of the Treasury shall deem further investigation necessary, he may appoint a commission of not more than three persons, one of whom shall be an officer of the Treasury Department, which commission shall also examine the said proposed sites, and such others as the Secretary of the Treasury may designate, and grant such hearings in relation thereto as they shall deem necessary; and said commission shall, within thirty days after such examination, make to the Secretary of the Treasury written report of their conclusion in the premises, accompanied by all statements, maps, plats, or documents taken by or submitted to them, in like manner as hereinbefore provided in regard to the proceedings of said agent of the Treasury Department; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon finally determine the location of the building to be erected.

The compensation of said commissioners shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, but the same shall not exceed $6 per day and actual traveling expenses: Provided, however, That the member of said commission appointed from the Treasury Department shall be paid only his actual traveling expenses.

So much of the appropriation herein made as may be necessary to defray expenses of advertising for proposals, actual traveling expenses of said agent, and the compensation and actual traveling expenses of said commissioners, and other expenses incident to the selection of the site, and for necessary survey thereof shall be immediately available.

So much of said appropriation as may be necessary for the preparation of sketch-plans, drawings, specifications, and detailed estimates for the building by the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department shall be available immediately upon the approval by the Secretary of the Treasury of such site.

No money appropriated by this act shall be available, except as hereinbefore provided, until a valid title to the site for said building shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of New Hampshire shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein.

After the said site shall have been paid for and the sketch-plans and detailed estimates for the building shall have been prepared by the Supervising Architect and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Postmaster-General, the balance of said appropriation shall be available for the erection and completion of the building, including fire-proof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches.

The building shall be unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet on each side, including streets and alleys.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Nashua, in the State of New Hampshire."

MRS. ANNA BUTTERFIELD.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of House bill 3592. It is a pension bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there any urgency about that?

Mr. CHANDLER. There is a report. The woman is ninety years of age and poor and in need, and it is a House bill.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 3592) granting a pension to Mrs. Anna Butterfield. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Mrs. Anna Butterfield, dependent mother of James A. B. Butterfield, late a sergeant in the Second Illinois Cavalry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AID TO COMMON SCHOOLS.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move—

Mr. BLAIR. Let the unfinished business be laid before the Senate. The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be stated by its title.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 185) to aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, March 19, 1890, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, March 18, 1890.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. G. H. COREY, D. D. The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

TAX ON COTTON-SEED OIL.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I have a telegram from the president of the Colored Industrial Fair Association of Arkansas, and I ask unanimous consent to have it read and placed in the RECORD. It relates to a business matter pending before the House.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the telegram to which the gentleman from Arkansas refers will be read, printed in the RECORD, and referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

There was no objection.

It is as follows:

LITTLE ROCK, ARK., March 17, 1890.

Hon. JOHN H. ROGERS, House of Representatives:

The colored planters of the State of Arkansas have learned with much concern that there is a movement to tax cotton-seed oil, and, being producers of 60 per cent. of the seed, have instructed me, as president of the Colored Industrial Fair Association of Arkansas, to present their urgent protest against the passage of such measures.

W. N. GIBBES.

ADULTERATION OF LARD.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Iowa printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Agriculture. It relates to a kindred subject to that referred to by the gentleman from Arkansas a moment since.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Iowa will be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

There was no objection.

It is as follows:

Whereas gross and unprincipled adulterations of lard are made by the mixture of cotton-seed oil and other inferior oils with pure lard; and

Whereas such a mixture is put up by the great syndicates of packers in the United States and sold as pure steam-refined lard to the consumers of this and foreign countries, which practice is seriously detrimental to Iowa farmers; and

Whereas such practice is unjust and ruinous to the hog-raisers of Iowa and the Great West: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the senate (the house concurring), That our Senators and Representatives in Congress are earnestly requested and urged to introduce and vote for a law looking to the punishment of such fraudulent transactions and compelling vendors of adulterated food, and especially lard, to label it with the name of its constituent elements and the quantity of each ingredient used in forming the compound.

The secretary of the senate is instructed to send a copy of these resolutions to our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

I hereby certify that the foregoing concurrent resolution passed both branches of the Twenty-third General Assembly on the 4th day of March, A. D. 1890.

W. R. COCHRANE, Secretary of Senate.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, I have also a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Iowa upon the same subject, and I ask its reference to the Committee on Agriculture.

The concurrent resolution referred to by Mr. HAYES was referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

ARREARS OF PENSIONS.

Mr. HAYES. I hold in my hand a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Iowa, in relation to the arrears of pensions, which I ask to have read and printed in the RECORD, and appropriately referred.

There was no objection.

The joint resolution, which was ordered to be referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, is as follows:

[Joint resolution No. 4.]

To the Congress of the United States in relation to the arrears of pensions:

Be it resolved by the General Assembly of the State of Iowa, That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be, and they are hereby, earnestly requested to use their best efforts to secure the repeal of the limitation contained in the arrears act of 1879, so that all invalid soldiers shall share alike, and their pensions shall begin with the date of disability or discharge, and not with the date of their application.

That the secretary of state transmit a certified copy of this resolution to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

A. F. MESERVEY,

President of the Senate pro tempore.

J. T. HAMILTON,

Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Approved March 11, 1890.

HORACE BOIES.

I hereby certify that this resolution originated in the Senate and is known as "Joint resolution No. 4."

W. R. COCHRANE, Secretary Senate.

HENNEPIN CANAL.

Mr. HAYES. I also present a memorial and joint resolution of the State of Iowa in relation to the Hennepin Canal, and ask that it be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals.

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection, the memorial and joint resolution will take that course.

There was no objection.

It is as follows:

[Joint resolution No. 3.]

Memorial and joint resolution relative to the construction of a canal from the Mississippi River to the Illinois River at Hennepin, in the State of Illinois.

Whereas the question of cheap transportation by an uninterrupted water route between the Mississippi River and the Atlantic seaboard by way of the Great Lakes has long been one of all-absorbing interest to the people of the food-producing States of the Northwest; and

Whereas the General Assembly of Iowa has repeatedly memorialized Congress for the construction of this water route and urged upon Congress the construction of the same; and

Whereas the construction of this canal has received more indorsements since 1844 than any other water way on the continent of America; and

Whereas a board of civil engineers has surveyed, located, and approved of the construction of this water way from Hennepin to the Mississippi River at the mouth of Rock River; and

Whereas at the water convention held September 3 and 4 in Cincinnati, Ohio, a resolution passed said convention urging upon Congress to make an immediate appropriation therefor: Now, therefore,

Be it resolved by the General Assembly of the State of Iowa, That our Senators and Representatives in Congress are requested to vote for and use their active influence to effect such legislation by Congress as will secure an appropriation to commence the construction of said canal at an early day, and they are also requested to vote a liberal appropriation therefor to the end that said canal may be completed and opened to the commerce of the country at the earliest possible date.

Resolved, That the secretary of state be, and he is hereby, instructed to forthwith transmit a copy hereof to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

A. F. MESERVEY,
President of the Senate pro tempore.
J. T. HAMILTON,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Approved March 11, 1890.

HORACE BOIES.

I hereby certify that this resolution originated in the senate and is known as "Memorial and joint resolution No. 3."

W. R. COCHRANE, Secretary Senate.

PROPOSED TRANSFER OF PENSION BUREAU.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Speaker, I am instructed by the Committee on Invalid Pensions to report back a resolution and recommend its adoption.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, That the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Interior be, and they are hereby, requested to inform this House, at as early a date as practicable, what saving of public expenditure, if any, can be made by transferring the Bureau of Pensions from the Department of the Interior to the War Department.

The resolution was adopted.

PENSION STATISTICS.

Mr. MORRILL. I am also instructed by the committee to report back the resolution I send to the desk, and recommend its adoption.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas many measures relating to pension matters are liable to be presented for consideration during the present session of Congress, and it is advisable that all available information touching the subject-matter of pensions may be placed before the House in order that more intelligent consideration may be given to such legislation: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, requested to furnish for the use of the House the following information as soon as convenient:

First. What is the total number of original pension claims which have been filed for disabilities received or contracted during the late war, up to the last day of January, 1890, and how many of such claims have been allowed up to said date; what is the total number of claims that have been filed for increase up to said time, and in how many cases has an increase been granted; how many claims up to said time have been filed for retarding, and in how many cases has such claim for retarding been allowed or granted; how many claims have been filed by widows, by minor children, and by dependent parents, and how many have been granted in each class, and how many pensioners were on the pension-roll January 1, 1890, of each class, for service, etc., arising out of the late war; what is the total amount of money which has been paid out for pensions for claims arising out of the late war; how much has been paid to meet such claims during the last fiscal year, and how much will probably be required to meet the payment of such claims during the present fiscal year; what amount has been paid out in pensions for arrearages under the act of 1879, and the probable amount still required to meet such payments under said act; what was the amount paid out to meet such arrearages during the last fiscal year; what amount will probably be required to pay arrearages upon original claims filed since July 1, 1890, or which will be hereafter filed; in other words, about how much would it probably take to meet arrearages in case the limitation in the act of 1879 should be repealed?

Second. How do the present rates of pensions compare with rates granted for similar disabilities received or contracted in former wars in which our country has been engaged; how do the rates now fixed by law for pensions to widows, minor children, and dependent parents compare with the rates fixed for such classes of pensioners in former wars?

Third. How do the rates of pensions now fixed by law for pensioners of the late war compare with the rates for similar disabilities in England, France, and Germany?

Fourth. How many years elapsed after the close of the Revolutionary war, the war of 1812, and the Mexican war before a service pension was granted, and were such service pensions based upon length of service or at a fixed amount for all of equal rank; what would be the probable amount required annually to meet the payment of $8 per month to each honorably discharged soldier as a service pension, and to the widows of those deceased?

Fifth. How many appealed cases were pending before the Assistant Secretary on January 1, 1890, and how long will it probably take to dispose of such appealed cases?

Mr. DUNNELL. I desire to ask the gentleman a question in reference to that part of the resolution just read which calls for information or data with which to make comparison between the pensions granted to soldiers in this country and France, England, and Germany. I do not think we want that information in any manner. I do not see the necessity for it in connection with our legislation.

Mr. MORRILL. It was the belief of the committee that in presenting measures for the consideration of the House all the accessible information would be valuable. It is desirable to get all the information we can.

Mr. DUNNELL. It would seem that such information could be of little service to us.

Mr. PICKLER. Do I understand the gentleman from Kansas that this information is to be obtained before we have any general pension bills before the House?

Mr. MORRILL. In reply to the gentleman from Dakota I would say that this resolution was introduced by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BREWER] and referred by the House to the Committee on Invalid Pensions. The committee after a full consideration of the subject decided that while a greater part of the information asked for was within their reach in the form of reports of the Secretary of the Interior, it was desirable for the House to have it presented in a compact form for the use of the members, and therefore reported back the resolution recommending its adoption. The committee, I am happy to say, are making good progress in maturing bills to submit to the House, and it will be entirely unnecessary for them to wait for the reply to the interrogatories. So far as the committee are concerned it is immaterial whether the resolution is adopted or rejected, but all will agree that in order for the House to act intelligently upon any subject every avenue of information should be open to them and every material fact bearing upon it should be known to them.

Mr. DOCKERY. I did not hear the reading of the resolution in full, and wish to ask the gentleman from Kansas whether it calls for information as to the amount of money that will be necessary to pay all honorably discharged soldiers of the war $8 per month pension who have arrived at the age of sixty-two years?

Mr. MORRILL. I do not know that it is embraced specifically in the report, but the committee have that information before them.

The resolution was adopted.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. STEPHENSON, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

To Mr. TURPIN, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

To Mr. SKINNER, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. CRAIG, for four days, on account of important business.

To Mr. GIFFORD, indefinitely, on account of illness.

IMMIGRATION DEPOT, NEW YORK.

Mr. SPINOLA. I ask unanimous consent to make a report from the Committee on Military Affairs in favor of the adoption of the joint resolution (H. Res. 124) authorizing the Secretary of War to take possession of a part of Governor's Island for the establishment of an immigration depot.

The joint resolution was read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. THOMPSON. I object.

Mr. SPINOLA. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection a moment, allowing me to make a brief explanation. He can reserve the right to object.

Mr. THOMPSON. I have no objection to withdrawing it for the purpose of letting the gentleman make a statement.

Mr. SPINOLA. The reason for the present consideration of the joint resolution grows out of a decision of the United States court, which holds that immigrants landing in the United States, at any of its ports, come directly under the discretion of the General Government. Heretofore they have been landing at Castle Garden, but now the General Government proposes to take charge of the subject. But there is no place fixed for their reception. The joint resolution appropriates a small unoccupied portion of Governor's Island to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to carry out the law as it stands.

The contract between the General Government and the State of New York expires by its own limitation within six or seven weeks, and something must be done and done speedily in order to provide the accommodation necessary. This would take not more than a minute or two to pass. It is a public measure.

Mr. THOMPSON. I insist upon my objection.

KANSAS AND PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 346) to extend the act to grant the right of way to the Kansas and Pacific Railroad Company through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments.

The amendments were read, as follows:

In line 4 strike out "railway" and insert "railroad." In line 9 strike out "railway" and insert "railroad."

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the Senate amendments be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

THE LATE HON. WILLIAM D. KELLEY.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I present the following joint resolution to print the eulogies upon the late Hon. William D. Kelley.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That there be printed the eulogies delivered in Congress upon the late William D. Kelley, a Representative in the Fifty-first Congress from the State of Pennsylvania, 25,000 copies, of which 6,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 19,000 copies shall be for the use of the House of Representatives; and the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to have printed a portrait of the said William D. Kelley to accompany said eulogies; and for the purpose of engraving and printing said portrait the sum of $500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Resolved further, That of the quota to the House of Representatives the Public Printer shall set apart 50 copies, which he shall have bound in full morocco, with gilt edges, the same to be delivered when completed to the family of the deceased.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Speaker, I think that it should be referred to the appropriate committee.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I ask its reference to the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Printing under the rule.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour begins at 12 o'clock and 30 minutes, and the call rests with the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. Speaker, there is only one other bill on the House Calendar from the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The pending question was a point of order, but, inasmuch as the bill has been passed by the House, it is not necessary to pass upon the point of order.

Mr. LODGE. I was going to say that there is only one other bill on the Calendar. That bill the committee believes was wrongfully placed on the House Calendar, as it makes a charge upon the Treasury; and I ask that it be transferred from the House to the Union Calendar. It is the bill (H. R. 5413) for the retirement of a certain class of officers of the United States Navy.

The SPEAKER. If it makes a charge on the Treasury it does not appear on its face.

Mr. LODGE. The effect of that bill will be to change officers' pay from furlough pay to retired pay. Officers retired on disability not sustained in the service receive furlough pay. The bill is to remedy a very grave injustice in two or three cases, but is obnoxious to the point of order, as it seemed to the committee; and the committee will not press it at this time, but take it up when reached on the Union Calendar.

The SPEAKER. If the committee thinks it is obnoxious to the point of order, perhaps it is so.

Mr. LODGE. The committee have no other business on the House Calendar.

APPROPRIATIONS, OFFICE SECOND ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL.

The Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads was called.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I present the following joint resolution on behalf of the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution construing part of the act of March 2, 1889, making appropriations for the office of Second Assistant Postmaster-General.

Be it resolved, etc. That such part of the act of March 2, 1889, making appropriations for the office of Second Assistant Postmaster-General as appropriates $100,000 "for the purpose of enabling the Postmaster-General to make a lease of a suitable place in the city of Washington, and to furnish and equip the same with tools, implements, and machinery and other material which may be necessary to repair mail bags and sacks, and mail locks and keys," shall be construed so that the appropriation (until exhausted) shall cover all expense of purchasing tools, implements, and machinery and other material, and that the "other material" mentioned above shall be construed to mean such other material as is necessary to put the building leased for the shops in a suitable condition for repairing the various mail equipments used by the Post-Office Department, and that all other material and machinery found necessary to the successful operation of the repair shops shall be purchased and paid for out of the funds appropriated for the purchase of mail bags and locks.

The SPEAKER. How can this come up?

Mr. BINGHAM. Simply on the call of the committee.

The SPEAKER. This resolution is not on the House Calendar.

Mr. BINGHAM. Then I ask unanimous consent to have it considered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not entertain a request for unanimous consent during this hour.

Mr. BINGHAM. It carries no appropriation of money.

The SPEAKER. It does not conform to the rule.

PUBLIC LANDS.

The Committee on the Public Lands was called.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the chairman of the committee is absent for a moment, and I ask that the Committee on Public Lands be passed without prejudice.

Mr. DUNNELL. I object.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] just left for a moment a moment ago, and I hope that the committee will be passed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the Committee on Public Lands be passed without prejudice.

Mr. DUNNELL. I object.

AFFIDAVITS IN LAND CASES BEFORE LOCAL OFFICERS.

Mr. McRAE. I call up the bill (H. R. 6419) "to amend 2294 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and for other purposes."

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman call up this on behalf of the committee?

Mr. McRAE. I do.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc. That section 2294 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same is hereby, amended so that it will read as follows:

"Sec. 2294. In any case in which the applicant for the benefit of the homestead, pre-emption, timber-culture, or desert-land law is prevented, by reason of distance, bodily infirmity, or other good cause, from personal attendance at the district land office, he or she may make the affidavit required by law before any commissioner of the United States circuit court or the clerk of a court of record for the county in which the land is situated, and transmit the same, with the fee and commissions, to the register and receiver.

"That the proof of settlement, residence, occupation, cultivation, irrigation, or reclamation, the affidavit of non-alienation, the oath of allegiance, and all other affidavits required to be made under the homestead, pre-emption, timber-culture, and desert-land laws may be made before any commissioner of the United States circuit court, or before the judge or clerk of any court of record of the county or parish in which the lands are situated; and the proof, affidavit, and oath, when so made and duly subscribed, shall have the same force and effect as if made before the register and receiver, when transmitted to them with the fee and commissions allowed and required by law; and the register and receiver shall be entitled to a fee of $1 for examining and approving said testimony. That if any witness making such proof, or any applicant making such affidavit or oath, shall knowingly, wilfully, and corruptly swear falsely to any material matter contained in said proofs, affidavits, or oaths, he shall be deemed guilty of perjury, and shall be liable to the same pains and penalty as if he had sworn falsely before the register. That the fees for entries and for final proofs, when made before any other officer than the register and receiver, shall be as follows:

"For each affidavit, 25 cents.

"For each deposition of claimant or witness, when not prepared by the officer, 25 cents.

"For each deposition of claimant or witness prepared by the officer, $1.

"Any officer demanding or receiving a greater sum for such service shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction, shall be punished for each offense by a fine not exceeding $100."

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

Amend the title so as to read as follows:

"A bill to amend section 2294 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and for other purposes."

Also, to amend by striking out, in lines 25, 27, and 28, beginning at the word "law," in line 25, the following words:

"And the register and receiver shall be entitled to a fee of $1 for examining and approving said testimony."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the second amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is now upon the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. LIND. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LIND. Will the bill be subject for discussion after the pending motion?

The SPEAKER. It is subject to discussion now.

Mr. LIND. Well, Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE] some questions in regard to this bill. If I understood it correctly from the reading, it revises and changes the entire system of compensating registers and receivers for the work they perform in allowing entries and making final proofs.

Mr. McRAE. It makes no change whatever as to the compensation. It only provides that affidavits for these entries may be made before a new officer, who is named, to wit, the commissioner of the United States circuit court, and may be transmitted to the register and receiver.

Mr. LIND. Under the law and regulations of the Interior Department now, is not the register or receiver entitled to a compensation of 15 cents per folio for examining final proofs that have been taken before the clerk of a court?

Mr. McRAE. And he gets the same under this bill.

Mr. LIND. Under this bill, if I understand it, the compensation is limited to $1 for each paper.

Mr. McRAE. The gentleman did not observe the amendment. The provision of the bill to which he refers is stricken out by the amendment. The only thing left is the provision permitting, for the convenience of the settler, these affidavits to be made before a commissioner and transmitted by mail to the receiver, instead of requiring the settler to go in person to the land office.

Mr. LIND. I ask for the reading of the report in my time. It may throw some light upon the bill.

The report (by Mr. McRAE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6419) to amend section 2294 of the Revised Statutes, and for other purposes, have considered the same, and report the same back with the recommendation that it pass with the following amendment: Strike out the following words in lines 25, 27, and 28: "and the register and receiver shall be entitled to a fee of $1 for examining and approving said testimony."

The purpose of the bill is to authorize all affidavits and depositions under the public land laws to be made before and certified by commissioners of the United States circuit court or clerks of a court of record for the county in which the land is situated, and to fix the fees of such work. It is for the convenience of the settlers, and does not in any way change the fees of the register and receiver.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to amend section 2294 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and for other purposes."

Mr. McRAE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The Committee on the Public Lands was called.

REPEAL OF TIMBER-CULTURE LAWS.

Mr. PAYSON. By direction of the Committee on the Public Lands, I call up the bill (H. R. 7254) to repeal the timber-culture laws, and for other purposes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc. That the act to amend an act entitled "An act to encourage the growth of timber on the Western prairie," approved June 14, 1878, and all laws relating to or authorizing timber-culture entries are hereby repealed: Provided, That all entries heretofore made may be perfected to patent in accordance with the provision of said act: And provided further, That all contests initiated against timber-culture entries prior to the passage and approval of this act shall be heard and determined in accordance with the laws, rules, and regulations governing such cases and in force at the date of the passage of this act.

SEC. 2. That any person who has made entry of any public lands of the United States under the timber-culture laws, and has for a period of four years in good faith complied with the provisions of said laws, shall be entitled to make final proof thereto, and acquire title to the same, by the payment of $1.25 per acre for such tract, under such rules and regulations as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 3. That no land acquired under the provisions of this act shall in any event become liable to the satisfaction of any debt or debts contracted prior to the issuing of the patent therefor.

Mr. DUNNELL. I call for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. PAYSON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Public Lands have had under consideration House bill 5464, and have prepared a substitute therefor with the following title: "A bill to repeal timber-culture laws, and for other purposes," and recommend its passage.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker, reserving my time, I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. PETERS. I wish to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill [Mr. PAYSON] whether I understand correctly the provisions of the second section. As I understand, it provides that whenever a party has complied with the existing law for four successive years he can obtain a patent by paying $1.25 per acre, without reference to the number of trees that are growing upon the land.

Mr. PAYSON. He can.

Mr. LIND. I wish to ask the gentleman a question. If this bill should pass, the result would be to take from our statute-books every public law for the encouragement of timber-culture on the western prairies, would it not?

Mr. PAYSON. Yes, sir. This is the only timber-culture law that is now in existence.

Mr. LIND. I would like to have the gentleman state what reasons actuated the Committee on Public Lands in recommending the elimination of this legislation which has been on our statute-books so long and has been so beneficial to the West.

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker, the first act of Congress providing for practically the donation of public lands to those who should engage in the growth of timber thereon was passed in 1873. It was amended and made more liberal in its terms in 1874, again in 1876, and again in 1878; but the experience, or the observation rather, of gentlemen connected with the Interior Department, as well as of those who have had occasion to notice the operation of this law generally, is that it has fallen very far short of the benefits that were expected to grow out of its passage. Except in a few favorable localities it is the universal experience of those who have observed the operation of the law that it has been a practical failure, while it has been possible and practicable for gentlemen desiring to obtain title to quarter-sections of land to secure a segregation by making an entry under the timber-culture law of large areas of land without any corresponding beneficial results to the country. Legislation repealing the timber-culture act has been recommended year after year by the Interior Department, commencing as far back as when Mr. McFarland was Commissioner of the General Land Office, I believe, during the administration of President Hayes. For the past five or six years, by the successive reports made by the Secretaries of the Interior and the Commissioners of the General Land Office (some eight or ten of which are contained in the bound volume I hold in my hand), this legislation has been recommended for the reasons I have stated. Perhaps I had better read a passage or two. I read from the report of the Secretary of the Interior as far back as 1885:

The system of the timber-culture act is, in substance, a subsidy paid in lands to encourage the planting and culture of timber. In a few instances the system has produced the intended results, but in nearly all it seems to have been used as a fraudulent means of acquiring title to public lands. In many cases it has been resorted to only to hold possession, without any intent to acquire title if contest should be made. This form of entry is used to obstruct the advance of legitimate settlement, and the evils growing from the timber-culture system and its administration have been proved to exceed any good derived, and its repeal would be wise legislation.

That advice has been given to the House of Representatives year after year by the Interior Department, and, following that advice, this bill has been reported by the Committee on Public Lands. It is reported now for the fourth time, I think, since I have been connected with that committee, and the testimony before the committee, as well as the recommendations from the Department, testimony given by gentlemen representing the extreme Northwest, has led the committee unanimously to recommend the legislation contained in the first section of the bill.

The provision in the second section allowing commutation is a new feature. It provides that where in good faith parties have attempted for four years to comply with the requirements of the law and have been unable to do so by reason of unpropitious climatic conditions or other causes they shall be allowed to commute a timber-culture entry by paying $1.25 into the Treasury. This we think a proper provision and have recommended its adoption.

I have now said all I care to say on this subject unless some gentleman desires to make some inquiry.

Mr. HERMANN. What was the object of the committee in drawing the line at four years, rather than three years or two years?

Mr. PAYSON. Because the timber-culture act provides for eight years within which an entire compliance with the act shall be performed. The provision of the law is:

Five acres on a quarter-section must be broken or plowed the first year and 5 acres the second year. The second year the first 5 acres must be cultivated to crop or otherwise. The third year the second 5 acres must be cultivated to crop or otherwise, and the first 5 acres must be planted in timber, seeds, or cuttings. The fourth year the second 5 acres must be planted in timber, seeds, or cuttings. Ten acres are thus to be plowed, planted, and cultivated on a quarter-section, and the same proportion when less than a quarter-section is entered. The whole 10 acres, or the due proportion thereof, must be prepared and planted within four years from the date of the entry, 5 acres being prepared and planted the first and second years and planted the third year, and 5 acres being prepared the second and third years and planted the fourth year.

So that the effort is in the fourth year to have timber growing on 10 acres of the 160. We draw this line in the proposed legislation because it is the line drawn in the original act, within which time there shall be an effort made in good faith to have 10 acres of timber growing on each 160 acres.

Mr. HERMANN. What remedy is there in the case of parties who have complied with the law for three years?

Mr. PAYSON. We have not provided any, because they will not have under the law more than 5 acres growing at that time.

Mr. HERMANN. Can they still proceed and comply with the law?

Mr. PAYSON. They can.

Mr. KELLEY. I would like the gentleman to explain the object of the last section.

Mr. PAYSON. I think it shows for itself.

Mr. KELLEY. Not very distinctly.

Mr. PAYSON. The language of the section is as explicit as any explanation I could make. It provides that—

No land acquired under the provisions of this act shall in any event become liable to the satisfaction of any debt or debts contracted prior to the issuing of the patent therefor.

This is the general provision of the homestead law applying to that matter.

Mr. KELLEY. It seems to me that this is a broader provision than any in the general homestead law.

Mr. PAYSON. It is the same thing exactly.

Mr. KELLEY. Does it mean that when a man has obtained his patent for land and holds it in fee-simple a creditor can not collect a judgment against it?

Mr. PAYSON. This does not apply to a debt originating subsequently to the issuing of the patent, but only to debts contracted prior thereto.

Mr. PICKLER. This is the general provision of the existing law.

Mr. KELLEY. I think it is broader than the existing general provision.

Mr. PICKLER. No.

Mr. DUNNELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a few remarks on this question.

Mr. PAYSON. How much time does the gentleman desire to occupy?

Mr. DUNNELL. As much as I am entitled to.

Mr. PAYSON. Well, I would be glad to make some arrangement with the gentleman.

Mr. DUNNELL. I have been recognized, I believe. I do not know that I am speaking by the permission of the gentleman from Illinois.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not intend to recognize the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DUNNELL], except with the consent of the gentleman from Illinois, who has charge of the bill and is entitled to one hour.

Mr. DUNNELL. Is not this bill open to general debate?

The SPEAKER. It is open to general debate, but under the rule which gives the gentleman in charge of the bill the floor for an hour, so that he may control the bill.

Mr. PAYSON. I desire to be not only perfectly courteous, but absolutely generous toward the gentleman from Minnesota, if he will accept the offer I make him in the spirit in which it is made. I do not desire to move the previous question unless it shall be necessary. If it shall appear that gentlemen opposing the bill are desirous to talk out the hour I shall not feel free to accede to that kind of proceeding. If the gentleman will indicate how much time he desires to occupy—

Mr. DUNNELL. Ten minutes will be all I shall want.

Mr. PAYSON. I yield to the gentleman for ten minutes.

Mr. DUNNELL. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to occupy the time of the House unnecessarily. It is not my custom to claim much time in the debates that occur here. I have, however, taken considerable interest in the subject of tree-culture and forestry in our Western country.

As a member of this House and of the Committee on Public Lands I had the honor in 1873 to secure the passage through this House of the original tree-culture act. My own observations later convinced me that the act was imperfect; and subsequently, during my former service in this House, I participated in amendments to the original act. The report which accompanied the first bill was very widely circulated throughout this country and throughout the countries of Europe, which had taken an interest in the matter of forest preservation and forest-culture.

I am unwilling to see this measure pass at this time, because there are pending before the Committee on Public Lands and also before the Committee on Agriculture a number of different bills looking to the preservation of some portion of the public lands for the encouragement of forest growth. I think it was a great misfortune that all the States that were brought under the influence of the original acts did not more thoroughly yield to the provisions of those acts. I think that if Northern Dakota, Southern Dakota, and Kansas had yielded to the purposes of that legislation and had brought about tree-culture in those States we should to-day find very much less complaint against the dryness of the climate of those States than we now hear.

Mr. Speaker, there are, I say, bills pending upon this subject in two or three different committees. As a result of the original act and the report which was made at the time to which I have alluded, forestry associations have sprung up in very many States of the Union. We have one in our own State by whose influence a million of trees are now set out each year. And all the Western States were affected by the passage of that bill.

I would have this bill lie on the table and the present law remain unrepealed until after the committee to which this bill goes have thoroughly examined the question of timber culture and forest preservation. By my own motion ten or twelve years ago a commissioner of forestry was appointed by an amendment to an appropriation bill. The reports of that Commissioner of Forestry are the most carefully prepared documents anywhere to be found in the archives of the Government. Those reports have been sought for and are to be found in all foreign libraries. To-day we have the basis of legislation which will secure the best results. I am sorry this bill is brought up for consideration and the present law is to be repealed. If this were to remain there would be a more intelligent examination. I had the honor to present one of the bills before the committee. The repeal of the law will cripple the committee in the further consideration of the subject and the prosecution of forestry investigation and the setting apart of reservations of the public lands for that purpose.

I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON], chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, if this subject can not more properly be considered in its entirety than now to pass this bill and then take up for consideration the bills pending before the committee.

Mr. PAYSON. Does the gentleman desire an answer now?

Mr. DUNNELL. I do.

Mr. PAYSON. I have no doubt a general forestry bill, such as he is speaking about, would be expedited if this were out of the way; because this bill under its practical operation is only a system of land grabbing. That is the result of it. And in support of that I will ask gentlemen to listen to statements made by Representatives from South Dakota and Washington in the Northwest, emphasizing what I say on this subject.

Mr. DUNNELL. I have no doubt the gentleman from South Dakota is intelligent on this subject, but there are other gentlemen on the floor who are also intelligent. Our own State was brought under the operation of the original law of 1873, and I have acquired as much information as possible on this subject. I have never denied that the original bill was defective and needed amendment. It had amendment, but I believe the law as it now exists may be a basis to enable the committee to reach proper conclusions on this matter of forestry.

My ten minutes have expired, but I do desire to say in a few general sentences that the matters of forestry, forest-culture, and timber-culture are subjects of exceeding importance. They are important to the good of North Dakota and South Dakota, of Nebraska, and of Kansas. But little intelligence has existed on this subject; it has been too little investigated, that is, the influence of forests, of trees, on the climate of the country.

Now, it is not possible for me, not knowing this bill was coming up, to present any data. There is this clause in it to which the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HERMANN] has referred, relating to the four-year limit, which I think is decidedly wrong. If, three years ago, I went on a quarter-section of land, set apart under the law, and made my calculation to acquire an honest title, it would not take me four years in which to secure vested rights. To be sure I am not called upon to break my ground the first year, but I am called upon to have it broken the second year. I am called upon to do my planting the third year. Now, I have done two years of active work, the second year and the third year. Now, if I happen to fail the third and have worked in good faith, paid out my money in plowing, in breaking, and planting, because my trees are not eight feet high, because I have not approached the time of proving up, I am to be cut off. Why should a man be cut off at the end of three years?

Mr. PAYSON. If the gentleman desires to be accurate—and I know he does—there is a saving of the rights of every man under the timber-culture law, and, notwithstanding the repeal of the law, he can go on, and if at the end of four years he does not desire to do so he can commute.

Mr. DUNNELL. I did not gather that idea as the bill was read. The report is not very voluminous and does not give a very great deal of information about the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I had hoped, knowing the approach and presentation of the bill, that the Committee on Public Lands would consent to let it lie until the committee had more thoroughly investigated the subject of tree-culture.

I have said all I desired to say.

Mr. PAYSON. I now yield as much time as may be desired to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I think it is very obvious that this bill ought to pass, and I have heard nothing from the gentleman from Minnesota, with all respect to him, which seemed to me to be an argument against its passage. All gentlemen who have had occasion to investigate this subject and examine the reports made from time to time by the Commissioner of the General Land Office and by the Secretary of the Interior are aware of the fact that this law has not accomplished the purpose originally anticipated, but on the contrary has been a source of dishonesty and fraud from the beginning.

The measure came into the House in the first place, I believe, about the year 1872, the gentleman representing the Harrisburg district, Pennsylvania, I think, first bringing the subject to the attention of Congress. It was reported favorably by the Committee on the Public Lands and passed without careful examination. Efforts have since been made to amend the law; amendments have been made, without any good results.

All persons felt that in the prairie regions of this country it was highly desirable that the General Government should do everything that could possibly be done while controlling the public lands to secure as large a growth of timber as possible on the treeless prairies, but it must be confessed that the law, notwithstanding it has been several times amended, is hopelessly defective.

According to reports made by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, it has been a constant source of fraud and nothing more, and has accomplished no satisfactory results; simply, and in the main, used to withhold the lands from honest settlement for the purpose of speculation. And my own experience and observation, from opportunities afforded me in passing through portions of the Western country to see the operations of the law, have convinced me that the law should be repealed, and every observation I have made and every expression of sentiment received from the Western country upon the subject, wherever the public lands are located, go to confirm my conviction that the law should not remain upon the statute-books.

The subject of forestry, Mr. Speaker, is an exceedingly interesting one, especially in the States and Territories where the Federal Government has extensive reservations of land still remaining subject to its regulations, and, although the area is rapidly diminishing, still a wise public policy would seem to suggest and demand that something should be done to at least protect as far as practicable the forest lands remaining. But I know that the Committee on Public Lands will further examine this subject and thoroughly. It has been under consideration for some years past. Of one thing I am convinced, however, that this law can not be made the foundation for any satisfactory legislation. My friend from Minnesota is mistaken, I think, in his view that it can be improved.

Mr. LIND. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. LIND. Can not this act be so amended as to require that each homesteader—every homesteader—before making final proof should also prove in connection with the other facts required by the general law that he had raised, and had growing in good condition, one acre of trees?

Mr. HOLMAN. That would be in itself a subject of separate legislation or of the amendment of the homestead law, and I think would hardly be germane to this law.

Mr. LIND. I will ask my friend if at the time this act was amended, in 1874, a somewhat similar provision existing in the homestead law was not repealed.

Mr. PICKLER. No, sir; it is still in force.

Mr. LIND. It was modified; but I addressed my question not to the gentleman from South Dakota, but to the gentleman from Indiana, and would like to have his opinion upon the question.

Mr. HOLMAN. I would not say without refreshing my memory by again examining the statutes and seeing exactly what was the effect of that legislation. But I understand that the provision in the homestead law in encouragement of tree-culture is still in force.

I think the experience of the past in the operation of the homestead law does not warrant any change in that law. I think the homestead law is as perfect now as we can make it, and I do not think it desirable to make such a modification as would impose this additional hardship upon our people who settle upon the public land under that law. The beneficial influences of that law ought not to be impaired. I can assure the gentleman from Minnesota that the subject of forestry and the extent to which the General Government can encourage it upon the public lands, and the protection of our forests, will be thoroughly considered by the committee.

But I must insist that this law can not be made the basis of satisfactory legislation.

I am not at all satisfied with the second section of this bill. I believe there should be, as was thought by the last Congress, an absolute repeal of the timber-culture law, protecting vested rights only; that the rare instances where the law has been carried out in good faith are not sufficient in number to warrant its continuance upon the statute-books; while in general it has furnished unusual facilities for the acquisition of large bodies of the public domain in a manner hostile to the influences of the homestead law.

The people of Indiana and other Western States, in common with all people in the region of our public lands, know the fact that vast bodies of these lands have been acquired by persons in violation of the spirit if not directly of the letter of the law. These titles have been acquired, I will say to my friend from Minnesota, in conflict with the spirit of the homestead law—non-residents, men of wealth, going into the region of the public lands, and hiring men to do what is in conformity with the terms of the law to enable them to acquire title.

All this is wrong; and no friend of the homestead policy should defend a state of things that would lead to such results.

But the second section, I repeat, I am not satisfied with. I apprehend that it will be found the means of securing titles in many instances where none should accrue. I think it can be made useful for wrong purposes. But I deem a repeal of this law to be so important that I yield my objection to the second section and shall favor the passage of the bill as it is.

Mr. DUNNELL. Will the gentleman answer a question?

Mr. HOLMAN. With pleasure, if I can.

Mr. DUNNELL. Does the gentleman from Indiana favor a repeal of the pre-emption law?

Mr. HOLMAN. Why, certainly, and hope my friend does; and I think my friend, if he does not, will find that he stands alone in the House on that subject.

Mr. DUNNELL. Do you not think that ten times as many frauds have been committed under the pre-emption law as under this?

Mr. HOLMAN. Why, certainly. This House has done all it could for years to do so. It has been a source of fraud for many years, and has been used to monopolize our public lands. It has operated on the same principle as the timber-culture law, and men have been speculating in the public lands through both laws. This House has done all it could to repeal the law. It has been repealed over and over again, so far as the House could do. The last Congress passed a bill to repeal that law without, I think, one negative vote.

Mr. DUNNELL. If I may be permitted to ask one other question. Does the Committee on Public Lands intend to bring a bill into this House in favor of repealing the pre-emption law?

Mr. HOLMAN. Undoubtedly.

Mr. DUNNELL. Heretofore the repeal of the two laws has been contained in one bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir. I think they ought to be repealed.

Mr. DUNNELL. Why should it not be so now?

Mr. HOLMAN. I think they ought to go together. I am in favor of repealing all those laws, all laws for disposing of agricultural lands except the homestead law. I have been in favor of that year after year. Ever since I have held a seat on this floor I have always advocated that policy.

Mr. DUNNELL. Mr. Speaker, one thing further I would like to say as to speculators in the public lands. I would call the attention of the House to this fact: That the second clause to which the gentleman refers will give to those very men who went in after the tree-culture act and who have not lived up to that act the privilege of coming in and commuting and buying for $1.25 an acre 160 acres of land.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have stated already to the gentleman that I was not satisfied with that second section; but it is not so bad, I hope, as he states. There must be, at any rate, a carrying out of the law in good faith for a period of four years. This section requires that to be done in good faith, and then allows the party to commute at $1.25 an acre. Now, both of these things are against my view. I have repeatedly urged against the selling of agricultural lands under any circumstances. I think we have little land enough, and all that we have should be husbanded to providing homes for our landless people; but inasmuch as I see no other plan of getting at the repeal of the law, I have reluctantly determined to support this bill of the committee.

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker, how much time remains of the hour?

The SPEAKER. Ten minutes.

Mr. PAYSON. Of the sixty minutes? I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER].

Mr. PICKLER. I desire to say a word to the House about this bill, because it is one in which my people are more deeply interested than any other legislation that will come before the House this session. We have thoroughly tested the tree-culture law in our country, and we can not grow trees as provided by that law, or so well and successfully as it may have been done in other localities. In the Northwest and in the country still farther west trees can not be made to grow through the operation of this law. In the first place, the trees must be planted the third year after breaking. You break the land this year, next year you cultivate it, and the third year you plant the trees. This is not sufficient cultivation, and trees can not be made successfully to grow upon these lands after only two years of cultivation.

Mr. DUNNELL. Give them more time, then.

Mr. PICKLER. You can not give them more time.

Mr. DUNNELL. Why? Amend it so as to give more time.

Mr. PICKLER. That is the law. I will say to the gentleman from Minnesota that I hope something will be passed so far as the forestry-culture law is concerned in that bill; but this law, I undertake to say to the gentleman from Minnesota, stands directly in the way of that. Why? Because this law lays down rules for the growing of trees for every climate of the United States. Now, it is found that it will not work. It is a failure.

Another practical thing I desire to say. The farmer who settles upon a tract of land in the West desires his trees about his homestead, about his houses and barns. Under the timber-culture act he takes another claim which is from 1 to 10 miles distant. That it is so far from his home, it costs him so much to attend it and cultivate it and plant his trees, and they are so often killed by drought, that it renders it wholly valueless and impracticable and is a great burden upon the people of the Northwest at present.

Here is an opportunity to repeal the timber-culture law. I am satisfied from the experience we have had that it is not a practical law; that under its regulations it is not competent to raise trees. Further, our people who have tried it for four years and have planted out their trees have found that they were killed year after year, and they have been put to the expense of planting and replanting. It has become a great burden, and we desire to have a chance to commute after four years' trial in good faith. At the end of the four years the planter would have planted all his trees and would be entitled to title by cultivating them for four years longer. That has been uniformly done under that provision. This is a bill in which the settlers in the Northwest are very deeply interested, and I hope the gentlemen will vote for the bill.

Mr. PAYSON. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PETERS].

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Speaker, I opposed the repeal of the pre-emption and timber-culture laws in all prior Congresses. I was not opposed to the repeal of the timber-culture law provided it could be done without affecting the right of those who, in good faith, attempted to comply with the provisions of that law; but in prior Congresses the repeal of the two laws has always been coupled together, and it became necessary to oppose this measure. Now, this bill obviates the objections I have always had to the bill that has been introduced for the repeal of the timber-culture law. It provides, in the first place, for the preservation of the rights of those who have attempted to acquire land under the timber-culture law and who in good faith have gone on and tried to comply with the provisions of that law. In the second place, it allows every party who for four succeeding years has attempted to comply with the provisions of this law in good faith to commute and obtain title by the payment of a dollar and twenty-five cents per acre.

Again, in the third place—and this is a very important provision of the bill as I understand it—wherever a party has only had time to comply in good faith with the provisions of the law for two or three years, he can continue on in his efforts under that law until the four years shall have expired, and then can secure a title to the land. I do not agree with gentlemen who say that the timber-culture law has not been a benefit to the country. I know from my own experience and observation that it has resulted in great benefit; but the objection to the law has always been that, while it has produced a large amount of good, yet that benefit has been derived only from the efforts of those who have tried in good faith to carry out its provisions. The law itself was open to the objection that it allowed parties who desired to cover up quarter-sections of land in various portions of the country, and to keep them from being settled, to do so under cover of the timber-culture act, and I am sorry to say that even in my own State, as to perhaps one-half of the timber-culture claims, instead of the parties going on to use the law for the purpose of acquiring title and producing timber which would benefit the country, they have used it simply for the purpose of keeping 160 acres of land in a continual state of transition from one speculator to another.

Mr. ADAMS. We have heard that in South Dakota the law is and has been and is likely to be a failure. Is that true everywhere?

Mr. PETERS. It is not true in Kansas.

Mr. ADAMS. Is it true in Kansas and in such other parts of the country as you are familiar with that the law has not been valuable heretofore and is not likely to be valuable hereafter, and is it true also that the repeal of this law will expedite a more desirable law for the promotion of timber culture?

Mr. PETERS. I think it is true that the repeal of this law will expedite the passage of a forestry law which will reach the object sought better than any amendment of the timber-culture law could possibly do. I agree that the Western States are largely interested in this question of the growth of timber. I know that in my own State the growth of timber has affected the climate favorably; the fact is, as I have already said, that, in the face of all the benefit that has resulted from the timber-culture law, a large number of persons have obtained possession of 160 acres of land each under that law who have never made any effort to comply with the law in good faith. Now, if we can enact a forestry law which will secure the object of promoting the growth of timber upon the Western prairies, then we shall have accomplished great benefit to the agricultural interests of the West, and that, I think, can be better done by a new forestry law than by any amendment that could be made of the existing timber-culture law.

Mr. DUNNELL. I wish to ask the gentleman a question. If we repeal the timber-culture law what lands will remain that can be used under another tree-culture law? Will not these lands go at once into the public-land system and be open to pre-emption and homestead settlement, and in that way will they not pass beyond the reach of persons who might desire to occupy them for the bona fide culture of timber?

Mr. PETERS. The gentleman from Minnesota goes upon the presumption that immediately upon the passage of this bill repealing the timber-culture act all of the quarter-sections that have not been taken and occupied by parties in good faith under this law will at once be taken up by homestead settlers or pre-emptors. That, I think, is a violent presumption. In the State of Kansas, for example, where a speculator has attempted to hold a quarter-section for speculative purposes, that land will at once revert to the Government, and the Government then, by a forestry law, can hold those lands free from entry for the purpose of growing timber upon them.

As I have already said, perhaps one-third or perhaps a greater proportion of the timber-culture claims in my State are being held by speculators, and those claims will at once revert to the Government under the operations of this bill if it shall be passed. Then, if the passage of a forestry bill follows, as I believe it will during this session of Congress, the Government can reserve those quarter-sections for experimental purposes under the forestry law.

Mr. DUNNELL. But there is no reservation of such lands in this bill.

Mr. PETERS. As I have said, the gentleman from Minnesota goes upon the assumption that every quarter-section of land which will be released by the provisions of this bill will be immediately homesteaded or pre-empted, but I think that is a violent assumption.

Mr. PERKINS. I will ask my colleague if it is not true that under existing laws lands which are taken under the timber-culture act may be taken for homestead or pre-emption purposes?

Mr. PETERS. Yes sir. I thank my colleague for the suggestion. Even now a timber-culture claim can be homesteaded or pre-empted.

Mr. HERMANN. I suggest, also, that, although this bill provides for commuting, a great many persons will not commute. They are not necessarily compelled to commute; they can go on and grow timber under the provisions of the act.

Mr. LIND. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PETERS] says that these lands will revert to the Government. They do not revert by the operation of this bill.

Mr. PETERS. They simply revert by reason of this act taking from those quarter-sections of land the clutch of the speculator.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MORROW. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that sixty minutes of the morning hour have expired, and I desire to make a motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering a pension appropriation bill.

Mr. PAYSON. Pending the motion of the gentleman from California [Mr. MORROW] I wish to make an inquiry. As I understand the rule, the bill which we have just had under consideration will come up as unfinished business in the next morning hour.

The SPEAKER. Undoubtedly.

The motion of Mr. MORROW was agreed to.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. BURROWS in the chair, and proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7160) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, and for other purposes.

The bill was read.

Mr. MORROW. Mr. Chairman, the largest single item of appropriation in the fiscal operations of the Government is for Army and Navy pensions, and the bill making this appropriation is always one of the shortest upon the statute books. While the sum appropriated is large, there are but few details involved in this large expenditure, but in presenting a bill which appropriates $98,427,461 it is due to the country to furnish all the information that can be obtained on the subject, that the public may know the scope, character, and expense of pension legislation.

The members of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, to whom this bill was intrusted for preparation, felt it their duty, therefore, to make diligent inquiry with respect to every item of expense, with the view of determining how far the Government is responding to the just demand of the soldiers "To care for him who has borne the battle and for his widow and orphan."

When the subcommittee took charge of the subject they called upon the Commissioner of Pensions for information on various points; and this information, after having been carefully prepared, has been incorporated in the report of the committee. I desire to call the attention of the House to this report, for if it shall be ascertained that the method adopted for estimating the cost of pensions is a correct one, it may be of advantage hereafter in estimating the expenditures for pensions under the various laws now on the statute-book and at the same time indicate the direction of further legislation for the benefit of those whose services entitle them to the bounty of a generous Government.

In the appendix attached to this report will be found estimates of Army and Navy pensions for the year ending June 30, 1891, based upon expenditures for the years 1887, 1888, and 1889. These estimates start with the number of pensioners on the pension-roll on the 30th day of June, 1889, the number being 489,725. It was found by the Commissioner of Pensions that the annual value of each pension at that date was $131.18. Multiplying 489,725, the number of pensioners, by $131.18, representing the annual value or cost of each pension, we have the sum of $64,246,552 as the aggregate annual value of all pensions at the date named.

Following this item of estimates there is a report of the number of pensioners on the roll June 30, 1887, and also June 30, 1888; and these several numbers multiplied by the cost of each pension for the years stated give an aggregate of the value or cost of all the pensions of pensioners on the rolls at those dates. These items are designed to illustrate the cost from year to year of these pensions.

We then estimate the number of pensioners who will be dropped during the current year ending June 30, 1890, which it is found will probably be about 17,862. This number multiplied by the value of each pension, $131.18, will give $2,343,137 as the amount to be deducted from the annual cost of pensioners as stated a moment ago, leaving the sum of $61,903,415.

Then there will be dropped from the rolls during the year ending June 30, 1891, a certain number of pensioners, estimated at 17,211. But the dropping from the roll during the year 1891 of this number will not be for the whole year, but will occur during the year; and a correct estimate would be to take the whole number for the average of the half year, which, multiplied by $65.59, the average of the half-year pension, would make a further reduction of $1,128,869, leaving $60,774,546 as the net result after deducting the pensioners that will be dropped during the two years.

The number of pensioners added to the pension-roll during the year 1889 was 51,921, at a cost of $5,578,490. But the pensioners who will be added to the roll during the year 1890 will be at a value not less than $131.18; and if we assume that the same number will be added during 1890 that were added during 1889 we shall have 51,921 pensioners added, which number, multiplied by $131.18, will give the result, $6,810,997, as the cost of such pensioners to be added to the roll during the year 1890, providing, of course, the Pension Office shall adjudicate claims as rapidly during the present year as it did during 1889. The fact will undoubtedly be that many more cases will be adjudicated and allowed, but no estimate can be made of such increase at this time.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I wish to ask the gentleman whether the calculation he is now giving takes into consideration the additional force of surgeons recently allowed by Congress?

Mr. MORROW. No, sir. We have not taken into consideration in the preparation of this bill any pending legislation either with reference to an increase of force in the Pension Office or with reference to the adding of pensioners to the pension-roll by the extension of the provisions of the pension laws to persons or classes of persons not now entitled to receive pensions.

Mr. SAYERS. The bill providing for additional surgeons has been reported since this bill was.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I understand that the figures embraced in the gentleman's calculation do not include the increase which that bill will bring about.

Mr. SAYERS. No, sir.

Mr. MORROW. From the amount stated a moment ago as the cost of pensions to be added to the roll during the year 1891 is to be deducted the number that will probably be dropped during that year from such added list, namely, 1,893, and the cost or value of the pensions so dropped for the average half year will be $65.59, making a total of $124,162 to be deducted from the total sum of $6,810,997, leaving the net cost of such added pensions for the year 1891 at the sum of $6,686,835.

The next estimate is that there will probably be restored to the rolls during the year ending June 30, 1890, 1,898 pensioners, which number multiplied by the annual cost of $131.18 gives the cost of $248,980. There will also probably be restored to the rolls during the year 1891 2,037 pensioners, which number, multiplied by the average of one-and-one-half-year pension, $196.77, gives the cost of $400,820.

I will not detain the committee, Mr. Chairman, with all the details contained in this statement, but I have given so much for the purpose of showing that there has been an effort made to bring this bill within the rules of calculation as applied to other expenditures, and in this effort the present Commissioner of Pensions has rendered a most efficient service.

Mr. SAYERS. As the gentleman from California has given a great deal of thought to this subject, I would like him to state what would be the probable cost if the dependent-pension bill should become a law?

Mr. MORROW. If the gentleman from Texas will postpone his inquiry for a short time until I can finish the statement I am now making, I will then take pleasure in giving him whatever information I may possess on the subject to which he refers.

We have, therefore, as I have shown, an estimate of the number of pensioners who are likely to be on the rolls on the 1st of July, 1890. After adding the persons whose claims will have been adjudicated and deducting therefrom those whose claims will go off the rolls by reason of death or otherwise, there will probably be on the pension-rolls on the 1st of July, 1890, 525,682 pensioners. The same method of calculation applied to the year 1891 will give us the number of pensioners on June 30, 1891, the end of the fiscal year for which this appropriation is made, namely 562,429.

These calculations, as I have already explained, are based upon the business of the Pension Office for the year 1889, and any increase in the work of the office during 1890 and 1891 or any enlargement of the provisions of the law will change the result.

Mr. Chairman, I now desire to call the attention of the committee to one of the most important items of expenditure in this and all other preceding pension appropriation bills. I refer to the expenditure for first payments to pensioners who receive their pensions after their claims have been pending generally for a long time, a payment which often covers a period of several years, extending back to the filing of the original application, or if the application was filed prior to the 1st of July, 1880, then it includes the arrears back to the date of the death or discharge of the pensioner.

Mr. SAYERS. Sometimes getting up as high as fifteen or twenty thousand dollars.

Mr. MORROW. I do not know how much, but they are often considerable sums of money.

Mr. MORRILL. Twelve thousand dollars is as high as they can get.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. That depends on the lapse of time.

Mr. MORROW. I call attention to this item of expense, as it amounts to nearly one fourth of the whole expenditure. We estimate, on the experience of the last three years, that there will be required to pay these 51,921 first payments to pensioners who will have their pension claims adjudicated by the 1st of July, 1891, the sum of $22,949,082, being an average of $442 for each first payment.

The total annual cost of all the pensions on the rolls July 1, 1889, was, as I have stated, $64,464,552, and the cost of first payments for that year was $22,365,708. We estimate, as I have said, the cost of these first payments, upon the experience of the last three years, for the year 1891, at the sum of $22,949,082, or $442 for each 51,921 first payments.

Mr. MORRILL. You mean the annual pension-roll is $64,000,000?

Mr. MORROW. Yes, the annual roll.

Mr. MORRILL. And the difference between that and $98,000,000 is arrears?

Mr. MORROW. Yes; what are called arrears or first payments and a few other minor payments.

Mr. MORRILL. Will not arrears necessarily continue to be paid? It will be impossible to get rid of them.

Mr. MORROW. There will always be arrears in the first payments of pensions, but not necessarily so large a sum as now. If the Pension Office should be able, by reason of an increase in its force or by the employment of more expeditious methods, to reach a point where claims could be adjudicated as fast as filed, then of course these first payments would be greatly reduced in amount.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. No, a great many run back to the time of disability, and therefore the speed with which the Pension Office does its business will not make any difference.

Mr. MORROW. From my investigation I have come to the conclusion that these cases pending on the 1st of July, 1880, and which when allowed date back to the death or discharge of the pensioner, have been pretty nearly all adjudicated, and I do not think there is going to be a great amount of expenditure in the future on account of such claims.

Mr. SAYERS. Right there, is it not a custom with the Pension Office, after claims have been rejected and laid aside for years, that the applicant may be permitted to furnish additional evidence, and then upon that additional evidence, if satisfactory to the office, this rejected applicant is put on the pension-rolls?

Mr. MORROW. I understand that to be the practice.

Mr. SAYERS. Then no lapse of time is a bar to the application?

Mr. MORRILL. There is no limitation.

Mr. MORROW. No; there is no limitation, except that claims filed since July 1, 1880, when allowed, date from the date of application. I desire to state, therefore, in reference to the suggestion of the gentleman from Kansas a few moments since, that these arrears are always going to make an element of expense in the pension bills, that that is unquestionably a fact. But it does seem to me that as the Pension Office continues to adjudicate these pending claims the arrears will be a decreasing charge. The Pension Office is quite considerably in arrears in the adjudication of the claims, as will be seen by reference to Table 9 of the report of the Commissioner of Pensions, to be found on page 25 of his report. There is a statement there as to the number of claims filed each year, the number of such claims allowed each year, and the percentage of claims allowed for each year's filings.

Now, for instance, take the year 1862. We find by the table the number of claims filed was 1,362. There have been allowed 1,102 of such claims, which allowance is 80.9 per cent. of the whole number filed that year. Now, this allowance of nearly 81 per cent. of the number filed is about the percentage that the office has found will be allowed of any number of claims filed at any time; that is to say, in the neighborhood of 20 per cent. will be rejected because of insufficient evidence or on other grounds connected with the administration of the law. Therefore it may be reasonably assumed that nearly all the claims filed in 1862 have been adjudicated and but few more applications for that year will be allowed.

Mr. MORRILL. That is the percentage of claims allowed under applications filed in that particular year?

Mr. MORROW. Yes, sir.

Now, for 1863 the number of claims filed is reported to have been 26,380 and the number of claims allowed 19,343, being 75.5 per cent. of the whole number filed for that year; but in the year 1888 there were filed 47,349 claims, of which, on the 30th of June, 1889, only 11,733, or 24.7 per cent., had been allowed. In the year 1889 there were filed 51,919 claims, of which at the end of the year only 1,557, or 2.9 per cent., had been allowed. This statement shows the delay in completing cases for adjudication. Part of this delay is doubtless caused by the pensioner himself in many cases in failing to promptly furnish the required proof, but there is also delay in the Pension Office by reason of an inadequate force to pass on the claims as filed. The table to which I am referring, and which I have compiled from the Commissioner's report, is as follows:

Army invalid claims filed, allowed, and percentage of the number of claims allowed out of those filed each year from July 1, 1861, to June 30, 1889.

Total.....	715,951	428,629

I commend the information contained in the foregoing table to the attention of those who are interested in the subject of pension claims. From it may be ascertained the number and percentage of invalid claims allowed for each year since 1862. It must be remembered, however, that an average of 80 per cent. represents about all the claims that will usually be allowed out of any considerable number, the remaining 20 per cent. being the number usually rejected for want of merit.

In this connection I will call the attention of the committee to the question of arrears under the acts of January 25, 1879, and March 3, 1879.

Mr. MORRILL. There were two acts, one providing for arrears and the other limiting it.

Mr. MORROW. Yes; the act of January 25, 1879, and March 3, 1879, two acts. There were filed under the provisions of these two acts 110,673 claims during the year 1880.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. That was under the arrears act?

Mr. MORROW. Yes; that number was filed after the passage of the two acts named providing that pensions should date from the death or discharge of the pensioner if such claims were filed prior to July 1, 1880. The effect of these two acts was to cause the filing of more claims during that year than during any other year before or since. The reason is very plain. There would be large arrears attaching to each claim if allowed by reason of such pension dating back to the death or discharge of the pensioner.

Mr. SAYERS. Was that the number of original applications or applications for arrears?

Mr. MORROW. Original applications.

Now, of the number filed in 1880 there have been allowed 78,972 claims, or 71.3 per cent.

In the year 1885 the Commissioner of Pensions was interrogated by the Committee on Appropriations as to how many of the claims that were pending on the 1st day of July had been allowed. He gave a statement to the committee and to the House which has often been referred to. In that statement the Commissioner estimated that there were a certain number of claims and a certain amount still undetermined, and that there would be a certain sum of money to be paid on account of these claims. I have made an examination of these claims, and I estimate that there has been paid out up to this time a larger sum of money on account of these claims than was estimated by Mr. Commissioner Black as the probable whole expenditure on this account.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. What has been the additional expenditure?

Mr. MORROW. I will show this in a moment.

The Commissioner of Pensions, General Black, under date of January 25, 1886, in a communication addressed to Hon. SAMUEL J. RANDALL, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, estimated the cost to the Government resulting from the extension of the limitation in the filing of applications under date of June 30, 1880, under the acts of January 25 and March 30, as aggregating the sum of $179,404,872 up to that date.

Mr. SAYERS. How much since then?

Mr. MORROW. I am coming to that; but I will first answer the question of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE]. The Commissioner, in the communication to which I have referred, reported the number of applications for pension filed prior to July 1, 1880, and the amount of arrears allowed and paid from 1879 to and including 1885 as follows:

Estimated cost to the Government resulting from the extension of the limitation in the filing of applications to June 30, 1880, as provided in the acts of January 25 and March 3, 1879, amounting to $179,404,872 up to that date.

1879.....	$3,797,648.89
1880.....	12,504,075.50
1881.....	25,962,250.31
1882.....	29,300,119.88
1883.....	34,741,580.50
1884.....	22,451,997.25
1885.....	26,842,302.84
Arrears paid to June 30, 1885, in cases on roll January 25, 1879.....	24,904,890.87
	179,404,872.00

The number of applications for pensions filed prior to July 1, 1880, and still pending July 1, 1885, was as follows:

Invalid claims.....	73,415
Widows and others.....	26,656
	100,071

He estimated that these pending claims would cost as follows:

60 per cent. of 73,415 = 44,049 × $1,500.....	$66,073,500
60 per cent. of 26,656 = 15,994 × $900.....	14,394,600
	80,468,100

The estimate of an allowance of 60 per cent. of the then pending claims was stated to be in accordance with the experience of the Pension Bureau that about 60 per cent. of the claims filed are allowed. I find, however, that 80 per cent is more nearly the correct percentage.

The total cost of the extension of the limitation in the filing of pension claims to June 30, 1880, was, according to the Commissioner's estimate, as follows:

Amount expended to June 30, 1885.....	$179,404,872
Estimated cost of claims pending but unadjudicated June 30, 1885.....	80,468,100

Total cost of acts of January 25 and March 3, 1879..... 259,873,972

If I have made myself understood the committee will comprehend that I have now given what was then estimated as the cost of arrears under the two acts named.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Estimated by Commissioner Black?

Mr. MORROW. Yes.

The present Commissioner has been requested to furnish information as to the actual amount of arrears paid under these two acts since June 30, 1885, but he has replied that it would take considerable labor to obtain the information and it has not been insisted upon.

By reference, however, to the table of claims allowed each year, to be found on page 25 of the Commissioner's report, we find that the invalid claims allowed during the years 1886, 1887, 1888, and 1889, which were filed prior to July 1, 1880, were 48,687, or more than 4,000 in excess of the number the Commissioner estimated in 1886 would be allowed out of the whole number of pending invalid claims. If these 48,687 allowed claims have cost the Government $1,500 each, as then estimated by the Commissioner, then there have been paid out since July 1, 1885, arrears on invalid claims in the sum of $73,030,500.

Mr. SAYERS. That is since 1885?

Mr. MORROW. Yes, sir.

For widows and others there are no records in the pension tables as published in the Commissioner's report from which we can obtain information as to the number of these claims allowed since July 1, 1885, but the same general rule of calculation applied to these claims as applied to the invalid claims would show that not less than 16,000 widows' claims have been allowed since July 1, 1885, and if these claims have cost the Government $900 each as then estimated, then there have been paid out since that date arrears on the claims of widows and others to the amount of $14,400,000.

The extension of the limitation for filing claims to June 30, 1880, as provided in the acts of January 25, 1879, and March 3, 1879, has therefore cost the Government as follows:

Arrears to June 30, 1885.....	$179,404,872
Invalid claims allowed between July 1, 1885, and June 30, 1889, 48,687, at $1,500 each.....	73,030,500
Claims of widows and others allowed during same period, 66,000, at $900 each.....	14,400,000
Total cost of arrears.....	266,835,372

This sum is nearly $7,000,000 in excess of General Black's estimate; from which it may be properly inferred that nearly all the claims filed prior to July 1, 1880, have been considered, and that no considerable sum remains to be paid on account of said claims.

Mr. MORRILL. Right there I want to bring out more fully what I suggested before, that every year there must be something of arrears, because there are arrears on every application that has been filed since the 1st of July, 1890; that is to say, if an application for pension was made a year ago and is allowed to-day, there is one year of arrears; so that, as I said, from 1880 there is something in the way of arrears every year, because the claim can not possibly be allowed the same day as the application is made. That is what I was getting at. There are some arrears in every year.

Mr. MORROW. The gentleman is quite correct in his statement. As he has suggested, there will be some arrears as long as claims are filed and adjudicated, but all I claim is that the claims filed prior to July 1, 1880, have probably been nearly all adjudicated.

Mr. SAYERS. If the gentleman will allow me to ask him a question right there, suppose there should be no more pension legislation—that is to say, no more legislation granting additional pensions—at what period do you think we would reach the highest point of expenditure and from that time the annual appropriations steadily decrease?

Mr. MORROW. I have made an estimate in that direction, and if the gentleman from Texas will permit me to close the few remarks I have to make with reference to the pending bill, I will answer him then, as that question may lead to further discussion.

Mr. SAYERS. Very well.

Mr. MORROW. The estimate contained in this report to which I have been referring of original pensions allowed during the year 1889 shows that there were 51,921 new pensioners placed upon the pension-roll in 1889. Assuming, as I have said before, that this number will be placed on the rolls during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, there will be an average of a half-year pension due such pensioners in addition to what has already been estimated, making the further cost for such pensions $65.59 each, or a total of $3,405,498.

We now come to the expense under the law providing for payments on account of sickness and burial of pensioners who die without heirs and without assets sufficient to meet such expense, which it is estimated will amount to $125,000.

There is another important item, and that is for the pensioners whose pensions will be increased during 1891. It appears that there are about 50,000 pensioners whose pensions are reinvestigated and their pensions increased each year; that there is an increase of about $50 each; so that there is an estimate of $2,500,000 for the increase of these pensions.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Fifty dollars each year?

Mr. MORROW. Fifty thousand claims.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Per annum?

Mr. MORROW. Yes, sir; and an increase of $50 each, making $2,500,000.

From these several estimates we have $97,090,761 as the amount required to pay Army and Navy pensions for the year 1891.

This sum may be divided into two general items, as follows:

Annual cost of 562,429 pensioners who will probably be on the pension-rolls at the end of the fiscal year, June 30, 1891, at $181.82 each.....	$74,141,679
First payments to 51,921 new pensioners who will probably be placed on the pension-rolls during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, at $412 each.....	22,949,082
Total.....	97,090,761

I will not go into details concerning the other items in this bill, which relate to the fees of examining surgeons, salaries of pension agents, clerk-hire, fuel, light, stationery, etc., further than to say that the Commissioner of Pensions asked for two additional pension agents by reason of the fact that there was so large a number of pensioners paid at the agencies at Columbus, Ohio; Chicago, Ill.; Indianapolis, Ind.; and Topeka, Kans., that the work imposed on those agents was more than they could perform.

The Commissioner, I say, recommended that there should be two additional pension agents, so that this large number of pensioners might be distributed in such a way that they could be paid expeditiously and relieve the pension agents at the points named from excess of work. The committee did not agree to that request or recommendation of the Commissioner, but they have sought to meet the difficulty by providing an increased appropriation for clerk-hire, so that at these places the pension agent may employ additional clerks, who will be authorized, under this bill, to act for the pension agent, and in that way relieve him of some of the burden that is now imposed upon him by reason of the fact that he is required to sign all the checks for the payment of pensions.

Mr. CONGER. How much do you increase the amount for clerk-hire over the amount allowed in the last general pension appropriation bill?

Mr. PETERS. The increase is $72,000.

Mr. MORROW. The amount appropriated for 1889 was $178,000, and we appropriate this year $220,000. The increase is therefore $42,000 for clerk-hire at the agencies.

Mr. CONGER. Was there not a large deficiency in last year's appropriation?

Mr. MORROW. Not a large deficiency; $7,200, I think.

Mr. CONGER. That was provided for in the urgent deficiency bill.

Mr. MORROW. Yes, sir.

Mr. CONGER. Was it only $7,000?

Mr. MORROW. Seven thousand two hundred dollars, I believe. The clerk-hire in the bill now before the committee amounts to $220,000.

Now, with reference to the time when the pension-roll will carry the maximum number of pensioners under existing law; that is the inquiry made, I believe, by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS].

Mr. SAYERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORROW. Mr. Chairman, all these estimates with reference to pension claims and pension expenditures have so far proven extremely incorrect, and I think in nearly every instance it has been realized that the estimates are almost useless; that they fail to give accurate information and frequently mislead the country as to what there is in the future with respect to such claims and expenditures. However, I have made an investigation of this subject, carefully examining the history of previous pension laws, and I think that we may safely assume that we shall reach the maximum number under existing laws about June 30, 1894. I will give the committee the basis of my estimate.

Mr. SAYERS. What would be the maximum expenditure?

Mr. MORROW. In round numbers about $112,500,000 for the annual cost of pensions at that date, and 750,000 the number of pensioners. This estimate is made on the following basis:

Pensioners on the rolls June 30, 1889.

Service.	Invalids.	Widows and others.	Total.
War of rebellion.....	356,031	99,856	455,887
War of 1812.....	603	9,964	10,567
War with Mexico.....	17,065	6,206	23,271

Pensioners who would probably be on the rolls June 30, 1894, under existing law, 750,000 × $150, probable value of each pension, = $112,500,000.

If the Commissioner of Pensions shall allow 80 per cent. of these pending claims there will be placed on the pension-roll out of the pension claims now pending 195,136. Add this number to the number on the rolls July 1, 1889, and you have 684,861 pensions. But there will be, of course, a number of claims dropped during the period while these cases are being adjudicated. The adjudication of 195,136 claims, with new claims, will certainly take four years, bringing us up to June 30, 1894, the period I have already named, and during that time there will be dropped from the rolls, by reason of death and other causes, 50,000 pensioners, leaving 634,861.

There will also be new claims filed during the same period of four years, which I estimate at 143,750, of which there will probably be the usual allowance of 80 per cent. That number I estimate at about 115,000 or 115,139, in order to make a round number in the aggregate, so that the pensioners who would probably be on the rolls on June 30, 1894, under existing law would be 750,000. If the annual value of such pensions shall increase from $131.18, the value on the 1st of July, 1889, to the sum of $150 each, as has been sometimes suggested, then the cost for the 750,000 pensioners will be $112,500,000, and that number will be the maximum number and that amount will be the maximum expenditure for pensions under existing laws.

Mr. SAYERS. The gentleman means that that will be the annual value of the pensions?

Mr. MORROW. Yes, sir.

Mr. SAYERS. He does not refer to or include appropriations necessary to cover arrears?

Mr. MORROW. No, sir; I have not taken that into consideration. That field is too extensive to be dealt with on this occasion, but I do not think it will exceed at that time $12,500,000 annually, making a total of $125,000,000 as the limit of expenditure.

Mr. CUTCHEON. The gentleman's figures show what we may expect under existing laws, without reference to a service-pension bill or a dependent-pension bill or any other such pension legislation.

Mr. MORROW. Without reference to any such legislation. However, it must be remembered that if any such legislation as the gentleman suggests shall be passed by Congress there is included in this estimate a considerable number of pensioners and an estimate of cost that would be taken up by such a bill. In other words, it would not be an additional sum by any means. In fact, I think the dependent-pension bill would not of itself add a very large sum to the amount estimated in the statement I have just presented to the committee.

Mr. CUTCHEON. In other words, you think that most of those persons who would come in under a dependent pension bill you have already included in your estimate of new applications and the like.

Mr. MORROW. A considerable portion.

Mr. BROSIUS. On page 2 of the bill there is a provision for the payment of pensions accruing between the last quarterly pay-day and the death of the pensioner; in some cases the amount of accrued pension is to be paid to the widow, in other cases to the minor children. Now, it frequently happens that a pensioner anticipates his pension and at his death leaves liabilities incurred since the last quarterly pension day, with no assets to pay them. Supposing that state of things to exist, would there be anything wrong in inserting a provision allowing payment of the accrued pension to the personal representatives of the pensioner, at the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior? Do I make myself understood?

Mr. MORROW. I understand the gentleman's question, but I do not know that I am entirely familiar with the difficulty that he seeks to cover.

Mr. BROSIUS. I infer that under the existing law there is no provision for the payment of pension accruing between the last quarterly pension day and the death of the pensioner.

Mr. MORROW. That is so, if no widow or child survive.

Mr. BROSIUS. Very well; that being admitted, it has frequently happened, it is constantly happening, that a pensioner, for the purpose of securing the means of living, anticipates the receipt of his pension, and then dies, we will say, two months after the last quarterly pension day, leaving liabilities incurred in his maintenance since the last pension day, with no assets to pay those liabilities. Would it not be right, in case that is made to appear to the Secretary of the Interior, that he should have the power to pay over this balance for the purpose of meeting liabilities thus incurred by the pensioner?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I believe that under the existing law there is provision for the payment of the funeral expenses and expenses of the pensioner's last illness, even if he leaves no heirs. If there are heirs, of course they get the money.

Mr. BROSIUS. That is true; but that does not cover the point I make. I refer to liabilities incurred in the maintenance of the pensioner during the interval from the last quarterly pension day to his death.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. That is not contemplated by the existing law, and can not be inserted in this appropriation bill, as I understand the rules.

Mr. BROSIUS. It is not contemplated by existing law?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. No, not as to other expenses than what may be classed as expenses of last illness. But the administration of the law is so liberal in this respect that I presume any accrued pension is always practically absorbed.

Mr. BROSIUS. I wish to direct attention to the fact that some of the provisions in this bill already exist in our laws.

Mr. MORROW. Precisely.

Mr. BROSIUS. I was about to suggest that it might be just as competent to put in this provision, but I see that such a proposition might be liable to a point of order as new legislation.

Mr. MORROW. According to the information of the committee on this subject, derived from statements made before us, the provisions of existing law as incorporated in this bill cover, so far as desirable, cases that may occur in the direction stated by the gentleman.

Mr. HILL. Before the gentleman from California [Mr. MORROW] takes his seat I desire to call his attention to the last clause on the second page of this bill, which provides—

That hereafter whenever a pension certificate shall have been issued and the pensioner mentioned therein dies before payment shall have been made, leaving no widow and no surviving minor children, the accrued pension due on said certificate to the date of the death of said pensioner may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, be paid to the legal representatives of said pensioner.

I would like to inquire whether that provision is the existing law or a modification of it?

Mr. MORROW. It is the existing law.

Mr. HILL. I have a case in my mind where the applicant for a pension died before the pension certificate was issued, leaving no widow or children, but leaving a legal representative. I would like to inquire whether the proviso I have just read would apply in such a case?

Mr. CUTCHEON. It is impossible to hear what is going on. We would be glad to have the benefit of this colloquy.

Mr. MORROW. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HILL] made an inquiry concerning one of the provisions of the bill and suggested a case which does not come under that provision, and he was so informed. He also inquired whether the proviso at the bottom of page 2 is the existing law, to which I responded that it is.

Mr. Chairman, this bill appropriates a large sum of money, but not larger than will be required to pay the pensions for the year 1891. It certainly deals more candidly with pension expenditure than did the regular pension appropriation bill for the current year, which left a deficiency of $21,613,009 to be provided for in a deficiency bill which passed the House a few days ago. The Administration, as represented by the Republican majority in both Houses of Congress, is doubtless to be charged with extravagance in the matter of public expenditures, and this deficiency will probably be charged to that account. Against such a charge the Administration will be acquitted by an honest effort to meet the requirements of the Government, and to that point I take pleasure in referring to the following extracts from the reports of the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of the Treasury in relation to the pension estimates covered by this bill and the apparent increase in the amount.

The Secretary of the Interior, in his report dated November 15, 1889, explains his estimates for pensions for the year 1890-'91 as follows:

The estimates for pensions made for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1889, were not only inadequate, but must have been known to be so when recommended to Congress. The estimate for the previous year was $80,000,000. But before this estimate for the present year was completed it was apparent that a deficiency would be incurred, as it was incurred, for the previous year, to the amount of at least $8,000,000, and that this added to the original eighty millions would not be enough to meet the obligations accruing before the end of even that fiscal year.

It was known also that the pension-list was increasing, and if the payments of 1888-'89 could not be met with $80,000,000, but a deficiency bill had to be passed for $8,000,000 more, it must have been anticipated that the former Commissioner's successor would be run into a deficiency. Yet the estimate for pensions was confined to $80,000,000 for 1889-'90. The result, if the cause were not so easily detected, might produce an unfair comparison between the previous administration and the present as to the amount to be expended in this branch of the service. I do not hesitate, however, to assume the responsibility, as I have done in the estimates for the next fiscal year, of recommending an increase in the appropriation for pensions, so that a liberal and legal payment may be made to all the deserving pensioners of the Republic. This sum will reach $97,210,252.

The Secretary of the Treasury, in his report of December 2, 1889, refers to the increased expenditure for pensions in the following language:

The amount estimated for pensions for the year 1889 was $76,312,400, and the estimates for same purpose, herewith submitted, for the year 1891 are $98,587,252, showing an apparent increase of $22,274,852. These figures, however, do not even approximately represent the actual increase of expenditure for pensions, because the estimate for the year 1889 was wholly inadequate to meet the demands of the service.

The amount regularly appropriated for pensions for that year was $81,758,700. To this was added a deficiency appropriation by last Congress of $8,000,000, and about $8,000,000 more were necessarily drawn from the appropriations for the current year to pay pensions due in the fiscal year 1889, but for which sufficient appropriations had not been made. The total amount, therefore, which was actually required for pensions for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1889, was $96,624,779.11.

The amount appropriated for pensions for the current year was the same as last year ($81,758,700); but there is an estimated deficiency of $24,000,000 for this year, making a total of $105,758,700; deducting from this the $8,000,000 drawn out, as above stated, to meet the deficiency for last year, will leave chargeable to the current year $97,758,700. The amounts, actual and estimated, for pensions will therefore stand as follows:

Expended for the year ended June 30, 1889..... $96,624,779.11
Appropriated and estimated for year ending June 30, 1890..... 97,758,700.00
Estimated for year ending June 30, 1891..... 98,587,252.00

A comparison of the expenditures of 1879 with those of 1889 will show that during the last ten years the increase of pensions has not differed very widely from the decrease of interest on the public debt:

Pensions in 1879..... $35,121,482.39
Pensions in 1889..... 97,758,700.00
Interest on public debt, 1879..... 105,327,942.00
Interest on public debt, 1889..... 41,001,484.29

No patriotic American has ever complained of the vast amounts of interest paid to the men who loaned their money to preserve the integrity of the nation; much less will they complain of any just and proper recognition of the claims of men who, in the nation's hour of extreme peril, sacrificed their lives and health to save it.

The patriotic declaration of the Secretary of the Treasury in the concluding paragraph just quoted voices the generous sentiment of the American people towards those who periled their lives that the nation might live. The policy of economy in public expenditures must be maintained, but not at the expense of the nation's honor. Within eight weeks after the signing of the Declaration of Independence, the Continental Congress resolved that pensions should be paid to those who should be disabled in the war of the Revolution. This action was followed by such provisions as could be made under the Articles of Confederation. When the Government was established under the Federal Constitution, the first appropriation act, approved September 29, 1789, contained an item of $96,000 for invalid pensions. Then followed the act approved March 26, 1790, appropriating $96,979.72 for paying pensions to invalids. In the act of May 8, 1792, we find this declaration:

If any person, whether officer or soldier, belonging to the militia of any State and called out into the service of the United States, be wounded or disabled while in actual service, he shall be taken care of and provided for at the public expense.

This has continued to be the law and is now found in section 1639 of the Revised Statutes. We are required therefore by every consideration of public duty to provide for those who have become disabled in the service of the country. It is the command of the law, the obligation of our national honor, and the highest evidence of our faith in the perpetuity of free institutions.

The following is the table of estimates referred to in the foregoing remarks:

Estimate of appropriations required for the payment of Army and Navy pensions for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, based upon expenditures for the years 1887, 1888, and 1889.

ANNUAL VALUE OF PENSIONS.
June 30, 1889:
Pensioners on rolls, 489,725.....
Average annual value of each pension, $131.18+.....	489,725×$131.18+=$64,216,552
June 30, 1887:
Pensioners on rolls, 406,007.....
Average annual value of each pension, $130.10+.....	406,007×$130.10+=$52,824,611
June 30, 1888:
Pensioners on rolls, 452,557.....
Average annual value of each pension, $125.30+.....	452,557×$125.30+=$56,707,221
Three years ending June 30, 1889:
Average number on rolls, 449,430.....
Average value of each pension, $128.86.....	449,430×$128.86=$57,913,590

PENSIONERS DROPPED.
Pensioners that will probably be dropped from rolls during the year ending June 30, 1890, 17,862×$131.18+.....	2,343,137
Leaving 471,863 pensioners.....	61,903,415
NOTE.—The pensioners (17,862) to be dropped during 1890 is determined by a proportion. The number of pensioners on the rolls at the beginning of 1889 (452,557) is to the number on the rolls at the beginning of 1890 (489,725) as the number dropped during 1889 (16,507) is to the number to be dropped during 1890 (17,862):
452,557 : 489,725 :: 16,507 : 17,862.
Pensioners that will probably be dropped from the rolls during the year ending June 30, 1891, 17,211.....	1,128,809
Average half-year pension 17,211×$65.59.....	60,774,546

NOTE.—Of the 489,725 pensioners on the rolls July 1, 1889, 17,862 will be dropped during 1890. Of said number there will remain July 1, 1890, 471,863. By the same proportion it will be shown that of said remainder (471,863) 17,211 will be dropped during 1891. Of the 51,921 new cases added during 1890-'91 (on the same basis) will be dropped during 1891. (See further along.)

During year ending June 30, 1887:
Pensioners dropped from the rolls, 17,677.....
Average annual value of each, $132.46.....	17,677×$132.46=$2,341,600
During year ending June 30, 1888:
Pensioners dropped from the rolls, 15,730.....
Average annual value of each, $182.89.....	15,730×$182.89=2,876,985
During year ending June 30, 1889:
Pensioners dropped from the rolls, 16,507.....
Average annual value of each, $142.50.....	16,507×$142.50=2,352,250
During the three years ending June 30, 1889:
Average number dropped from the rolls each year, 16,638.....
Average annual value of each pension dropped, $152.62.....	16,638×$152.62=2,539,292

NEW PENSIONERS ADDED.
Pensioners that will probably be added to the rolls during the year ending June 30, 1890, 51,921×$131.18.....	6,810,907
Pensioners that will probably be dropped from such added list during the year ending June 30, 1891, 1,893.....
Average half-year pension, $65.59×1,893.....	124,162
	6,686,805

During the year ending June 30, 1887:
Pensioners added to the rolls, 55,194.....
Average annual value of each, $95.80.....	55,194×$95.80=$5,287,605
During year ending June 30, 1888:
Pensioners added to the rolls, 60,252.....
Average annual value of each, $95.89.....	60,252×$95.89=5,777,741
During the year ending June 30, 1889:
Pensioners added to the rolls, 51,921.....
Average annual value of each, $107.44.....	51,921×$107.44=5,578,490
During the three years ending June 30, 1889:
Average number added to rolls, 55,789.....
Average annual value of each pension, $99.71.....	55,789×$99.71=5,562,721

PENSIONERS RESTORED.

Pensioners that will probably be restored to the rolls during the year ending June 30, 1890, 1,898 × $131.18..... 248,980

NOTE.—The number of pensioners on the rolls at the beginning of 1889 is to the number of pensioners at the beginning of 1890 as the number of pensioners restored during 1889 is to the number to be restored during 1890:

432,537: 489,725: 1,754: 1,898.

Pensioners that will probably be restored to the rolls during the year ending June 30, 1891, 2,037.

Average 14 year pension, 2,037 × $196.77..... $400,820

NOTE.—By the proportion used to determine the number of pensioners to be restored during 1890, it will be shown that 2,037 will probably be restored during 1891:

432,537: 525,682: 1,754: 2,037.

[During year ending June 30, 1887:

Pensioners restored, 2,707..... 2,707 × $77.22 = $209,042

Average annual value of each, $77.22.....

During year ending June 30, 1888:

Pensioners restored, 2,028..... 2,028 × $75.72 = 153,565

Average annual value of each, $75.72.....

During year ending June 30, 1889:

Pensioners restored, 1,754..... 1,754 × $87.84 = 154,067

Average annual value of each, $87.84.....

Pensioners restored during the three years ending June 30, 1889, 6,489; value..... 516,694

Average number restored each year, 2,163..... 2,163 × $79.62 = 172,231

Average annual value of each, $79.62.....

FIRST PAYMENT TO NEW PENSIONERS, INCLUDING ARREARS.

New pensioners who will probably be placed on the rolls during year ending June 30, 1891:

First payments, 51,921..... 51,921 × $442..... 22,949,082

Average value of each first payment, $442.....

[During the year ending June 30, 1887:

First payments due (paid and unpaid) 58,702..... 58,702 × $495.75 = $29,091,773

Average value of each of such payments, $495.75.....

During the year ending June 30, 1888:

First payments due (paid and unpaid) 70,856..... 70,856 × $349.51 = 24,765,328

Average value of each of such payments, $349.51.....

During year ending June 30, 1889:

First payments due (paid and unpaid) 56,234..... 56,234 × $480.26 = 22,365,708

Average value of each of such payments, $480.26.....

During the three years ending June 30, 1889:

First payments due (paid and unpaid), 182,792.....

Total amount due (paid and unpaid), $90,864,725.....

Average number due (paid and unpaid), 60,931.....

Average amount of each payment, $442.....

Average amount of each annual payment, $26,954,907.....

AVERAGE HALF-YEAR PAYMENTS TO NEW PENSIONERS.

Half-year pensions to 51,921 new pensioners, being average of year, 51,921 × $65.59..... 3,405,498

EXPENSE OF LAST SICKNESS AND BURIAL OF PENSIONERS.

Settlements by Third Auditor of the Treasury under section 4718, R. S., for last sickness and burials of pensioners who die without heirs, and without assets sufficient to meet such expense (see also act of March 1, 1889, 25 Stats. at Large, page 782), 2,500 claims at $50 each..... 125,000

[Claims settled under sec. 4718, R. S., during year ending June 30, 1887:

Number, 2,495..... 2,495 × $45.00 = $113,997

Average amount of each, $45.00.....

Claims settled under sec. 4718, R. S., during year ending June 30, 1888:

Number, 2,328..... 2,328 × $55.88 = $130,089

Average amount of each, $55.88.....

Claims settled under sec. 4718, R. S., during year ending June 30, 1889:

Number, 2,306..... 2,306 × $50.76 = $117,976

Average amount of each, $50.76.....

Claims settled under sec. 4718, R. S., during the three years ending June 30, 1889:

Number, 7,029.....

Total amount paid, $356,052.....

Average claims settled for each year, 2,343..... 2,343 × $50.05 = $118,673

Average amount of each, $50.05.....

PENSIONERS INCREASED AND REINSTATED.

During year ending June 30, 1891, pensions probably increased 50,000 claims at $50 each..... 2,500,000

[During year ending June 30, 1887:

Pensions increased 32,107..... 32,107 × $90.71 = $2,912,591

Average annual increase to each, $90.71.....

During the year ending June 30, 1888:

Pensions increased 45,716..... 45,716 × $49.68 = 2,271,445

Average annual increase to each, $49.68.....

During year ending June 30, 1889:

Pensions increased 71,198..... 71,198 × $59.41 = 4,229,794

Average annual increase to each, $59.41.....

During the three years ending June 30, 1889:

Pensions increased, 149,021.....

Amount of increase, $9,413,830.....

Average increase, 49,674..... 49,674 × $63.17 = 3,137,907

Average annual increase to each, $63.17.....

Total estimate for amount required to pay pensions for the year ending June 30, 1891..... 97,090,761

NUMBER OF PENSIONERS ON ROLLS.

Pensioners July 1, 1889..... 490,725

New cases to be added during 1890..... 51,921

To be dropped during 1890..... 17,862

To be restored during 1890..... 523,784

Probable number of pensioners July 1, 1890..... 525,682

Probable number to be added during fiscal year 1891..... 51,921

Total..... 577,603

Probable number to be dropped during 1891..... 17,211

Probable number to be restored during 1891..... 560,392

Probable number of pensioners July 1, 1891..... 2,037

Probable number of pensioners July 1, 1891..... 562,429

The following are the items of appropriations contained in the bill under consideration:

For the payment of pensions..... $97,090,761

For fees and expenses of examining surgeons..... 1,000,000

For salaries of agents..... 72,000

For clerk-hire..... 220,000

For fuel..... 750

For lights..... 750

For stationery and other necessary expenses..... 25,000

For rents..... 18,200

Total..... 98,427,461

The following is a statement of the quarterly disbursements of the Pension Office during the years 1887, 1888, and 1889:

Amount of disbursements of Army and Navy pensions each quarter from July 1, 1886, to December 31, 1889.

Mr. MORROW. If the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] will now indicate his pleasure as to the time to be consumed in general debate, perhaps we can come to some agreement.

Mr. SAYERS. I suggest to the gentleman in charge of this bill that he allow the debate to run on for the present and we shall be able to take a vote this evening before the adjournment.

Mr. MORROW. Very well.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. MORROW] reserves the balance of his time, fifteen minutes.

Mr. MORROW. Yes, sir. Before surrendering the floor I desire to say that I have a number of tables which I would like permission to print in connection with my remarks.

There being no objection, leave was granted.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, the pending bill carries an appropriation amounting to $98,427,461 and covers only eight items of expenditure, which are:

For the payment of pensions.....	$97,090,761
For fees and expenses of examining surgeons.....	1,000,000
For salaries of agents.....	72,000
For clerk-hire.....	220,000
For fuel.....	750
For lights.....	750
For stationery and other necessary expenses.....	25,000
For rents.....	18,200

Total..... 98,427,461

Though nearly a quarter of a century has elapsed since the termination of our civil war, the appropriation for pensions has been largely increased each successive year, until it has now culminated into nearly $100,000,000 for the fiscal year 1891, to say nothing of the very large deficiency which will surely follow though there be no further legislation upon this subject.

Mr. Chairman, I was much impressed with the remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. REILLY] on last Saturday, when he spoke of the responsibilities of the three great branches of our Government to the people—the executive, the judicial, and the legislative—and especially of the responsibility which rests upon Congress, the law-making power.

The Committee on Appropriations have for consideration estimates submitted to Congress by the heads of the several Departments, involving enormous expenditures. These estimates, to be properly understood, require the most thorough examination; and I must say for the gentlemen who constitute that committee that they, each and all of them, have exhibited the most earnest and praiseworthy desire to fully meet and to properly discharge the duties which have devolved upon them.

But, sir, since my entrance into this House, more than four years ago, I have been struck with one peculiar circumstance, which is, that within my knowledge, and since I have been here, no inquiry has ever been instituted into the methods that have been employed in the administration of the Bureau of Pensions.

Other offices and bureaus have been criticised, investigated, and denounced by the one party or the other, but the administration of the Pension Office, in the matter of expenditure, has not been seriously questioned for years past. It seems to have been taken for granted that its management has not only been wise, but to no small extent economical; in fact, too much so to satisfy the demands of the soldier element of the country.

Mr. Chairman, many subjects of importance continually arise for consideration. However interesting they may be for the time, they are generally short-lived, and after a limited period of excitement, sometimes intense, they pass from the public mind and are soon forgotten.

Not so, however, is it with the questions of taxation and expenditure. They are ever present, and their presence will continue, as it should, so long as our Government exists.

And it is right that these questions should not only be always with us, but also that they should not diminish in importance; because it is the people whom we represent that must respond to the demands of taxation, and it is their treasure, not the Government's, which must be expended.

The matter of expenditure is practical, not theoretical. Every dollar that is taken from the Treasury, whether rightfully or wrongfully, should be scrupulously accounted for, and the account should be first had with the body whose authority is necessary to its outgoing.

It will be admitted, even by the most liberal gentlemen upon this floor, that $98,427,461 is quite a large sum to be expended for one single purpose, and the questions, how does it compare with other appropriations of a like character? and why has so large a sum become necessary? are not only pertinent, but they press for an immediate and a direct answer.

Sir, from time immemorial, from the very organization of this Government, the pension system has been recognized. The first appropriation of the kind was made in 1791, and amounted to $175,813.88. It, therefore, did not originate in and because of the late war, but it was steadily maintained, without a single intermission, through all the years preceding. I hold in my hand a table, the sum total of which is $1,105,326,017.17. It shows the aggregate annual amount of pension expenditures from July 1, 1860, to January 1, 1890.

An examination of this table discloses that, between these dates, 1,299,580 applications for pensions were filed, that 816,469 applications were allowed, and that there were 508,419 pensioners enrolled and being paid on the 1st day of last January. It must be borne in mind, however, that in the list of claims filed between the 1st day of July, 1889, and the 1st day of January, 1890, are not included 197 applications for bounty land and 82,178 applications for increase of pensions; and in the list of claims allowed during the six months are not embraced 26,647 applications for increase of pension, 5,321 reissues on account of new disability, and 2,921 applications which come under the head of "arrears, accrued, and miscellaneous."

I submit this table to the committee and do most earnestly insist that, when it shall have appeared in the RECORD, each and every item shall be closely scrutinized. The figures are official and may be relied upon as affording, to that extent, a correct account of the transactions of the Pension Office during the years named.

Sir, it ought not to be forgotten that since July 1, 1860, and up to January 1, 1890, the vast sum of $1,105,326,017.17 has been expended for pensions alone, and this fact is of itself a conclusive answer to the charges which have been so often repeated upon this floor, that Congress has been unmindful of the just claims which the soldiers of the late war have upon the country because of the services rendered the Government during the time of its greatest peril.

How it can be said, in the face of this immense and undisputed expenditure, that the rights of the soldier have not been fully recognized and met is to my mind beyond comprehension.

Shall not $1,105,326,017.17 count for anything?

And shall not the fact that an annual expenditure of largely more than $100,000,000, for many years to come, must be maintained for them, even though no additional legislation be enacted, be taken into consideration when services upon the one side and gratitude upon the other are to be contrasted, weighed, and measured?

But, sir, in the circumstances which surround us it would be entirely unsafe to estimate for the future. One thing, however, we do know, and that is since July 1, 1860, we have expended $1,105,326,017.17 for pensions.

Mr. MORROW. That is for all pensions.

Mr. SAYERS. Certainly.

Mr. HOOKER. How much is that a year?

Mr. SAYERS. It is from July 1, 1860, up to January 1, 1890. The gentleman can easily average it.

The amount expended for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, was $89,131,968.44, and for the last six months, mark you, $53,207,604; so it can be readily seen that the increase of expenditure for the present year must necessarily exceed the increase of expenditure during the preceding year.

Mr. BLOUNT. What do you estimate the figures at?

Mr. SAYERS. It is estimated that the expenditure for the present year will run to as much as $103,000,000.

Mr. MORROW. The gentleman will recollect the fact that in this $103,000,000 there are some seven or eight millions of dollars which came over from the year ending the 30th of June, 1889, for unpaid pensions at that time.

Mr. SAYERS. The gentleman will, however, remember that the Committee on Appropriations at the second session of the Fiftieth Congress reported and provided for a deficiency of $8,000,000.

Mr. MORROW. For the preceding year?

Mr. SAYERS. Yes.

Mr. MORROW. The actual deficiency for 1890 is about $15,000,000.

Mr. SAYERS. I believe so; but 1890 has not yet terminated, and it can not be said with certainty what will be the final outcome.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in order that the method of our pension expenditures may be the better understood, I submit to the committee another table:

Amounts paid for pensions to the survivors of the war of 1812, and to the widows of those who served in that war, since 1871, and to the survivors of the war with Mexico, and to the widows of those who served in that war, since 1887.

Deduct war of 1812 pensions from March 9, 1878 ($38,459,613.39), and Mexican war pensions ($6,217,833.42)..... 44,677,446.81

Total..... 1,060,648,570.36

In explanation of this statement, I desire to say that by the act of February 4, 1862, all pensioners who had taken or should take up arms against the Government, or who in any manner should encourage the Confederates or manifest a sympathy with their cause, were stricken from the roll; and that the act of February 14, 1871, placed upon the rolls all who served in the war of 1812 for sixty days and did not come within the proscriptive clause of the act of February 4, 1862. The act of March 9, 1878, restored to the roll all survivors of the war of 1812 and of the Indian wars whose names had been stricken from the roll under the act of February 4, 1862; and where such survivors had died, their widows became entitled to pensions, but not to any arrears for the time during which the act of 1862 was in force.

The survivors of the Mexican war and their widows were not pensioned until January 29, 1887. It will be seen that between February 14, 1871, and January 1, 1890, the sum of $38,459,613.39 was paid to the war of 1812 pensioners, and that between January 29, 1887, and January 1, 1890, the sum of $6,217,833.42 was paid to the Mexican war pensioners. Deducting these two amounts from what was paid to pensioners of all kinds between July 1, 1860, and January 1, 1890, we have left the sum of $1,060,648,570.36, fully 95 per cent. of which, if not more, has gone to the pensioners of our civil war.

But, sir, let us now examine the pension system from another point of view; that is, from the standpoint of the table which I now offer.

Table showing the number of pensioners on the roll, annual value of pensions, disbursements on account of pensions as reported by the Treasury, 1879 to 1889, inclusive, and excess of disbursements over values of pensions.

Total excess of disbursements over annual value of pensions from 1879 to 1889, inclusive..... 252,869,816.42

This statement informs us that the excess of disbursements over the annual value of pensions is $252,869,816.42. Gentlemen can examine it for themselves. They will be amply repaid for their trouble.

Mr. HEARD. Let me ask the gentleman from Texas a question. I wish to understand this point. The gentleman uses the expression "annual value of the pensions." Does he mean the amount received by the pensioners themselves?

Mr. SAYERS. What I mean by the annual value of the pension is this: It is what is called for in the certificate of the pension; but at the time he receives his first certificate of pension he generally becomes entitled to arrears, which frequently amount to as much as $10,000. The sums vary of course.

Mr. BLOUNT. Is that the item which makes up the excess to which you refer.

Mr. SAYERS. Yes, in a very great measure, if not altogether.

Mr. BLAND. And the excess is the increase over the face of the pension arising from the arrears.

Mr. SAYERS. That is correct.

Mr. MORROW. Let me understand the statement of my friend from Texas. The total amount that this table shows, as I understand him, is the aggregate of the arrears, the first arrears.

Mr. SAYERS. Yes, as stated in that table.

Mr. MORROW. Or about $25,000,000 annually?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. But the statement will also include the accumulations since the extension of the arrears act?

Mr. SAYERS. Certainly.

Mr. CONGER. Do I understand that the table the gentleman has just exhibited shows the difference between the total appropriation for pensions and the amount the pensioners themselves received?

Mr. SAYERS. Oh, no; not at all. The total expenditure for pensions and the annual value of the pensions. The pensioner receives a great deal more sometimes than his annual pension calls for.

Mr. BLOUNT. You mean the annual value to distinguish it from arrears?

Mr. SAYERS. Yes; that which he receives over and above what the face of the certificate declares.

Mr. PETERS. I think, with the permission of the gentleman from Texas, I can make that clear by stating that the first payment amounts this year to $22,000,000, and that of course includes arrears.

Mr. SAYERS. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. CONGER. But you include in that expenditure the whole investigation that must be gone through with before the pension is allowed?

Mr. SAYERS. The papers, Mr. Chairman, to which I have referred are official.

Mr. CONGER. I know; but do I understand you to mean that you include the whole expenditure for running the machinery of the Pension Office?

Mr. MORROW. Oh, no.

Mr. SAYERS. No; that is an entirely different matter.

Mr. CUTCHEON. If I understand the gentleman correctly, he illustrates the point he is making in this way: If each pension were to commence to be paid from the time from which it is ultimately allowed, at the uniform rate of so much per month, then the annual value of the pension-roll would be the amount of the pension appropriations, and not exceed it.

Mr. SAYERS. Certainly.

Mr. CUTCHEON. But we are constantly allowing pensions that were pending. I have myself knowledge of the fact of a pension in which I was interested which was finally granted after pending for twenty-one years, and, when granted, of course arrears followed, being included in the first payment. Now, the aggregate of the first payment, as I understand the gentleman, increased by reason of that fact, is the sum of the gentleman's figures.

Mr. SAYERS. Of course, it constitutes the excess.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Over and above the annual value of the pension?

Mr. SAYERS. It does.

Mr. HEARD. Let me ask the gentleman if the tables which he has prepared, and from which he speaks, show the increase of expenditures on account of pensions for the last year?

Mr. SAYERS. They do.

Mr. HEARD. Now, I want to ask the gentleman what proportion of the increase was on account of new claims allowed or new allowances, and what proportion is on account of the increase of claims already allowed?

Mr. SAYERS. I can not give the gentleman that information.

Mr. PETERS. If the gentleman will allow me, I can state the entire annual amount allowed for increase is between three and four millions of dollars.

Mr. SAYERS. That is an estimate.

Mr. MORROW. In this statement is the report for the last three years, which will show that. Now, for instance, in 1887, the admitted claims were 32,107 and the annual value $2,912,591. In 1886 this increased to 45,716 claims of an annual value of $2,271,445, and for 1889, 71,080 admitted claims, amounting to $4,229,794.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I now desire to call the attention of the committee briefly to a comparison of expenditures for the first six months of each of the past three fiscal years and of the present fiscal year, as shown by this table:

Amount of disbursements of Army and Navy pensions for the six months ending December 31—

1886.....	$35,016,500.09
1887.....	37,274,628.27
1888.....	43,789,881.90
1889.....	53,063,052.73

Here it will be seen that the expenditures for the six months ending December 31, 1889, were greater than the six months ending December 31, 1886, by $18,046,552.64, and than the six months ending December 31, 1887, by $15,790,324.46, and than for a like time preceding December 31, 1888, by $9,273,170.83.

Truly, the process of evolution has been not only steady, but rapid. The development has been almost marvelous in view of the information which has been given Congress as to the prospective cost of much of the legislation now on our statute-books.

Mr. MORROW. Did you state in that connection the number of pensions for that period?

Mr. SAYERS. No, sir; I will get to that directly.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I think it is peculiarly appropriate at this time to call the attention of the House and country to a comparison between the pension expenditures and other expenditures of the Government. The pension expenditures from March 4, 1789, to June 30, 1861, during a period of seventy-two and one-third years, amounted to $80,738,327.06, and embraced pensioners of the Revolutionary war, of the war of 1812 with Great Britain, of the Indian wars, and of the Mexican war.

Mr. ROGERS. And the regular Army.

Mr. SAYERS. From the 1st of July, 1861, to January 1, 1890, twenty-eight and a half years, we expended $1,094,253,552.62. The excess of pension disbursements for the last fiscal year over the pension disbursements from March 4, 1789, to June 30, 1861, a period of seventy-two and one-third years, is $8,393,641.38. The excess of pension disbursements from July 1, 1861, to January 1, 1890, a period of twenty-eight and a half years, over the disbursement from March 4, 1789, to June 30, 1861, being a period of seventy-two and one-third years, is $1,013,515,225.56.

Let us now see what our various wars have cost. In the war of 1812—from June 18, 1812, to February 17, 1815—there were 85,000 regulars and 471,622 militiamen and volunteers, being a sum total of 556,622 militiamen, regulars, and volunteers in that war. The expenditures for the support of the Army and Navy in that war amounted to $112,912,543.54, including the years 1812, 1813, 1814, 1815, and 1816, from which it will be seen that the expenditure for pensions, as provided for in this bill, is only about $14,485,082.54 less than the cost of the war of 1812, and for a period of five years.

As to the war with Mexico. There were 104,730 men, regulars and volunteers, in that war, and the expenditures for the support of the Army and the Navy for the three years—1846, 1847, and 1848—were $97,705,860.82. So that the cost of that war was $721,600.18 less than our pension-roll will cost us during the next fiscal year, as indicated in the bill under consideration. The estimated cost of the Revolutionary war to the United States is about $135,193,703; of the war of 1812, $107,159,003, and of the war with Mexico, $100,000,000. The amount recommended in this bill for pension expenditures during the fiscal year 1891 is $98,427,461, and I am confident that it will fall short by at least $20,000,000.

The estimated cost of the late civil war, including all expenses growing out of the war, was a little more than $6,189,929,009. The number of regulars and volunteers—Army and Navy—engaged amounted to 2,213,365. The expenditure for the support of the Army and Navy from March 4, 1789, to June 30, 1889, was only $5,844,038,811.20. The gross expenditures of the Government from March 4, 1789, to June 30, 1889, was $23,245,903,153.01. The expenditures for the Army and Navy from July 1, 1861, to June 30, 1862, amounted to $431,813,915.28; from July 1, 1862, to June 30, 1863, $666,575,647.13; from July 1, 1863, to June 30, 1864, $776,096,012.40; and from July 1, 1864, to June 30, 1865, $1,153,307,834.13.

In the expenditures for the Army and Navy are included the cost of their maintenance in war and in peace; the construction, armament, and equipment of vessels; the building and maintenance of yards; the erection and armament of fortifications and arsenals; quartermaster, commissary, ordnance, and medical stores. In the gross expenditures of the Government are included the expenditures of the War and Navy Departments, for Indians, pensions, miscellaneous, premiums, interest, and the public debt.

Mr. Chairman, when these figures are read and compared, when they are studied, analyzed, and reflected upon, it will be found that there is not a particle of ground upon which those who are claiming that the Union soldier has not been fairly treated and is entitled to increased pensions, can stand.

The trouble is that the deserving soldiers, the men who bore the burden and sustained the brunt of the war, and who have been disabled through wounds or disease and are not able to support themselves by their own labor, are not the only beneficiaries of this immense and unparalleled bounty of the Government. Such men have been almost swallowed up in the host of unentitled men whose claims have been advocated and put through by the Pension Office at the instance of pension attorneys, who have grown rich through their successful operations, and whom a very distinguished Republican Senator has denounced "as being, with some honorable exceptions, the worst vermin that have ever infested the body politic."

Mr. Chairman, from the records of the Pension Office we learn that there were upon the roll, because of the late civil war, on the 1st of January last, 474,991 pensioners as against the 2,213,365 men who served in that war.

This, of course, does not indicate the number of pensions that have been granted because of that war.

Comparing these numbers with the numbers which have served in all previous wars and also with the number of pensions growing out of such wars, we find that the number of troops which were in the service of the United States, whether in the Army or in the Navy, during all the wars previous to 1861, was 1,115,853, and that the number of pensions allowed prior to 1866 was:

For the war of the Revolution.....	62,069
For the war of 1812 with Great Britain.....	67,048
For the war with Mexico.....	7,619
For Indian and all other wars.....	1,389
For the Navy.....	3,563

Making a total of..... 141,688

This comparison serves the purpose of showing that, as it now stands, the soldiers in our civil war have been much more liberally treated than those who fought for the Republic in all previous wars. But I was asked a few moments ago as to the pensioners on the roll for the past several years. Replying to that question, Mr. Chairman, I find that on the 30th day of June, 1888, there were upon the roll 419,800 pensioners of the late war, 21,164 of the Mexican war, and 11,593 of the war of 1812; and on June 30, 1889, 455,887 pensioners of the late war, 23,271 of the Mexican war, and 10,567 of the war of 1812; and that on January 1, 1890, there were 474,991 pensioners of the late war, 23,568 of the Mexican war, and 9,860 of the war of 1812.

This shows an increase on June 30, 1889, over June 30, 1888, as to the pensioners of the late war, of 36,087, and on January 1, 1890, over June 30, 1889, of 19,104; and as to the pensioners of the Mexican war, an increase on June 30, 1889, over June 30, 1888, of 2,107, and on January 1, 1890, over June 30, 1889, of 297; and as to the pensioners of the war of 1812, a decrease on June 30, 1889, from June 30, 1888, of 1,026, and on January 1, 1890, from June 30, 1889, of 707.

We will now examine, very briefly, the work of the Pension Office during the past six months.

The number of claims that have been filed during this time is 133,550.

Mr. CUTCHEON. That includes the increase cases also.

Mr. SAYERS. It does. Itemizing, I find the claims filed between June 30, 1889, and January 1, 1890, to be:

Revolutionary.....	0
War of 1812.....	108
Mexican war.....	1,163
Old war.....	117
Bounty land.....	198
Late war, original.....	50,530
Late war, increase.....	83,434
Total.....	135,550

And the number of claims allowed to be:

Revolutionary war.....	0
War of 1812.....	58
Mexican war.....	682
Late war, original.....	27,050
Late war, increase.....	26,976
Reissues (new disability).....	5,390
Restoration.....	722
Arrears, accrued, and miscellaneous.....	2,947
Total.....	63,825

And the number of claims pending December 28, 1889, to be—

Original invalid.....	182,955
Original widows.....	75,370
Increase invalid.....	199,776
Increase and accrued widows.....	2,278
Total pending.....	460,379
Rejected claims with evidence attached.....	36,677

Total claims that must be considered..... 497,056

And the number of pensioners on the roll January 1, 1890, to be—

Revolutionary war service.....	27
War of 1812 survivors.....	513
War of 1812 widows.....	9,347
Mexican war survivors.....	17,114
Mexican war widows.....	6,454
Late civil war invalids.....	373,102
Late civil war widows and others.....	101,889
Total.....	508,446

In the light, Mr. Chairman, of these facts, I can not appreciate the statement of the gentleman from California [Mr. MORROW] that the highest point of the pension expenditures will be reached in 1894. The vigilance and activity of the pension agents, I am informed by those who are entirely competent to speak upon the subject, continues unabated. Every nook and corner of the earth is being diligently and thoroughly searched in the hope that a pension claim may be secured for attention.

The high-water mark, I fear, is yet far in the distance, and it will be many years before the tax-payers of the country will begin to feel the effect of the declining ebb of the flood.

At this point it may be well to invite the attention of the committee to a very anomalous feature of the pension system. It appears that there are 128 different monthly rates of pension, beginning with $1 per month and reaching as high as $416.66 per month. Between these two limits the vast body of pensioners stand. Without taking the time to review the entire list, I will ask the committee to consider only a few of these rates. As instances, I notice that there are 26,875 pensioners who draw $2 per month; 69,048 who receive $4; 50,397 who get $6; 69,828 who are allowed $8; 24,535 who are paid $10; 28,431 who receive $12; and so on until the one who has been given the largest rate is reached.

It will also be noted that fractions of dollars and of cents are not omitted, so exceedingly fine have the lines of discrimination been drawn. Here the drain upon the Treasury has been so very small as to be scarcely perceptible; there the stream breaks out into larger and bolder current; and finally it reaches the volume of a majestic river.

Whether this be the fault of the laws which have been enacted or of administration, or of both, I am unable to say.

Mr. Chairman, it would be impossible within the time allotted me to review all of the legislation which has led to these enormous expenditures. Very generally such legislation has been hastily passed through both Houses of Congress without criticism or inquiry as to the expense involved.

A proposition is made to enlarge the pension-list or to increase the expenditure for the service, and it is accepted and enacted into law sometimes with a haste and carelessness that are not altogether creditable to the legislative branch of the Government. We all know this to be true. As an illustration, Mr. Chairman, permit me to call attention to the arrears act of January 25, 1879, and the manner of its passage through the House.

It was "suspension day" and the bill was in the hands of the committee. It had never been reported to the House. That there may be no mistake, I will read what transpired in regard to this bill. The proceedings are to be found on page 4874, volume 31, of the RECORD, and are as follows:

ARREARS OF PENSIONS.

Mr. HASKELL. I move that the rules be suspended and that the Committee on Invalid Pensions be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 4234) to provide that all pensions on account of death or wounds received or disease contracted in the service of the United States during the late war of the rebellion, which have been granted or which shall hereafter be granted, shall commence from the date of death or discharge from the service of the United States, for the payment of arrears of pensions, and other purposes; and that the bill be passed, with an amendment.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows.

It is proposed to amend the bill by inserting as section 4 the following: "No claim agent or other person shall be entitled to receive any compensation for services in making application for arrears in pensions."

And also to change section 4 to section 5.

Mr. BANNING. I understand that this is the bill reported from the Committee on Pensions and recommended by them.

Mr. RIDDLE. No, sir; it is not the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate is not in order.

Mr. BANNING. I ask for the reading of that section which was not contained in the bill reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. The bill was not reported from the committee at all.

Mr. EDEN. That is in the nature of debate, and is not in order on a motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I call for the yeas and nays upon the motion to suspend the rules. [Cries of "Tellers!"] I withdraw the demand for the yeas and nays for the present.

The question was put on the motion to suspend the rules; and on a division there were—yeas 90, nays 20; no quorum voting.

Mr. HASKELL. I call for tellers.

Mr. BROWNE. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. Can not we understand whether this is the bill that was reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions or not?

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. I will state that it is not the bill. I have been trying to get the bill reported unanimously from the committee acted upon, but have failed to do so.

Mr. CONGER. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 161, nays 61, not voting 65; as follows.

So (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended, and the bill passed with the amendment.

Has any legislation of an important character ever been considered by this House in so rapid and negligent a manner? No inquiry of moment is made; no information is asked for; not a single word of criticism falls from the lips of any one.

The bill passes the House under these circumstances by a two-thirds vote and goes to the Senate.

That body gives the measure more consideration. It is referred to the appropriate committee and is reported back to the Senate. Some debate was had upon the bill, a portion of which I will submit to this committee. It is to be found on page 484, volume 33, of the RECORD:

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I should like the chairman of the Committee on Pensions to indicate to us something as to the amount of money which will be required to pay the pensions here provided for. We ought not to vote blindly on this matter.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, in 1876, when a similar measure was pending before the Senate, I addressed a communication to the Commissioner of Pensions, and asked him for information in regard to the amount which would be required to make the bill operative. I received from him a statement which was printed as Miscellaneous Document No. 113, at the first session of the Forty-fourth Congress, which gives in detail, as far as it could be ascertained from the Pension Office, the amount that would be required to pay the arrears, both of invalids and widows and dependents, in each year since the adoption of section 4709 of the Revised Statutes.

I do not know that it will be necessary to read specifically the annual amounts, but up to the 1st of January, 1876, the Commissioner reports that there were 16,454 invalid cases to which the limitation of the section applied and the estimated amount of arrears at that time was $9,529,775. The number of widows and dependents was 5,145. The amount required to pay the arrears of those would be $3,887,334; making a total at that time of $13,417,109.

There have been three years since that date, and of course I can only estimate what amount would be required since this computation was made; but taking the estimate for 1875 as an average, my judgment would be that this sum should be added not less than $5,000,000 for claims since allowed to which the limitation now applies. Of course these estimates are very largely in the nature of surmises, because we can not tell until the bill is put practically in operation exactly what will be required.

Mr. CONKLING. Making in all how much, as the Senator has it there?

Mr. INGALLS. Making in all, up to the 1st of January, 1876, the sum of $13,417,109, and that amount I should judge would be increased, by not less than $5,000,000 up to the 1st of January, 1879.

Mr. CONKLING. Which makes about $19,000,000?

Mr. INGALLS. I should judge somewhere from eighteen to twenty million dollars in round numbers. Of course, it is impossible to make anything like an accurate calculation upon matters of this kind.

The distinguished Senator, Mr. Chairman, was quite right in adding the saving clause to his statement. It is to be supposed that he was not unaware that the cupidity of man, the searching and everywhere present activity of the pension agent, and the exigencies of party were three prime factors, of immeasurable and undefinable influence, that would necessarily have to be taken into the account in order to reach even an approximate estimate of the cost which the bill then under consideration would inevitably entail upon the Government. And it will be so in regard to every other measure of like character.

This bill, so hastily passed, received the signature of the President on the 25th day of January, 1879. It had been in force seven years, when the Commissioner of Pensions, in reply to a communication from the Hon. SAMUEL J. RANDALL, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, officially stated that under and because of said act and of the limitation act of March 3, 1879, expenditures had been made to June 30—

1883.....	$105,255,682.00
1884.....	22,451,997.25
1885.....	28,842,362.81
1885, in cases on rolls January 25, 1879.....	24,501,896.87

Total amount expended to June 30, 1885, as results of the acts of January 25 and March 3, 1879..... 179,401,872.93

To this amount must be added the expenditures under and because of said acts since July 1, 1885, as estimated by the gentleman from California [Mr. MORROW], $73,030,500, and we have $252,433,372.93 as the result of these two acts, and the end is not yet.

What is still in store for us as the ultimate and total consequence of this legislation no man can safely predict. In view of the enormous expenditures which have been made because of these acts, it is indeed fortunate that the limitation act of March 3, 1879, was passed.

Otherwise the expenditures would have been vastly increased. This limitation was, I believe, placed by the Senate upon an appropriation bill that had already passed the House.

I have not the time, Mr. Chairman, to refer to other pension legislation, but will now, hurriedly and briefly, call the attention of the committee to some features of the administration of the service.

Before doing so, however, I desire to impress upon the minds of gentlemen that the plain, direct, and undisputed tendency, for years past, of both legislation and administration has been and is now to give applicants the readiest and easiest access to the inner chamber of the Pension Office. Safeguard after safeguard has been removed, until scarcely an obstacle stands in the way of an unscrupulous applicant. Sir, I know of no better authority upon the question of profligate and fraudulent expenditures in the matter of pensions than Hon. J. A. Bentley, a former Commissioner.

In a letter to the Secretary of the Interior of February 4, 1870, this gentleman, in his official capacity, said:

In each of my three annual reports I invited attention to the defects in the system now provided by law for the adjustment of pension claims. The passage of the act of January 25, 1879, very greatly emphasizes the necessity for immediate and efficient legislation in that direction, and I therefore again allude to the subject.

The present system, being entirely ex parte in its proceedings, furnishes extraordinary facilities for the successful prosecution of fraudulent and unscrupulous claims, thus inviting the presentation of that character of claims.

As the law stood previous to the passage of the arrears act the temptation to fraud was very great, but since that act it is many times increased. Then the claims were comparatively few in which any considerable sum of money would be the immediate reward of a successfully prosecuted claim, but since that not every invalid claim allowed, as well as many of the other classes, will have in it from several hundred to several thousand dollars due the claimant at the first payment.

It is estimated by those best informed that there have been not less than $2,000,000 paid out annually for fraudulent pensions. In my judgment, the estimate is below, rather than above, the actual amount.

With the temptation to the commission of fraud so greatly increased and the road to the Treasury easy through ex parte proceedings, the consequences can easily be foretold. Not only will the people be taxed to pay an annual tribute to the unworthy amounting to several millions of dollars, but with so many claims pending, and still to be presented, and the avenues to the two or three hundred persons, more or less, who are charged with their adjustment, open for the approach of interested parties, it will be little less than a miracle if extensive official corruption does not follow.

In transmitting this letter to the House of Representatives Mr. Schurz, who was then the Secretary of the Interior, wrote:

The fact that such large amounts will be required to pay arrears of pension furnishes an additional reason for urging the adoption of some means for the protection of the Government against frauds in pension claims more efficient than can be had under the present system, which rests almost entirely upon ex parte evidence.

And, again, in his annual report of November 1, 1879, the same Commissioner says:

Besides being cumbersome and expensive, the present system is an open door to the Treasury for the perpetration of fraud. The affidavits in support of claims have the same appearance to the officers of the bureau, whether false or true. The rules which are established in relation to the production of evidence in attempting to exclude the frauds often work a hardship upon the honest claimant. He finds himself, through the death or imperfect recollection of witnesses or for some other cause, unable to comply with them, is often defeated, while the fraudulent claimant, who will manufacture the necessary testimony to meet them, succeeds in his claim.

The large sum of money which the claimant will receive upon the allowance of his claim and the ease with which a fraudulent claim may be manufactured constitute a powerful inducement to dishonest persons to present fraudulent claims, and these occupy the attention of the office in attempting to determine their merits, which ought to be given to the meritorious claims, and thus, by the encouragement of fraudulent claims, the system operates to delay the others to such a degree that, in many cases, it results in a practical denial of justice. And the pursuit of the necessary medical inquiries is little better than a farce. There are about 1,700 surgeons, for the most part neighborhood practitioners, who make the examinations of the claimants in their respective neighborhoods, and report their condition to the Commissioner of Pensions, for which service they are paid by the Government a fee of $1 (formerly $2) for each examination.

Without reflecting upon the intelligence and integrity of these surgeons in general, it is a fact that the reports of these examiners too often bear evidence that they were of the most superficial character, and not unfrequently are they found to be untruthful in whole or in part, sometimes to the prejudice of the Government and then again to the prejudice of the claimant. And the consequence is, the medical referees and other professional gentlemen, whose business it is to review the medical side of the cases, are oftentimes as much in the dark in relation to the existence and character of the claimant's alleged disease and the degree to which he is disabled by it as though no examination had been made, and not unfrequently arrive at wrong conclusions, and injustice follows, either to the claimant or to the Government.

It would seem that the fact that ex parte methods in the ascertainment of truth in doubtful or disputed questions have been condemned by the civilized world for centuries, and that open public proceedings, bringing parties and witnesses face to face that they may be interrogated, such as are proposed by the new plan, have been adopted by the unanimous judgment of enlightened people, based upon the common observation of mankind, ought to leave no question as to the propriety of discontinuing the ex parte system in pension claims.

There is another aspect of the ex parte system which should receive the most earnest consideration on the part of the Government, and that is its fruitfulness of crime against the laws, in the nature of perjury, forgery, and false personation.

The following table shows the number of the two first-named offenses committed in the cases of 500 pensioners whose names have been dropped from the rolls since July 1, 1876, because the pensions were obtained by fraud:

	Invalid.	Widows, etc.	Total.
Number of claims.....	229	271	500
False affidavits made by—
Officers.....	291	95	386
Comrades.....	179	69	248
Civilians.....	763	1,687	2,450
Total.....	1,233	1,851	3,084
Total number of affidavits filed in the cases.....	1,581	2,816	4,397
Number of forgeries.....	6	86	92

It will be seen that 70 per cent. of these affidavits were false. There had been paid to these 500 pensioners before their fraud was discovered $947,225.

Mr. Chairman, I commend to the committee the argument and statement of this Commissioner, a Republican of much experience in this branch of the service and a gentleman of undisputed integrity and of undoubted ability. It truthfully and forcibly applied to the condition of things as they then existed. It will also apply with equal or greater truth and force to the service as it has since existed and as it now exists.

The accuracy of these statements, so far as I am informed, has never been questioned.

But, sir, let us pass to matters of more recent date. I will now call the attention of the committee to facts which have transpired within the past two years, and which are still fresh in the memories of those whom they more directly affect than ourselves. As I have before said, since my membership of this House there has not, so far as my recollection goes, been an investigation of the Pension Office. Its records are practically a sealed book to the House of Representatives except in so far as the Commissioner has revealed them to us in his reports; therefore I shall confine myself to such facts only as I have, through my own efforts, been able to ascertain.

Mr. MORROW. Has the gentleman seen any evidence of reluctance on the part of the present Commissioner to furnish the committee with whatever information they might require?

Mr. SAYERS. I have no charge to enter against the present Commissioner; I have made no charge against him. It is of the administration of his immediate predecessor and of the present Assistant Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Bussey, that I propose to speak.

Mr. Chairman, on the 25th of January last the Commissioner of Pensions was asked by the chairman of the pension subcommittee, at my request, to give the names of all officials, clerks, and employes in the Pension Office and connected therewith who have been rated since March 27, 1889; the dates of their ratemement, respectively; the salary and the pension which each one, when rated, was receiving; the pension which each one so rated is entitled to receive by virtue of such ratemement, and the amount of arrears which accrued to each one under and because of such ratemement. On the 12th instant he furnished the following answer:

Names of employes of Pension Bureau who are pensioned and who were rated between March 28, 1889, and September 1, 1889, inclusive.

f First Deputy Commissioner.

Suppose, Mr. Chairman, that this list should be read around every camp-fire of the Grand Army of the Republic throughout the country, can it not be easily imagined what would be thought and said of these officials—all of them drawing good salaries—all in the Pension Office, and in daily and direct communication with its chief and his immediate advisers and subordinates?

I call the attention of gentlemen on both sides of this Chamber whose constituents are, for especial reasons, deeply and directly interested in the proper administration of this great bureau, which not only handles more than an hundred millions of dollars annually, but also adjudicates thousands and tens of thousands and hundreds of thousands of claims, to its transactions, as evidenced by this statement.

Why, sir, suppose the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy or the Secretary of the Treasury had permitted such a thing to occur in their Departments, do we not all know that within an hour after it had become known to the House a dozen members would have been ready and eager to offer resolutions looking to an immediate investigation? Here we find a chief of division, already enjoying a salary of $2,000 per annum and drawing a pension, not only procures an increase of his annual pension, but also arrears amounting to $3,748.77. I refer to Henry A. Philips.

Mr. RAINES. Does not the gentleman know that no chief of division in the Pension Office can rerate himself?

Mr. SAYERS. I know that these reratements could not have occurred unless the officials, whose names appear in the list, were willing parties to the scheme, and they are responsible for it. Observe the dates of these reratements, how close they are together. All of the parties are in the same building and in daily intercourse with each other. Can any one, in his senses, doubt the existence of a conspiracy by them to take advantage of the time, the circumstances, and the occasion to their own enrichment? And, in this list, we find the name of John E. Carpenter, a medical examiner, getting a salary of $1,800 per annum and drawing a pension. He is rerated, or rather he assists to rerate himself. His pension is increased and he pockets the neat sum of $1,803.03 in the way of arrears. And William M. Goodlove, also a qualified surgeon, enjoying $2,000 a year as salary and a pension, comes in for his share.

And Frank A. Butts, an acting chief of division; and Edward C. Parkinson, a special examiner; and James E. Smith, another chief of division; and Hiram Smith, jr., First Deputy Commissioner, a gentleman not unknown to fame, were also members of this celebrated pool, formed for the purpose of raiding the Treasury.

Gentlemen of the committee, I earnestly invite you to a careful consideration of this statement.

Mr. MORROW. Does the gentleman propose to insert in that connection the list that he has received from the Pension Office showing the rerating of employes by Commissioner Black?

Mr. SAYERS. Certainly. I will read that list now, if it will do the gentleman any good. I do not propose to shield Democrats at the expense of the Republican party. If Democratic Commissioners of Pensions or Democratic employes have been doing wrong, give us a committee of Republicans and Democrats; let them examine the Pension Office from top to bottom and for many years past.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I suggest that there will be no more opportune moment to insert that list than just now, especially the case of Deputy Commissioner Bartlett, who was rerated by Commissioner Black.

Mr. SAYERS. All right; I shall be glad to refer to the case which the gentleman mentions.

Mr. MORROW. The name of Deputy Commissioner Bartlett, however, does not appear on that list; that is an outside case.

Mr. SAYERS. If the name of Deputy Commissioner Bartlett does not appear on this list, the Commissioner of Pensions has not certified to me all the facts. If he has withheld the name of Deputy Commissioner Bartlett, how many more may have been withheld?

Mr. MORROW. The gentleman will pardon me. The case of Bartlett was not a case of rerating; and that is the reason it does not appear on the list. The facts involved in that case were that while Mr. Bartlett was Deputy Commissioner, drawing $3,600 a year, his case, under what is called "the forty-eight-hour order," was required to be examined at once; and while the medical examiner had fixed the pension at $22.50 the Commissioner gave him $30 peremptorily and arbitrarily.

Mr. SAYERS. I wish it understood that I make no assault on the present Commissioner of Pensions. So far as he is concerned I have no reason to believe that he is not acting honestly and discharging his duty to the best of his ability.

Mr. HILL. Can you tell us how many cases of employes of the Pension Office were rerated during the period to which you have referred?

Mr. SAYERS. There were forty-six.

Mr. HILL. How many in all were rerated during the same period?

Mr. SAYERS. Under Commissioner Black?

Mr. HILL. Under Commissioner Tanner.

Mr. SAYERS. I do not know; I have not got that information.

Mr. HILL. You gave the figures of something between two thousand and three thousand cases that have been rerated.

Mr. SAYERS. That was only for six months.

Mr. HILL. Well, during that period of six months how many were rerated in all.

Mr. SAYERS. The answer will appear in my remarks.

Mr. HILL. I would like the gentleman to now state the exact figures.

Mr. SAYERS. Here is a statement of the number of pension cases rerated between March 28, 1889, and August 31, 1889, inclusive, the number being 1,396.

Mr. DOCKERY. At what cost?

Mr. SAYERS. The value of the pensions before rerating was $191,866; afterward $287,906. The total amount was $997,547.61.

Mr. HILL. Then, as I understand, out of a total of 1,396 persons rerated during that period of six months 46 were employes of the Pension Office?

Mr. SAYERS. I so understand. I now submit the table called for by the gentleman from California [Mr. MORROW].

Names of employes of Pension Bureau who are pensioners, and who were rerated between September 1, 1888, and March 27, 1889, inclusive.

a United States pension agent.

b Navy.

c Assistant medical referee.

d Chief of division.

Mr. HILL. Does the gentleman know any good reason why the Pension Office employes should not be rerated as other employes if they are entitled to it.

Mr. SAYERS. I do not believe if I were placed as a custodian of the Treasury I should be the first man to put my hand into its vaults or to take advantage of the fact of my being nearest to the Treasury and, when there is an opportunity, increase my salary. [Laughter.] As suggested by my friend from Arkansas, I should not play "sooner" on the rest. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. HILL. Does the gentleman say because they are employes of the Pension Office that fact precludes them from filing their applications as other soldiers?

Mr. SAYERS. That is a question of taste. If a man is drawing a big salary and wants to get more money by virtue of his official position, it is a matter of taste. I would not do it myself. [Applause.]

Mr. HILL. If it is a mere question of taste then it does not follow there is any fraud or collusion in it.

Mr. SAYERS. The question of taste often involves a moral, if not a legal fraud and also collusion.

Mr. MORROW. The gentleman from Texas does not read the rerating under Commissioner Black. [Laughter.]

Mr. SAYERS. I will put it in my remarks.

Mr. MORROW. It would only take a moment to read a portion to the House.

Mr. SAYERS. It is a pretty good showing for Commissioner Black, and I will read it.

Mr. MORROW. Read it.

Mr. SAYERS. I will. The number of cases from September 1, 1888, to March 27, 1889, was 1,118; their value, prior to reratement, $150,288.77, and after reratement $191,423, with a total amount of $543,140.36, which would show a difference of $449,407.25 between the two administrations.

Mr. MORROW. It is only a question of degree, then.

Mr. SAYERS. Of amount.

Mr. MORROW. General Black rerated 1,118 and Tanner 1,136.

Mr. SAYERS. The statement as to General Black begins September 1, 1888, and ends March 27, 1889; and as to Mr. Tanner, it begins March 28, 1889, and ends August 31, 1889. But I do not wish to have any contention with the chairman of the subcommittee as to the relative abilities of Commissioner Black and Commissioner Tanner to get money out of the Treasury. [Great laughter and applause.]

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Will the gentleman let me ask him a question?

Mr. SAYERS. I am always glad to accommodate the gentleman.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. You are always kind. I understand the rerating began under our friend Tanner, and that Commissioner Black, our excellent friend, in 1888 began this loose rerating. [Laughter.]

Mr. SAYERS. I do not admit that.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. And it continued until 1889 without interruption.

Mr. SAYERS. I do not admit that. It continued, as I understand, for almost a year in the office without interruption. I understand that Commissioner Tanner was appointed in March, and when it was ascertained that rerating was going on among the officials in the office it was arrested, and he was removed.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I do not know as to that.

Mr. SAYERS. I ask the gentleman if he was removed?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. He is not there now. [Laughter.]

Mr. SAYERS. Was he removed? [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. He was removed, but I do not know whether he removed himself or because of a suggestion from the Administration.

[Laughter.] And I wish to have my friend's attention for a moment, in order to commend the Administration for correcting it as soon as it was discovered.

Mr. SAYERS. I am willing that the Administration shall have all the credit it can get before the country for appointing Mr. Tanner Commissioner of Pensions and for its action in summarily dismissing him from office. That is a question I shall have nothing to do with just now.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. My friend will observe that he went on uninterruptedly under our friend, the late President, while in this particular instance the moment the same offense was repeated it was instantly checked and the offender removed. He will comment on that further on, of course.

Mr. SAYERS. I have already commented—

Mr. HILL. If it will not interrupt the gentleman from Texas, he says that these are things he had nothing to do with. Why, then, inject them into the debate?

Mr. SAYERS. I will tell the gentleman why I have injected them into the debate. I was appointed through the kindness of the Speaker of this House a member of the Committee on Appropriations, and through the kindness of the gentleman from Illinois, the chairman of that committee, I was appointed to the subcommittee on pensions, and I felt it my duty not to sit here with my lips closed while a bill amounting to nearly $100,000,000 of appropriation was passing through the House.

Mr. HILL. You thought it a good chance to make a speech?

Mr. SAYERS. First rate; and I have availed myself of it.

Mr. LANE. And made a good speech.

Mr. SAYERS. Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a few words to the old soldiers on the Republican side, to the men who saw active service, who went early into the field.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. Before the gentleman leaves this branch of the subject will he yield for a question?

Mr. SAYERS. Certainly.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. The gentleman seems to have received information from the Pension Office which he has been discussing. Has he discovered, by anything obtained from the office, that there has been any rerating under the present Commissioner, General Raum?

Mr. SAYERS. It does not extend to General Raum. I have said to the committee, Mr. Chairman, time and time again, that I have no question with General Raum as to the administration of the office since he has had charge of it, for I know nothing about it. I have an amendment, however, that I shall offer to this bill, which if adopted by the House may develop some facts later on.

At this point, Mr. Chairman, I desire to present to the committee a statement, which can not be otherwise than interesting. It introduces into this discussion and brings before the committee a gentleman who has made himself somewhat famous by reason of his decisions reversing the action of the Pension Office upon applications for pensions.

The statement speaks for itself and furnishes its own best analysis. It is as follows:

Statement of pensions paid, result of reversals by the Secretary of the Interior.

September 1, 1888, to March 26, 1889:
Amount under Commissioner J. C. Black.....	$38,503.18
March 27, 1889, to October 18, 1889:
Amount under Commissioner James Tanner.....	103,695.86
October 19, 1889, to March 7, 1890:
Amount under Commissioner Green B. Raum.....	48,152.33
Total amount from September 1, 1888, to March 7, 1890, inclusive.....	190,351.37
Total number of certificates issued.....	144

We have seen, Mr. Chairman, one method by which increased pension expenditures have been obtained; that is, through favoritism among the officials in the central office.

But it sometimes happens that the office itself can not afford the desired relief, and an appeal to departmental authority becomes necessary.

It appears, sir, that since the advent of the present Administration into power many rehearings have been granted upon claims rejected by General Black while he was Commissioner. In other words, certain of these rejected claims have been reconsidered and allowed by Assistant Secretary Bussey, and it is to some of his decisions that I propose to now call the attention of the committee.

The first one is that of Daniel B. Kaufman, late captain in the Forty-eighth Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers.

His claim for a pension had been rejected under a departmental decision rendered October 22, 1887. I ask the attention of the committee to this case, and especially do I ask those gentlemen of the House who, when the war of 1861 began, volunteered for the preservation of the Union and did their full duty at all times and under all circumstances, whether in the camp, on the march, or on the field of battle.

The decision of October 22, 1887, rejecting this man's application for a pension, rested solely upon the ground that he had been dishonorably discharged the service. It appears from the records, which I hold in my hand, that Captain Kaufman was arraigned and tried before a general court-martial, convened near Petersburg, Va., upon the charge of cowardice. He was found not guilty of cowardice, but guilty of gross misconduct before the enemy, and his sentence was, "To be dismissed the service of the United States." Major-General Meade, in General Court-Martial Orders, No. 28, dated August 1, 1864, approved the proceedings, finding, and sentence in the case of Captain Kaufman, and directed that he should cease to belong to the military service of the United States from the date of the order. These facts are not disputed. The Assistant Secretary, Mr. Bussey, reversed this decision and admitted Kaufman to the pension roll.

In the course of his argument, Mr. Chairman, which is quite lengthy, Mr. Bussey says that—

The pension system is not one of privileges, nor of rewards, nor of honors, nor of morals. It is purely and exclusively a system of governmental gratuity, of aid, of care for the physically disabled whose wounds or injuries or diseases have been incurred in and by reason of the service.

The language of the Assistant Secretary is plain and can be easily understood. There can be no doubt as to its meaning, and, if it be the true legal definition of the system, the opinion heretofore held is a false one and should be immediately and completely abandoned.

General Black, in one of his rulings, has said:

No ordinary man can believe, without convincing proof thereof, that it has been designed to exact of the soldiers of the regular Army, and of that great class of volunteers of other and honorable wars, the condition of an honorable discharge or release from service and at the same time allow that the company of their equally honorable brethren of the war of 1861 should be degraded and lowered in the universal estimation of mankind by admitting to the high privilege of the pension-roll those not honorably discharged or released from service. Or, in other words, the Commissioner can not believe that the Government intends that the deserter of the war of 1861 should be placed upon a par with the faithful soldiers of that great war and all the wars that preceded it.

And Governor Hovey, of Indiana, speaking for the association of which he is so prominent a member, declares that—

Pensions should be granted, not for the support of the pensioner alone, but as a badge of distinction for past services. Like the Victoria Cross or the French Cordon of Honor, they should be the evidence of bravery, loyalty, and service for our country.

Mr. Chairman, can there be a greater variance in language and idea than is here exhibited as to the true meaning and intention of the pension system? Which of these definitions will the House and the country accept as true, the one given and maintained by Mr. Bussey as a guide to his official action in such matters or that which has the sanction of two such distinguished soldiers as Governor Hovey and General Black?

Mr. HILL. I understand the gentleman to say that he will incorporate that entire decision.

Mr. SAYERS. I have said so; but the gentleman will have an opportunity to answer in his own time. I intend to put this case fairly before the committee.

Sir, to-day, at this very hour, this man, Captain Kaufman, a dishonorably dismissed officer, is drawing his pension, and his name is upon the roll amongst the names of those who fought and I-felt their lumps at Chickamauga, Chancellorsville, Gettysburgh, and the many hundred battle-fields of the late war. Is it right that this should be so?

Mr. CUTCHEON. I would appeal to the gentleman in criticising the Assistant Secretary of the Interior that he at least give him the benefit of the whole of the decision.

Mr. SAYERS. I have it with me. I have not had time to read it all, but I will put it in.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Insert it in the RECORD.

Mr. SAYERS. In order that there may be no doubt as to the dismissal of Captain Kaufman from the service, I beg to read the order itself:

[General Court-Martial Orders, No. 28.]

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE POTOMAC, August 1, 1864.

IV. Before a general court-martial, of which Lieut. Col. J. C. Whiton, Fifty-eighth Massachusetts Volunteers, is president, convened at camp near Petersburg, Va., by virtue of General Orders, No. 29, from headquarters Second Division, Ninth Army Corps, of June 20, 1864, was arraigned and tried—

Capt. D. B. Kaufman, Forty-eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteers, upon the following Charge: Cowardice.

Finding: Not guilty of cowardice, but guilty of gross misconduct before the enemy.

Sentence: "To be dismissed the service of the United States."

The proceedings of this court-martial and this sentence are approved.

By command of Major-General Meade.

S. WILLIAMS, Assistant Adjutant-General.

The CHAIRMAN. The hour of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I suppose that as a member of the subcommittee I would be entitled to take the floor; and, if it is agreeable I will take the floor and yield as much time to my friend from Texas as he desires.

Mr. MORROW. I think at this time it would be well to fix the limit of this general debate. Will the gentleman from Texas indicate when general debate shall be closed?

Mr. SAYERS. We will probably get through this evening.

Mr. MORROW. How much time do you require?

Mr. SAYERS. I will not take more than ten minutes longer.

Mr. Chairman, I will now rapidly and without comment invite the attention of the committee such portions of other cases as will not only make the opinions rendered by the Assistant Secretary thoroughly understood, but will also bring into close and certain light the policy that he has inaugurated in reference to the allowance of pension claims.

The first case is that of Zenas Hamilton.

Mr. MORROW. What page is that on?

Mr. SAYERS. On page 3. This application was rejected on the 5th day of March, 1885, and a new hearing was asked after the appointment of Mr. Bussey as Assistant Secretary of the Interior.

A MEMBER. Who was his attorney?

Mr. SAYERS. Milo B. Stevens & Co. In this case the Assistant Secretary says:

I am clearly of the opinion, after considering the facts connected with the incurrence of the injury for which this claim for pension is made, that the second point contended for in said motion is well taken. It is true that it appears that claimant was injured by a fall of seats while seated among the audience witnessing a circus performance, but it also appears that he was at the place where said circus was performing as a member of a detail, ordered to protect and guard said circus, and was within the circus tent at the time of the accident by the permission and consent of his superior officer, the sergeant in command of said detail; and during an interval between the times he was required to go on post as sentry. His being in the circus tent, looking at the performance, was merely incidental to his being on duty at that place as a member of the guard. He was simply awaiting there the proper time to arrive when he would again be required to walk his post as sentinel, and was in a place where he had permission to be, near his post of duty, in a position where he was ready to respond in a moment to any call that might be made upon him, and, in my judgment, was in the line of his duty as a soldier and as a member of said guard at the time said accident occurred; nor do I think it just or reasonable to hold that claimant's pensionable status should be in any way affected by the circumstances that he was a spectator of a circus performance which happened to be transpiring at said time and in said place. There appears to have been no dispute as to the fact that the accident by which he was injured was unavoidable on his part, with the happening of which he was in no way concerned.

And in the case of William M. Ammerman:

Upon a motion filed by claimant's attorney, I have reconsidered the claim of William M. Ammerman, formerly of Company K, Eighty-sixth Regiment of Ohio Volunteers, for pension, upon which a decision affirming the action of the Commissioner of Pensions, adverse to claimant's right to pension, was given by the Department on the 25th of June, 1886.

It appears from the decision that the said William M. Ammerman received an injury, on account of which he claimed pension, in the following manner: On or about the 1st of September, 1863, he was in camp, standing in front of his tent. Certain of his comrades were engaged in play, in which, however, Ammerman was not participating. One of the comrades knelt down behind Ammerman, and another pushed him backwards over the one kneeling, so that he was thrown upon his head and shoulders and received a fracture of the left clavicle and of the acromion process of the scapula.

Upon the state of facts set forth in the former decision, the injury on account of which Ammerman claims a pension was connected as a result with his military service. At the time he received the injury he was in his proper place, ready to perform such duty as he might be called upon to do. The injury alleged as the ground of pension happened to him without any fault or neglect on his part. The injury was connected as a result with the service, in that the service had placed him in a position where, without fault on his part, he had received said injury. This connection is sufficiently close and direct to entitle him to the benefits of the pension law.

And in the case of William H. Brokenshaw:

On the motion, filed April 9, 1889, by Soule & Co., attorneys, Washington, D. C., for a reconsideration of the adverse departmental decision rendered on appeal July 23, 1887, in the case of W. H. Brokenshaw, late of Company H, Twenty-ninth Michigan Volunteers.

The basis of the claim filed April 30, 1883, was an injury of left side, alleged to have been incurred in the service and line of duty at Jackson, Mich., about March 25, 1865, said injury having been caused by three soldiers, names unknown, jumping on claimant while he was climbing into his bunk, crushing ribs of left side just below the heart. Claimant was enrolled March 2, 1865, and was mustered out with his company June 30, 1865. He was examined at Detroit, Mich., October 1, 1864, by a board of examining surgeons, consisting of J. F. Noyes, N. W. Webber, and Charles C. Yemans.

Brokenshaw was clearly in the line of duty—not passive only, but active duty—inasmuch as when he received the alleged injury he was in the act of "climbing into his bunk," the place of customary rest, which it was his duty to use, and which was provided for him by the regulations of the service; and said injury, though not a necessary result, was, as to claimant, an unavoidable incident of the service, it having been caused, without provocation on his part, by "three soldiers, names unknown, jumping on him while he was climbing into his bunk." He was thus in no degree a contributor to his own injury, but was merely the helpless recipient of an irresistible assault. His title to remedy is plain, but it does not lie against his assailants. It lies in the system of pensions provided by Congress for disabilities incurred in the military service and line of duty. Brokenshaw was "in his proper place, ready to perform such duty as he might be called upon to do," and the injury alleged as the ground of pension happened to him "without any fault or neglect on his part."

And in the case of William Jones:

The material facts connected with the incurrence of the disability which is alleged by the claimant are conceded in the former departmental decision to be the following, namely:

"Claimant, while serving as a member of the guard, and having the permission of his superior officer, while standing against a rail or balustrade eating his rations at dinner time, immediately in front of his quarters at Camp Chase, Ohio, in May, 1865, was pushed or thrown backward over said balustrade by two of his comrades, who were scuffling on the portico which supported the balustrade, and who, intending to precipitate him from his position, had seized him for that purpose, claimant himself having no part in the scuffle, except to resist or defend himself against the unexpected assault, which caused the disability now alleged as the basis of his appeal."

The claimant in this case was the victim of an overpowering assault, to which he did not contribute and to which he was not a party, while he was in camp under orders as a member of the guard, and while, also, he was doing an act which, according to army regulations, is not only related to, but an essential condition of the service; and, therefore, when, without contribution or carelessness on his own part, he incurred the disability which he here alleges, he was in the line of duty in the sense that gives title to a pension.

This claim had been rejected April 14, 1887.

And in the case of Mary E., widow of Alexander McNeill:

I have carefully considered the motion filed April 17, 1889, by James H. Vermilya & Co., attorneys for claimant, requesting that the departmental decision rendered May 8, 1888, in the case of Mary E., widow of Alexander McNeill, affirming on appeal the action of your bureau rejecting her claim for widow's pension (No. 263306), be reversed by the Department.

It appears from the statement of facts in this claim that the soldier received in the service the injuries which it is claimed subsequently caused his death while engaged, in camp, in a friendly wrestling match with a comrade. There does not appear to have been any malice or bad blood about the affair, and the injury to the soldier was evidently purely accidental. He was at the time in camp, where his duty as a soldier required him to be; and in indulging in a harmless and innocent athletic sport, of a friendly character, he was not violating any of the rules and regulations of the service, nor disobeying any command of his superior officers, nor conducting himself in an unseemly or unsoldierlike manner, nor doing any other act calculated to disturb or to transgress military discipline.

The Government placed both the soldier and the comrade with whom he was wrestling in the position where it was both natural and proper for them to indulge in such athletic sports or exercises, with the consent of their commanding officers; and I consider that it would be too narrow and technical a view to hold that an injury resulting from such exercises as appear in this case was incurred out of the line of duty, and, therefore, not pensionable.

And in the case of Martha A., mother of John Hunt:

Her claim was rejected November 25, 1887, "on the ground that the death of soldier did not grow out of circumstances relating to his military duty."

The sole question presented for consideration is, was soldier's death due to causes connected with and incident to his service and line of duty?

The records show that he "died in hospital at Bardtown, Ky., January 4, 1862;" no other record of sickness, injuries, or cause of death.

Appellant, mother of soldier, alleges that he died at Bardtown, Ky., from the "effects of poison received in some pies."

The captain and comrades testify that while in the service and in camp at Bardtown, Ky., with his company, he purchased a pie of a woman selling pies to the soldiers; that he was within a few hours taken violently sick, suffering from severe pains and cramping in the bowels; and was taken to the hospital, where he died the next day. No post mortem was had, nor is there any more positive evidence as to the specific cause of death.

The surgeon in charge of the hospital where he died, in a recent special examination, stated that "soldier had never been on the sick-list until he was suddenly ill at Bardtown and died in a few hours. His death made a great excitement in the regiment, for it was believed to be the work of rebels." The symptoms were those of poisoning, and I have no doubt in my own mind that death was produced by some irritant, but what the nature of it was I do not know.

While there is no positive testimony that the pies purchased were poisoned, yet in view of the foregoing testimony and the impressions upon the minds of officers and comrades at the time, it would not be an unreasonable presumption.

But in the absence of positive proof that the soldier was thus poisoned, causing his death, the fact still remains that prior to that time, while in the service, he had no disability, was taken suddenly ill, and in a few hours died at the hospital.

When he was taken sick he was on guard duty; there is not the slightest indication that he was violating any military law, rule, or regulation of his command, or that he was guilty of any contributory or culpable negligence.

In the absence, then, of any proof to the contrary, the legal presumption arises that the death cause originated in the service and line of duty.

It is therefore believed that the rejection of the claim on the ground stated is erroneous, and the decision of your bureau is, to that extent, reversed.

And in the case of Henry A. Helmer; this application had been rejected March 1, 1889:

The adverse departmental decision was based upon the ground that claimant's disability was not incurred while in the line of duty. Claimant's own statement of the case, which was accepted as the ground for the foregoing decision, was made before a special examiner November 12, 1884, in the following terms, as shown by the accompanying papers:

"On or about the second day after the battle of Pea Ridge, I was taking care of my captain's horse. I asked for the loan of the horse to go over the battle-field just to look at it. Second Lieut. John Cahoe also went with me on horseback. When I asked the captain for the horse, he said: 'Henry, I rather you would not take him. He may throw you and kill you. You know he has thrown you once or twice.' He threw me at Osage River over his head, but did me no injury. As we were riding along, my horse got frightened, I think at a dead horse, and commenced back-jumping, and the first thing I knew I was thrown against a tree. When I went to get up I found I was badly hurt; my ankle just popped over. The lieutenant went back to camp for help. They carried me to my tent and went and got one of the surgeons of the regiment, who set my ankle, which was broke—the outside bone of the left ankle—and put the splints on it."

Claimant was in the service and in his proper place at the time when, in company with Lieutenant Cahoe, at his own request, he started on horseback to ride over the battle-field at Pea Ridge, thereby doing an act which is known to be customary where opportunity offers immediately after a battle, for purposes of inspection and information. The fact that claimant was going on the tour of inspection was known to his superior officers and was evidently in accordance with official consent, as evidenced by the presence of Lieutenant Cahoe, who accompanied him. It is clear that the tour of inspection was in no sense nor degree a violation of the regulations of the service, but in harmony therewith. Otherwise it would have been the part of claimant's superior officer to forbid and restrain him, in which event claimant would have been out of the line of duty when taking the ride over the battle-field.

The fact that claimant's captain warned him against the horse because the animal might throw him can not be construed as a command, nor as an instruction prohibitory of the proposed ride. It was only a precaution which in no way affected the line of duty which claimant was pursuing. Claimant might, in fact, have been thrown by any other horse, even by ordinarily the gentlest animal, and the determination of claimant to ride the captain's horse was justified by the fact that he (claimant) was caring for the animal, and was not likely to be afraid of him, but believed him to be safe enough.

unwarranted construction of the law, toward the entire destruction of every barrier which has been erected to protect the Treasury against the assaults of undeserving men.

No one can foretell the ultimate consequences which will undoubtedly result from such a policy as this. The tax-payers of the land are entirely helpless in the presence of these decisions. They constitute precedents which, if followed to their logical conclusion, will enable any claimant, however unworthy, if he can only establish an enlistment and a discharge, to make himself a pensioner upon the liberal bounty which the Government has created for those who have rendered honorable, faithful, and courageous military service, and, through disease contracted or wounds received while in the performance of duty, have placed themselves within the provisions of our pension laws.

And, sir, the time will come, if this iniquity be persisted in, when the minds and hearts of the people will be turned, in utter loathing, from the laws which they now regard with favor and affection. The true interests of the faithful soldier, who returned from the field of conflict, with his escutcheon undimmed and with his shield untarnished, to the peaceful walks of American citizenship, demand that the pension-roll should be securely guarded; that it should be purified from the presence of the unworthy; and that such men as Assistant Secretary Bussey should not be permitted to destroy a system which was intended by our fathers to be an emblem of courage and fidelity as well as a protection against want to those whose misfortune it has been to lose their health and their strength while in the actual military service of the country.

Sir, I have already spoken at greater length than I intended, but I felt that something should be said in opposition to the policy which characterizes the present administration of the pension system and to warn the people against the consequences which are sure to come unless such policy be speedily and radically changed.

I return to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] the remainder of his time, with thanks for his courtesy.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky has forty-five minutes remaining.

Mr. PETERS. Does the gentleman from Kentucky desire to proceed now?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. No; I would rather not. I do not know that I shall occupy any of the time myself.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that gentlemen desiring to extend remarks upon this bill may have authority to do so.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Chairman, I shall start out by complimenting my colleague on the committee [Mr. SAYERS] for the great number of interesting figures he has presented to us and for the laborious and painstaking manner in which those figures have been collated. I shall reply as briefly as possible to some of the exceptions that have been taken by that gentleman to pension legislation and to the administration of the Pension Bureau, and shall reply also to some of his criticisms in regard to various expenditures that have been made.

During the current fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, the amount appropriated for pensions in the bill passed by the last Congress was $80,473,000. The amount for the payment of examining surgeons was $1,000,000. The amount for salaries of eighteen pension agents was $72,000. The clerk-hire for those agencies was $178,000. For fuel in connection with those agencies, $750; for lights, $750; and for stationery, $16,000; making a total in the pension appropriation bill for the current fiscal year of $81,758,700. If you divide this sum by four, the number of quarters in the fiscal year, it will give you $20,439,675, which would be the quarterly expenditure if the total amount were divided equally among the several quarters; or, for the half year, $40,879,350, which would bring the expenditure up to the 1st of January last.

Now, there was in fact expended up to the 1st of January last $54,493,304, or an excess over what should have been expended, if there had been no deficiencies, during the first half of the present fiscal year, of $13,613,954. If we had a law prohibiting the Commissioner of Pensions from expending any more than one-quarter of the appropriation in any one quarter of the year or more than one-half in any half year, then the amount which it would have been proper to expend under such a law was exceeded up to the 1st of January last by $13,613,954. But in fact there is no such law. The Pension Bureau is not prohibited from expending a larger amount than one-quarter of the annual appropriation within any given quarter of the year.

It would be unjust to limit the Pension Department in any such way. For instance, in order to carry on the Pension Department it was necessary, prior to the 1st day of July, 1889, to draw upon the appropriation for the fiscal year beginning on the 1st day of July, 1889, to the amount of $8,000,000; and therefore the $81,000,000 for the current fiscal year was decreased by the amount of over $8,000,000 to carry on the business of the Pension Department during the last fiscal year. It is then proper and legitimate to deduct that $8,000,000 from the appropriations for the current fiscal year, because that amount was taken out of the sum appropriated and should not properly be charged up to the appropriation bill for the current fiscal year. That, then, accounts for $8,000,000 of the $13,000,000 in excess of the expenditures for the first half of the fiscal year. In other words, if you deduct that $8,000,000 from the amount which was expended during the first half of the fiscal year, over and above the half of the appropriation, it would leave $5,613,954 which was expended during the first half of the fiscal year in excess of the half of the appropriation allowed.

Now, then, we come to another very interesting question connected with this matter. For the first time in the history of the country—I speak advisedly—we have a careful and concise estimate of what the expenses will probably be during the next fiscal year in the Pension Department. Never before in the history of this Government has there been a basis established from which you could estimate what the expenses were going to be. Members will find attached to the report of the committee, for the first time in the history of legislation, an appendix prepared with great care giving an accurate basis upon which to form an estimate. All estimates heretofore have been merely guess-work. It was not taken into consideration, for instance, how much the number on the pension-rolls would be increased.

We have the figures showing the annual increase of the number of pensioners for 1887, 1888, and 1889; then we have a careful computation of the annual value of each of these pensions; then we have a computation of the average amount of the increase of the pension-roll during a series of years; and that gives us a basis from which to estimate the amount that will be required to pay the pensions of those who may be added to the names on the pension-rolls during the coming fiscal year. This estimate shows also the number of those that are dropped from the rolls annually and the number of those that are restored to the rolls, giving us the net increase for the last three fiscal years, from which we can safely estimate what will be required in future for the payment of this increased number added to the pension rolls.

Nothing of this kind was presented to the committee when the appropriation was made for the present fiscal year. Now, what were the figures? As has already been stated, the estimated increase of the annual pension-roll for the next fiscal year will, according to these figures, be 50,000 persons; and the first payment to be made to these 50,000 pensioners will require $22,000,000.

During the past fiscal year there have been added to the pension-roll about 51,000 persons.

When the appropriation for the present fiscal year was before the House there was no estimate by which we could tell what amount would be required to pay the additional pensioners that would be added to the pension-roll during the present year. It was, therefore, not surprising that there was a deficiency of $8,000,000 when the fiscal year was entered upon, and that there was an additional deficiency, which we provided for a short time ago in the urgent deficiency bill, of $21,000,000. If you add the $21,000,000 in the urgent deficiency bill passed by this House several days ago and the $8,000,000, you have an aggregate of $29,000,000, which is probably, as nearly as can be ascertained, the deficiency in pension appropriations for the present fiscal year.

So my friends who are anxious to criticize the administration of the Pension Department can see from these figures that the amount of $5,613,954, which was in excess of what should have been spent during the first half of the fiscal year, is only a very small portion of what is really a deficiency in the appropriations for the present fiscal year. I can see, therefore, nothing that should surprise any one or nothing that points to any lack of proper administration in the Pension Office, so far as that is concerned.

I now desire to call attention for a few moments to the increases to which reference has been made. Much has been said in regard to the number of increases that were made during the present fiscal year and under the present Administration. I may say in passing that this will not in any way account for the large deficiency that we have been called to provide for in this fiscal year, because at the most liberal estimate the entire amount of increases will not exceed the sum of $4,000,000. This would account for only $4,000,000 of the $29,000,000 of deficiency. When we come to examine carefully by the figures there is nothing unreasonable in the increases which have been made. Of course gentlemen can pick out individual and exceptional cases and comment upon them; but I am speaking of the aggregate; and I say that, so far as the aggregate of increases is concerned, the result is such as to reflect credit upon the Pension Department rather than discredit.

In this connection I wish to call attention to the number of persons drawing a pension of $2 per month from 1885 to 1889.

In 1885 the number of pensions at $2 per month was 26,134; in 1886, 28,359; in 1887, 30,823; in 1888, 31,722; and in 1889, 26,875.

Now, I might stop to criticize the administration of the Pension Office under the last Commissioner of Pensions, and show, what was somewhat notorious throughout the country, that it was allowing a large number of $2 a month pensions. I mean under Commissioner Black it was currently reported in the newspapers he was allowing a large number of two-dollar pensions. Any one conversant with the disabilities incurred in the Army will know that where a disability exists at all it in most cases, under existing law, is equal to more than $2 per month.

Now, mark you, the number of two-dollar pensions increased steadily from 1885 up to 1888, and they did not decrease in the least until 1889, when the Administration changed hands. For comparison, in 1885 there were 26,134 two-dollar pensioners on the roll; in 1888—

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Are these fiscal years or calendar years?

Mr. PETERS. They are fiscal years.

In 1888 these 26,134 had increased to 31,422, and gradually and continually increased from 1885 up to 1888. I might not uncharitably say the object, perhaps, of this kind of pension legislation was to create the impression throughout the country that a large number of pensions were being granted, and for the purpose of pleading an economical administration those pensions were rated at a small figure per month. As soon, therefore, as the Republican Administration came in, in view of the fact there had been a number of two-dollar pensions granted, examination was made of these claims, and in a large number of cases it was found the disabilities really entitled the pensioner to more than $2 a month. Consequently, in 1889, the number of pensioners on the rolls at $2 a month had decreased to 26,825, or a decrease of nearly 5,000.

I want to call attention to another fact in connection with this to show there was a foundation for the rumor that these two-dollar pensions were purposely granted. The number of six, eight, ten, twelve, and fourteen dollar pensions gradually and continually increased from 1845 up to 1889. It is only in the case of two-dollar pensions there has been any decrease under the present Administration, proving that when the present Administration came to look into affairs, it found a large number of pensioners had been placed on the roll at much less than their disability warranted. This fact will account for some of the aggregate amount of increase, because as is shown from the figures I have presented, over 5,000 of these two-dollar pensions after the present Administration came in were inadequately rated and were increased to higher grades.

This, also, will account somewhat for the deficiency which has been brought upon us during the present year, a deficiency which we inherited from the past Administration, a deficiency that we would not have been required to meet, if the former administration of the Pension Office had properly rated these disabilities.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. RAINES] has asked me in regard to the whole amount of the increases. My colleague from California [Mr. MORROW] gave the amount of increases during these years. I will give them in brief again. During the year ending June 30, 1887, there were 32,107 pensions increased. During the year 1888 there were 45,716 pensions increased. During the year 1889 there were 71,198 pensions increased. The very fact to which I have called attention will, to some extent, account for the number of increases during the year 1889 over prior years.

Mr. TRACEY. May I ask the gentleman from Kansas a question?

Mr. PETERS. Certainly.

Mr. TRACEY. I noticed a few moments ago the gentleman stated that it was proved that the rate of $2 a month was regarded as an insufficient pension, and so when the present Administration came into power it was found necessary to raise all those pensions to $4 a month. Now, if my recollection is accurate, that was done by Commissioner Tanner issuing a general order that all pensions of $2 a month should be made $4, and subsequently the Assistant Secretary of the Interior set aside that order as being improper.

Mr. PETERS. Commissioner Tanner, as I understand it and as I remember it, said he believed that if a party had a disability which amounted to a grade that would entitle him to $2 a month, or, in other words, if the party had any disability at all, it entitled him under the law to a greater rate than $2 a month, and he made an order that all that was necessary for such party to do was to make an application stating the facts to the Pension Department and he would have them examined into, and if found to be correct he would, without medical examination, order the increase to be made. That, I think, is the substance of the order.

Mr. TRACEY. And the Assistant Secretary set aside that order and said that the law did not permit the Commissioner of Pensions to make such a rule, that it only allowed him to grant an increase on medical testimony under the law. And hence I say that would naturally account for a large number of the increases from $2 to $4 per month to which the gentleman has referred, and would be no indication that the examiners under the previous administration had not performed their duty.

Mr. PETERS. This order of Commissioner Tanner applied entirely and solely to the two-dollar pensions. It did not apply to any other except the two-dollar pensions.

Mr. ENLOE. My understanding, and I recollect the order of Commissioner Tanner quite distinctly, was to the effect that when a man had a pensionable disability at all, whether for one or two or four dollars, he should not be allowed a less rate than $4 per month. And Assistant Secretary Bussey, in overruling the decision, said there was no shadow of law, authority, or precedent for such decision.

Mr. PETERS. Of course there is no question that where the law provides the increase shall only be made after the medical examination Commissioner Tanner was wrong in making the order, and the Assistant Secretary of the Interior was right in overruling and setting it aside. I am not here to apologize for Mr. Tanner; I only desire to make a correct statement of the facts.

I want to say in this connection, in extenuation of Mr. Tanner's action, that he succeeded a man who had the reputation of being an astute lawyer, conversant with the rules governing the construction of statutes and the limitations to official discretion, as well as an extended acquaintance with public men and legislative proceedings. And so when my friends on the other side seek to criticize him for making the increase and reratings in the Department, I want to call their attention to the fact that he simply followed in the wake of Commissioner Black.

Not only that, Mr. Chairman, but another fact: If, as my friend from Texas says, there was a conspiracy in the Pension Department, among the employes, to rerate themselves, that conspiracy was planted and incubated during the administration of Commissioner Black. There was nothing remarkable in the fact that Mr. Tanner should go on following in the footsteps of the administration of Mr. Black, who was a lawyer, an old soldier, experienced in governmental affairs. Whatever mistake was made by Mr. Tanner in rerating employes in the Department was only a little greater in degree, perhaps, than the one made by his predecessor, if it was a mistake.

Mr. ENLOE. I would like to ask the gentleman a question if he will permit.

Mr. PETERS. Certainly.

Mr. ENLOE. I would like to know if you can find in the records of the office, or know personally, any case of a clerk under the administration of Commissioner Black having written a legal and medical opinion and made out the cases himself to have them railroaded through for the benefit of particular attorneys and particular claimants.

Mr. PETERS. I have not examined into that matter. I have not taken up the cases of rerating by Mr. Black and examined them at the Department for the purpose of picking flaws in the machinery or in the action of the Commissioner.

I only call attention of the gentleman to the case of John D. Anderson, who was drawing a salary of $4,000 and who was rerated, receiving $1,379.67, and that there are nine others of the same character. I know another fact, and that is something not much to the credit of the administration of Mr. Black, that all of these rerated cases except two were made during the months of January and February. And let it be said in this connection, also, that these ratings were made after the people had passed upon the claim for power, prestige, and existence of the last Administration and had remanded it to the rear.

All of those cases rerated by Commissioner Black, with the exception of two, took place during the months of January and February. If any odium attaches to Mr. Tanner for having rerated the employes of the Pension Department, the same odium, but perhaps in a less degree, must attach to the Commissioner of Pensions under the Democratic Administration. Mr. Black not only set the example, but inaugurated the system.

Mr. ENLOE. I think the gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. PETERS. And it is further to be said that as soon as the attention of the present Administration was called to it, it stopped the proceeding and it is at an end.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Does the gentleman mean to say that no employes of the Pension Bureau were ever rerated prior to the administration of General Black? He has said that it was inaugurated during General Black's administration. Does he mean to state that he has made an examination and knows that prior to General Black's administration no employe of the office was rerated?

Mr. PETERS. I will make the statement that no employe of the Pension Bureau, under the forty-eight-hour rule, was ever rerated prior to General Black's administration.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. That is not the question I asked.

Mr. PETERS. I am not prepared to make my answer as broad as the gentleman from Kentucky made his question.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. The gentleman made the statement very broad that the rerating of employes had been inaugurated during General Black's administration. The inquiry I desire to make is whether he made that statement on any information he had.

Mr. PETERS. There are exceptions to all general rules. I have no doubt that during prior administrations, by reason of proper application and medical examination, that employes of the Pension Bureau have had their pensions rerated. But what is known in the Pension Department as "railroading cases" of employes was inaugurated under the past administration.

Attention has already been called to the fact that Commissioner Black rerated the pension of General Bartlett, the Deputy Commissioner, and I would not call attention to this were it not for the fact that my friend from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] makes some strictures upon the present administration for having rerated the pension of Hiram Smith.

He (Smith) was a man who had lost an arm and a leg and a man who was entitled in equity to the rerating he obtained in the Pension Department. I would not call attention again to this case of General Bartlett had it not been for the stricture cast upon the administration by reason of the rerating of Smith; and yet in the case of General

Bartlett, who is an estimable gentleman, a man with whom I have had very pleasant intercourse in the transaction of business at the Pension Office, and a man for whom I have the highest esteem—

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. He was a wounded Federal soldier.

Mr. PETERS. Yes; so was Hiram Smith. Both of them stand upon the same footing. General Bartlett by reason of his wound had become disabled, so that he was wholly unfit for business of any kind. Hiram Smith lost an arm and a leg, and is incapacitated from earning a living at any ordinary occupation.

Mr. ENLOE. Was that the reason he retired?

Mr. PETERS. I have no knowledge of the reason why Mr. Smith retired. The medical examination given to General Bartlett rated him at $22.50 per month, and Commissioner Black, upon his own motion and on the arbitrary exercise of a discretion that was doubtful he had the right to exercise, increased the pension to $30 per month.

I simply call attention to this in justice to Mr. Tanner and in justice to the Administration. I do not agree with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] that it is improper for an employé of the Pension Department to obtain an increase of pension during that employment. I do not think so. I believe if I were an employé of the Government and the disability for which I was drawing pension had increased, the mere fact that I was a Government employé instead of a private individual is no reason why I should be debarred from making application for an increase. That is a mere sentimentality. It is without foundation in common sense, according to my judgment. Another thing in connection with this: I do not pretend to say that these reratings that were made under Commissioner Tanner were not largely equitable. I believe in nearly every instance the man who was rerated was in a similar position to that of Hiram Smith. He had either lost a leg or an arm, or by wounds had his physical structure so destroyed that the disability would naturally increase with each succeeding year.

Mr. ENLOE. Does the gentleman from Kansas mean that he does not agree with the Secretary of the Interior in regard to the ten sample cases that are cited of gentlemen who were rerated?

Mr. PETERS. No, sir; I do not state anything of the kind.

Mr. ENLOE. You stated "all."

Mr. PETERS. I said I disagreed with the gentleman from Texas when he stated that he believed that it was improper for an employé of the Pension Department while receiving money from the Government to make an application for an increase of pension.

Mr. ENLOE. I understood the gentleman to state also that he thought that "all" these cases were of a similar character to the case of Hiram Smith.

Mr. PETERS. Oh, no; I did not say that. I said in nearly every instance the cases rerated were similar to that of Mr. Smith, in that they had lost a leg or an arm or had received other disabilities which would increase from year to year.

Mr. ENLOE. If the gentleman will examine these cases—if he will excuse me—cited by the Secretary of the Interior, giving a sample of the character of the administration of the Commissioner of Pensions whom he caused to be removed, he will find that repeated medical examinations were made, and in one instance he makes the comment that the man perjured himself.

Mr. PETERS. I do not desire to be diverted from the line of my argument. I am simply stating what I do state in extenuation of whatever odium any one may see fit to cast upon Commissioner Tanner.

Mr. MORSE. If the gentleman will permit me, I will remark at this point in justification of Commissioner Tanner. It has been stated here that he ordered all the pensions that were at the rate of $2 a month to be increased to $4 a month. If I understood Commissioner Tanner's position correctly it was that a man who was receiving $2 per month ought either to be taken off the pension-roll altogether because he was not entitled to any sort of a pension or else that his pension should be increased.

Mr. PETERS. Yes, sir; I have so stated in my remarks.

Mr. ENLOE. I could cite the gentleman an instance—

Mr. PETERS. I desire to go on, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. ENLOE. I beg the gentleman's pardon; I only wanted to cite an instance to show that that rule did not work all the time. I could cite the instance of a man who got $13 a month just because the skin was broken on his hand—

Mr. PETERS. Well, Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to take the evidence of my friend from Tennessee [Mr. ENLOE], who, as every one knows by his record in this Congress, speaks from a prejudiced standpoint.

Now, I want to call attention to another statement made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS]. I stated in the outset his figures in regard to the different wars in which we have been engaged were very interesting. He compared the expenditures for pensions arising out of the different wars, and I presume his comparison was made with the intention of disparaging the party to which I belong, by showing that there has been extravagance in the administration of the Pension Bureau since the late war. The disbursements for pensions from 1861 up to the present time were said by the gentleman to be largely in excess of all prior disbursements, and he gave a statement of the disbursements for pensions arising out of the war of 1812, out of the war with Mexico, and out of the Revolutionary war, and compared these with the war of 1861-1865.

Those figures were all very interesting, and I am glad the gentleman gave them. But, Mr. Chairman, there is one difference to which he did not call attention, and that is that during the late war the credit of our Government was much lower, so that a larger expenditure of money was required in order to accomplish the desired result than ever before in the history of any of our wars. In 1812 we were fighting against a foreign foe and we were a united people. In the war with Mexico we were fighting a foreign foe and we were united, and our serried ranks from the North and from the South marched together upon the plains of Mexico. But when it came to the war between ourselves, our great internecine war, when it came to our internal strife, then it was natural that the credit of our Government should be seriously impaired.

Let it be said, Mr. Chairman, not to the credit of the Democratic party, that at the beginning of that war an effort to sell twenty-five millions of bonds could not meet with success, except at a high rate of interest, and even then all the bonds could not be disposed of. So it was during almost the entire period of that war. Until victory began to dawn upon the banner of the Republic foreign capitalists had a doubt as to whether the Union would be preserved, and that doubt naturally affected the credit of the Government and required a much larger expenditure of money than was ever required before. Therefore, it is hardly just, as I think, for the gentleman to make the comparison between the disbursements for the various wars without also stating in connection with it the difference that existed so far as our country was concerned in its relationship to the war with Mexico and the war of 1812 and its relationship to the war of 1861-1865.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I believe I have hastily glanced at most of the positions taken by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS], with the exception of his criticism upon the administration of the Interior Department in connection with pension appeals. I will call attention to that briefly, and then I am done.

What constitutes an injury or disability received in line of duty is susceptible of various constructions and answers. Those of us who were in the Army know that the "duty" of a soldier consisted not merely in loading his gun and marching towards and firing at the enemy. The duties of a soldier were various, and in the performance of them a man was just as much "in the line of duty" as when he stood up and fired at the enemy.

It is impossible for any law to draw an arbitrary line. I may have been performing what might be considered a domestic duty in connection with the soldiers with whom I was associated; I may have been cooking for my mess over the camp-fire, yet, if wounded in the performance of that duty, it was as much in the line of duty as if I had been wounded in battle. I may have been two miles in the rear of the command taking care of some wounded comrade when a stray bullet may have struck me; I may have been ordered to do that duty, and, if so, my wound was received "in the line of duty."

I may have been sent to the rear to bring up a horse for one of my officers, and if wounded while going to the rear or returning to the front I was as much "in the line of duty" as though I had received my wound in the front rank of the battle. Even take the case to which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] calls attention. If I had been sent to the rear to bring up a horse to the regiment, and if, while bringing up that horse, I was thrown by him against a tree and injured, that disability would have been incurred "in the line of duty" as much as if I had been in the cavalry and had received the injury while charging the enemy. I simply give these illustrations to show how difficult it is to draw any exact line where "in the line of duty" ceases and outside the line of duty begins.

There are exceptions to all general rules, and I believe I am voicing the sentiment of the people of the United States when I say that it is not their desire that the pension laws should be technically construed. It is their desire that they shall be liberally construed, and that if a man received in the Army a disability which he would not have received if he had not been in the Army he shall receive a pension for it.

I want to call attention also to the decision which it is claimed was made by the Assistant Secretary of the Interior in regard to soldiers dishonorably discharged. It is a ruling of the Pension Department (and it is right) that a pension is not based upon an honorable discharge, but is based on the service the man has given to his country and upon his disability. I may have fought valiantly for two years and may have lost an arm or a leg during that time in the service, and then for some reason may have left my command and gone home. Yet the mere fact that I fought for two years and lost an arm or a leg entitles me to a pension, though I may have been dishonorably discharged for leaving my command.

As a gentleman suggests to me, the punishment for desertion is one thing and the granting of a pension for a disability received in the line of duty is another; and there should be in law and equity no connection between the two.

Mr. Chairman, I yield the residue of my time to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CUTCHEON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas has five minutes remaining.

[Mr. CUTCHEON withholds his remarks for revision. See Appendix.]

Mr. MORROW. I believe we have used on this side of the House one hour and forty-five minutes, and, with the additional three minutes yielded to the gentleman from Michigan, one hour and forty-eight minutes. I wish to have an understanding how much time is to be occupied in this general debate.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. My understanding was, and it is perfectly agreeable, that the gentleman from California desired to yield a certain length of time, probably forty-five minutes, to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHEADLE], and then we, on our side, are to have sufficient time to make, added to the time used by the gentleman from Texas, an amount equal to the total amount used on that side, namely, two hours and thirty-five minutes in all.

Mr. MORROW. That is correct; and I ask unanimous consent that the general debate be closed after forty-five minutes additional have been used on this side of the House and on the other side whatever is necessary to make the time on both sides equal during the debate.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. That will be one hour and twenty minutes additional on this side.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that had better be settled in the House.

Mr. MORROW. I ask unanimous consent.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. We can agree upon it here. There will be no conflict about it.

Mr. SPINOLA. Make it three hours.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that the general debate on this bill be closed at the expiration of the time he has indicated. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. SPINOLA. I feel inclined to object as it strikes me the time is too short. [Cries of "Too late!"]

Mr. MORROW. I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BURROWS reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the pension appropriation bill, had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 895) to provide a temporary government for the Territory of Oklahoma, asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed Mr. PLATT, Mr. CULLOM, and Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, conferees on the part of the Senate.

FORTIFICATION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BREWER, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill (H. R. 8391) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I wish to rise to a question of order. I am not advised whether any ruling has been made under the present code of rules with reference to the consideration of appropriation bills, whether it be necessary to make the point of order when they are presented or not. But I desire to reserve the point of order if necessary.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman had better reserve the points of order, and a record will be made of the fact.

Mr. ROGERS. I reserve all points of order on this bill.

DEBATE ON PENSION BILL.

Mr. MORROW. Mr. Speaker, I desire to have the agreement entered into in Committee of the Whole ratified and made a matter of record in the House, namely, that the general debate on the bill now before the committee shall be limited as follows: Forty-five minutes additional time to be consumed on this side of the House, and the remainder of the time necessary to make up the equivalent, that is to say, one hour and twenty minutes, on the other side, after which the general debate shall be closed.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, that order will be made.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. KENNEDY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same, namely:

A bill (H. H. 346) to extend "An act to grant the right of way to the Kansas City and Pacific Railroad Company through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes."

INFORMATION FROM PENSION OFFICE.

Mr. MCADOO. Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask leave to have printed in the RECORD a communication from the Pension Office, and be permitted to make a brief statement, not exceeding one minute, in regard to it.

I shall be obliged to be away when this subject comes up again tomorrow, but desire to call the attention of the members of the House, without undertaking to pass any strictures upon the Commissioner of Pensions, to the change which has been made by that Department in answering the inquiries of members of Congress in regard to pending applications before the Department. On the 11th day of February I addressed a letter to the Department in the case of a claim pending before it, and asked for information as to the status of the claim.

Under the former administration of the office, under Mr. Bentley, Mr. Dudley, and Mr. Black, written replies were sent to such communications. The present Commissioner replied to that request, as I understand replies are also made to other inquiries of the same character intended to facilitate claims, by sending a circular, and I ask that this circular be printed in the RECORD for this purpose: If the clerical force of the office is not sufficient to make a proper reply to such inquiries, I respectfully suggest to the Committee on Invalid Pensions that the matter of an increase in the force should be considered by them. And in order that the House and both the Committees on Invalid Pensions and Appropriations may consider what remedy ought to be applied, if any is needed, for this condition of affairs, I ask to have this communication printed.

Mr. ENLOE. Let me ask the gentleman if he has any information from the Commissioner of Pensions that he desires an increase of the clerical force.

Mr. MCADOO. Not the slightest, except what this circular discloses.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

The communication is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, BUREAU OF PENSIONS.
Washington, D. C., March 17, 1890.

MADAM: I beg to acknowledge the receipt, through Hon. WILLIAM MCADOO, of a call for statement of condition of your claim. There is no sufficient reason shown why the claim should be taken out of its turn for settlement. It is found to be impracticable to give immediate attention to this inquiry, and others like it, without seriously interfering with the settlement of claims. The number of similar calls received from members of Congress during the week ending March 1, 1890, was 4,996; the number of calls received from claimants and attorneys during the same period was 20,608, being a total of 25,604 calls for the status of claims. To make proper reply to these Congressional calls alone would require the time of 100 examiners and to give the status in all the cases as requested would require at least 500 clerks on this work alone, and would be such an interference with the orderly business of the bureau as to almost suspend the work of adjudicating claims.

To claimants and attorneys who have furnished the evidence covering the well known requirements of a pension claim, the following order has been issued to facilitate the work of the bureau and to enable completed cases to receive prompt action:

Order No. 151.

Claimants are hereby authorized to apply to the Commissioner of Pensions to have their claims placed upon the list of "completed files" for immediate consideration.

Such applications may be made by the claimants or their attorneys of record, and shall set forth:

1. That the declaration has been made in due form, stating the proper service of the soldier and the facts as to incurrence of the disability in and his discharge from the service.
2. That the proof establishes that the disability alleged in the declaration was incurred in the service and line of duty.
3. That the proof connects the present disability for which pension is claimed with wounds or diseases incurred in the service and establishes the fact of disability during any past pensionable period.
4. That the claimant has, with the authority of the Bureau of Pensions, had a regular medical examination in respect to the disability described and claimed for in the declaration.
5. That, in the opinion of the claimant, the claim is fully made out and complete.

In the claims of widows it must be alleged that proof has been made showing that the soldier died of an injury or disease contracted in the service and that claimant is the soldier's widow.

In the case of dependent relatives it must be stated that the proper proof of dependence has been filed in the claim and that the soldier left no widow or minor children.

If the application is made by the attorney of record, in addition to the other statements required he shall certify upon honor that, after a careful consideration of the case, he is of the opinion that the case is complete.

Claims placed upon the list of "completed files" under this order will be considered in the order of the date they are so placed.

This order does not apply to rejected cases. When a claimant or his attorney will certify in accordance with the requirements of the above order that a claim is complete, it will insure its consideration within a few days.

All claims in which the last call for evidence has been complied with will be very soon reached for settlement.

To act promptly upon all completed cases requires that no unnecessary work be done. This bureau is now adjudicating more than 15,000 cases a month from the "completed files," and that number will be largely increased as soon as Congress authorizes by law the employment of thirty additional examining surgeons in this bureau.

Calls are now being made monthly in 50,000 cases for the evidence to complete them. At this rate complete calls will be made in every original case now pending in this Bureau within the next three months. The calls for evidence now being made are in the order in which the claims were filed in this Bureau. I regard this as fair to every claimant, and I do not think it should be disturbed except in extraordinary cases.

I am very anxious to do everything I can to hasten the settlement of every pension claim pending in this Bureau, and I feel sure that you and the great body of claimants are not desirous of imposing work upon the office which will actually interfere with the business of settling claims. If you are aware of any evidence wanting in your case, as suggested by the above order, try to procure it and send it forward.

In any event, your case will soon be reached either for settlement or for the final call to be made for the evidence in the case.

I trust this explanation and information will be taken as a satisfactory reply to your inquiry.

Very respectfully,

GREEN E. RAUM, Commissioner.

COTTON-SEED OIL.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I hold in my hand a telegram signed by various distinguished gentlemen from my State—business men and others—deeply concerned in the welfare of the State, in relation to a subject now pending before Congress. I ask unanimous consent to have it printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, and referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

It is as follows:

LITTLE ROCK, ARK., March 18, 1890.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled, Washington, D. C.:

The attention of the undersigned citizens of Arkansas has been called to several bills before your honorable body bearing directly upon the present uses of cotton-seed oil, and believing same to be class legislation, do hereby protest against such measure—becoming laws for the reason that it directly prejudices the values of farm products and is inimical to the interests of every farm producing cotton and cotton seed. The said bills are hostile to the cotton-oil manufacturers and refineries who employ many millions of dollars of capital in this industry, located in fourteen States, North and South. We urge our Senators and Representatives to oppose all such legislation.

Logan H. Root, John G. Fletcher, James R. Miller, R. A. Smith, J. T. W. Tillar; Bank of Little Rock, C. F. Walker, cashier; Little Rock Trust Company, C. T. Walker, treasurer; C. T. Walker, M. H. Johnson; the German National Bank, Oscar Davis, cashier; Oscar Davis, R. E. Douglas & Co., F. H. Root; First National Bank, Little Rock, Ark., P. H. Root, cashier; the Exchange National Bank, J. S. Pollock, cashier; D. G. Fones, Foxes Bros. Hardware Company, Little Rock Board of Trade, by J. A. Fones, president; Fred Hanger, Herman Kahn, James P. Eagle, Henry M. Cooper, R. A. Edgerton.

Hon. JOHN H. ROGERS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

And then, on motion of Mr. HOLMAN (at 5 o'clock and 7 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE AND OTHER COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred, as follows:

JAMES RESLEY VS. UNITED STATES.

Letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the finding of the court in the case of James Resley against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims.

DANIEL BEARD, ADMINISTRATOR, VS. UNITED STATES.

Letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the finding of the court in the case of Daniel Beard, administrator of Eli Koons, against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims.

ISAAC GRUBER, EXECUTOR, VS. UNITED STATES.

Letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings of the court in the case of Isaac Gruber, executor of John Cowton, against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims.

HIRAM B. SNIVELY AND ALBERT G. LOVELL, EXECUTOR, VS. UNITED STATES.

Letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings of the court in the case of Hiram B. Snively and Albert G. Lovell, executors of George Snively, against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims.

REUBEN ROUZEE VS. UNITED STATES.

Letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings of the court in the case of Reuben Rouzee against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims.

JOSEPH ST. AMAND, EXECUTOR, VS. UNITED STATES.

Letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings of the court in the case of Joseph St. Amand, executor of Alphonso St. Amand, against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims.

WILLIAM H. ANDERSON VS. UNITED STATES.

Letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings of the court in the case of William H. Anderson against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims.

JACOB A. GLOYD AND SAMUEL S. GLOYD, EXECUTORS, VS. UNITED STATES.

Letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings of the court in the case of Jacob A. Gloyd and Samuel S. Gloyd, executors of Samuel Gloyd, against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims.

MEMORIALS AND RESOLUTIONS OF STATE LEGISLATURES.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, the following resolutions were introduced and referred, as follows:

By Mr. SWENEY: Joint resolution of the Legislature of Iowa, asking liberal appropriations for construction of the Hennepin Canal—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, joint resolution of the Legislature of Iowa, asking Congress to repeal the arrears-of-pension limitation law—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, concurrent resolution of the General Assembly, asking for the enactment of a law punishing the adulterating and vending of adulterated lard and other food products—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. GEAR: Resolution of the Iowa State senate, asking for legislation in regard to adulterated lard—to the Committee on Agriculture.

RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, the following resolutions were introduced and referred as follows:

By Mr. RICHARDSON:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed 10,000 additional copies of the work known as the "Growth of Industrial Art," of which 3,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 6,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives; the remaining 1,000 copies shall be turned over to the Secretary of the Interior, to be sold by him under the provisions of the resolution providing for the sale of public documents by said Secretary, approved March 3, 1887.

Be it further resolved, That the plates on which the work has already been printed shall be used to do this work, unless it be found that the work can be done more cheaply by using other plates:

to the Committee on Printing.

By Mr. NORTON:

Whereas the Postmaster-General of the United States is authorized under the provisions of existing laws to appoint such post-office inspectors and such special agents as the good of the service and the safety of the mail may require; and

Whereas such post-office inspectors and special agents are allowed a stated salary, and also a per diem allowance for incidental and traveling expenses while actually employed in the service; and

Whereas it is currently reported that the present Postmaster-General has been employing the time of such post-office inspectors and special agents in investigating the claims of contending Republican applicants for appointment as postmasters, and paying for such services out of the public funds; and

Whereas such practices are contrary to the laws of the land, subversive of good government, and such outlays of the public moneys wholly unauthorized:

Therefore, Be it resolved, That the Postmaster-General be, and he is hereby, requested to furnish as speedily as practicable to the House of Representatives a statement of what post-office inspectors or special agents, if any, have been employed or directed to investigate the standing and claims of rival applicants for appointments as postmasters, and if so, where, when, and in what cases, reports have been made by such inspectors or special agents, either under the direction of said Postmaster-General or by any officer of the Department under his control, and what amount of money or moneys have been paid out of the public funds for the salaries of such post-office inspectors and special agents while employed as hereinbefore mentioned, and the amount of per diem so paid such employees; to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, reports of committees on bills of the following titles were delivered to the Clerk, ordered to be printed, and referred as follows:

Mr. ATKINSON, of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department, reported favorably the bill (H. R. 4625) regulating settlement of military claims, and for other purposes—to the House Calendar.

Mr. BOOTHMAN, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 3644) for the relief of the estate of John W. Whitfield, reported as a substitute therefor a bill (H. R. 8338) for the relief of the estate of John W. Whitfield; which was read twice, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. REED, of Iowa, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported with amendment the bill (H. R. 7044) to amend section 707 of the Revised Statutes—to the House Calendar.

Mr. GROUT, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported with amendment the bill (S. 4) authorizing the establishing of a public park in the District of Columbia—to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported with amendment the bill (H. R. 8104) to amend section 2166, Revised Statutes of the United States—to the House Calendar.

Mr. BURTON, from the Committee on Claims, reported favorably the bill (H. R. 6008) releasing S. H. Brooks, assistant subtreasurer of the United States, and his sureties on his official bond—to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. MCCORMICK, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 4632) to establish a circuit and district court at Johnson City, Tenn., reported, as a substitute therefor, a bill (H. R. 8346) to create a new division in the eastern judicial district of the State of Tennessee—which was read twice, and referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. SWENEY, from the Committee on Commerce, reported favorably ably the bill (H. R. 278) to amend paragraph 3 of section 4414 of the Revised Statutes—to the House Calendar.

Mr. BURTON, from the Committee on Claims, reported favorably the bill (H. R. 2309) for the relief of Stubbs & Lacey—to the Committee of the Whole House.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, March 19, 1890.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The VICE-PRESIDENT resumed the chair.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting, in response to a resolution of December 19, 1889, the report and findings of a court of inquiry appointed to ascertain whether formal organizations not expressly authorized by the Navy Department exist among naval officers; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 6419) to amend section 2294 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and for other purposes was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, presented a joint resolution of the General Assembly of Iowa; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Joint resolution No. 3.]

Memorial and joint resolution relative to the construction of a canal from the Mississippi River to the Illinois River at Hennepin, in the State of Illinois.

Whereas the question of cheap transportation by an uninterrupted water route between the Mississippi River and the Atlantic seaboard, by way of the Great Lakes, has long been one of all-absorbing interest to the people of the food-producing States of the Northwest; and

Whereas the General Assembly of Iowa has repeatedly memorialized Congress for the construction of this water route and urged upon Congress the construction of the same; and

Whereas the construction of this canal has received more indorsement since 1844 than any other water way on the continent of America; and

Whereas a board of civil engineers has surveyed, located, and approved of the construction of this water way from Hennepin to the Mississippi River at the mouth of Rock River; and

Whereas at the water convention held September 3 and 4 in Cincinnati, Ohio, a resolution passed said convention, urging upon Congress to make an immediate appropriation therefor: Now, therefore,

Be it resolved by the General Assembly of the State of Iowa, That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be requested to vote for and use their active influence to effect such legislation by Congress as will secure an appropriation to commence the construction of said canal at an early day, and they are also requested to vote a liberal appropriation therefor, to the end that said canal may be completed and opened to the commerce of the country at the earliest possible date.

Resolved, That the secretary of state be, and he is hereby, instructed to forthwith transmit a copy hereof to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

A. F. MESERVEY,
President of the Senate pro tempore.
J. T. HAMILTON,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Approved March 11, 1890.

I hereby certify that this resolution originated in the Senate and is known as "Memorial and joint resolution No. 3."

W. R. COCHRANE, Secretary Senate.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, presented joint resolution of the General Assembly of Iowa; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas gross and unprincipled adulterations of lard are made by the mixture of cotton-seed oil and other inferior oils with pure lard; and

Whereas such a mixture is put up by the great syndicates of packers in the United States and sold as pure steam-refined lard to the consumers of this and foreign countries, which practice is seriously detrimental to Iowa farmers; and

Whereas such practice is unjust and ruinous to the hog-raisers of Iowa and the great West: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the Senate (the House concurring), That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be earnestly requested and urged to introduce and vote for a law looking to the punishment of such fraudulent transactions, and compelling vendors of adulterated foods, and especially lard, to label it with the name, its constituent elements, and the quantity of each ingredient used in forming the compound.

The secretary of the Senate is instructed to send a copy of these resolutions to our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

I hereby certify that the foregoing concurrent resolution passed both branches of the Twenty-third General Assembly on the 4th day of March, A. D. 1890.

W. R. COCHRANE, Secretary of Senate.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, presented a joint resolution of the General Assembly of Iowa; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Joint resolution No. 4.]

To the Congress of the United States, in relation to the arrears of pensions:
Be it resolved by the General Assembly of the State of Iowa, That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be, and they are hereby, earnestly requested to use their best efforts to secure the repeal of the limitation contained in the arrears act of 1879, so that all invalid soldiers shall share alike, and their pensions shall begin with the date of disability or discharge, and not with the date of their application.

That the secretary of state transmit a certified copy of this resolution to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

A. F. MESERVEY,
President of the Senate pro tempore.
J. T. HAMILTON,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Approved March 11, 1890.

I hereby certify that this resolution originated in the Senate and is known as "Joint resolution No. 4."

W. R. COCHRANE, Secretary Senate.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, presented resolutions of Farmers' Alliance No. 1168, of Hawthorne, Iowa, in favor of the passage of an act prohibiting speculation in raw and manufactured farm products; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. DAWES presented a petition of Union No. 2, Bricklayers and Masons' International Union of America, of Holyoke, Mass., and the petition of Union No. 11, Bricklayers and Masons' International Union of America, of North Adams, Mass., praying for an amendment to the labor laws, etc.; which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a petition of Albert Pierce, president, George M. Bowker, secretary, and others, members, of the Fitchburg Letter-Carriers' Association of Fitchburg, Mass., praying that increased compensation be granted to letter-carriers; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. VOORHEES presented a memorial of the Monthly Meeting of Friends, numbering 437 adult members, of Marion, Grant County, Indiana, remonstrating against the appropriation of large sums of money for the Navy and so-called coast defenses, and other warlike preparations; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. VOORHEES. I present a memorial signed by a large number of citizens of Richmond, in the county of Wayne, State of Indiana, remonstrating against the enactment of any law in regard to the observance of the Sabbath or the Lord's Day or any other religious or ecclesiastical institution or rite, and against the adoption of any resolution for the amendment of the national Constitution that would in any way give preference to the principles of any one religion above another, or that would in any way sanction legislation upon the subject of religion, believing that the total separation between religion and the state, assured by our national Constitution as it now is, is for the best.

I move that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FAULKNER presented a petition of the Bricklayers and Masons' International Union, No. 2, of Wheeling, W. Va., signed by Magnus Long, president, and Henry Kirchner, recording secretary, petitioning Congress to enact such laws as will secure to skilled and unskilled laborers who are citizens of the United States preference over aliens in the erection and construction by the Government or by contract of public buildings, navy-yards, fortifications, and other structures and works; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BERRY. I present a memorial of the Chickasaw Indians relating to lands of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations west of the ninety-eighth meridian of west longitude, with an accompanying statement. I move that the memorial be printed as a document and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS presented a petition of 30 members of Liberty Union, Emporia, Kans., praying for the free coinage of silver; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of Dr. Louis Mackall and other citizens of Washington, D. C., praying relief for injuries to real property caused by improvements and repairs of streets and avenues in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. SQUIRE presented a memorial of the Legislature of the State of Washington; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, STATE OF WASHINGTON,
Office of the Secretary of State.

I, Allen Weir, secretary of state of the State of Washington and custodian of the seal of said State, do hereby certify that I have carefully compared the attached instrument of writing, i. e., senate joint memorial No. 22, asking for the appropriation of $100,000 to improve Skagit River, with the original now on file in my office, and that the same is a correct transcript therefrom and of the whole of said original.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of said State, at Olympia, this 17th day of February, A. D. 1890.

ALLEN WEIR, Secretary of State.

Senate joint memorial No. 22.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States:

Your memorialist, the Legislature of the State of Washington, do most earnestly and urgently request your honorable body to appropriate $100,000 for improvement of the Skagit River.

The Skagit River, which empties into Utsalady Bay, one of the large sheets of water forming Puget Sound, is the largest river in Western Washington. Its drainage basin contains 2,900 square miles, including 300 square miles of fertile valley land, nearly level, and is covered with dense forests, principally of fir, cedar, spruce, and cottonwood.

The width of the river varies from 300 to 600 feet, and can, by the judicious expenditure of $100,000, be made navigable for a distance of 90 miles for steamers drawing from 5 to 6 feet of water. This accomplished, Skagit Valley will become one of the most productive and richest valleys in the United States, and will give employment and support to a population of 50,000 persons. Its present population is about 5,000.

The iron ore already discovered and located in the mountains at whose base the river courses is estimated by experts as sufficient in quantity and quality to supply the wants of the United States for centuries. Contiguous to these iron mountains are vast deposits of limestone. The great coal fields of Skagit Valley are unsurpassed in quality. The veins now open and awaiting transportation facilities (there being no railroad in the valley) are the "Bennett," showing a 30-foot face, the "Cumberland," showing a 15-foot face, and the "Connor," showing a 12-foot face. These three mines would, inside of sixty days, if the necessary improvements prayed for are made, furnish to the markets of the world 1,500 tons of coal daily. The additional mines that would be opened would swell the output of coal in the valley to 55,000 tons daily. This coal can be floated down the river on barges to Utsalady Bay, and then loaded on ocean vessels ready for shipment to any port in the world. Iron, coal, and limestone, in contiguous mountains, insure the building of large iron works in this valley.

The Skagit River once made a navigable highway to the ocean will protect the producer against exorbitant freight rates in the future and accelerate the opening up of its manifold resources now lying dormant. Besides its vast wealth in minerals there are floated down the Skagit River from forty to fifty million feet of logs yearly. Its soil is of the richest, producing in hay from 3 to 4 tons per acre, oats from 95 to 130 bushels per acre. Its fruits are equal to those of California. Sugar-beets, potatoes, and other roots are wondrously prolific in growth. A fine quality of tobacco is also raised.

The granting of the prayer of your memorialist will open up the vast resources of this valley, for which your memorialist will ever pray.

Passed the senate January 20, 1890.

Passed the house January 21, 1890.

J. W. FEIGHAN, Speaker of the House.

Mr. MOODY presented a petition of citizens of South Dakota, praying for the enactment of a national Sunday-rest law; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. ALLISON presented a joint resolution of the General Assembly of Iowa; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Joint resolution No. 3.

Memorial and joint resolution relative to the construction of a canal from the Mississippi River to the Illinois River at Hennepin, in the State of Illinois.

Whereas the question of cheap transportation by an uninterrupted water route between the Mississippi River and the Atlantic seaboard, by way of the Great Lakes, has long been one of all-absorbing interest to the people of the food-producing States of the Northwest; and

Whereas the General Assembly of Iowa has repeatedly memorialized Congress for the construction of this water route and urged upon Congress the construction of the same; and

Whereas the construction of this canal has received more indorsement since 1844 than any other water way on the continent of America; and

Whereas a board of civil engineers has surveyed, located, and approved of the construction of this water way from Hennepin to the Mississippi River at the mouth of Rock River; and

Whereas at the water convention held September 2 and 4 in Cincinnati, Ohio, a resolution passed said convention, urging upon Congress to make an immediate appropriation therefor: Now, therefore,

Be it resolved by the General Assembly of the State of Iowa, That our Senators and Representatives in Congress are requested to vote for and use their active influence to effect such legislation by Congress as will secure an appropriation to commence the construction of said canal at an early day, and they are also requested to vote a liberal appropriation therefor, to the end that said canal may be completed and opened to the commerce of the country at the earliest possible date.

Resolved, That the secretary of state be, and he is hereby, instructed to forthwith transmit a copy hereof to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

A. F. MESERVEY,
President of the Senate pro tempore.
J. T. HAMILTON,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Approved March 11, 1890.

HORACE BOIES.

I hereby certify that this resolution originated in the senate and is known as "Memorial and joint resolution No. 3."

W. R. COCHRANE, Secretary Senate.

Mr. ALLISON presented resolutions of the Federation of Labor of the District of Columbia, in favor of the passage of a law authorizing the Government to loan money to the people at a low rate of interest; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of the governor and other State officers, members of the General Assembly of the State of Iowa, of the supreme court, and other citizens of the State of Iowa, praying for certain pension legislation; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of 44 citizens of Freeport, Iowa, and a petition of 36 citizens of Polk County, Iowa, praying for the free coinage of silver; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SPOONER presented resolutions adopted by Joseph Bailey Post, No. 133, Department of Wisconsin, Grand Army of the Republic, favoring the passage of the service-pension bill; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PIERCE presented a petition of 41 farmers of New Jersey, praying for the passage of Senate bill 2607, creating a commission to investigate the cause of agricultural depression; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. BLAIR, I present a petition from the State Normal College, of Troy, Ala., praying for the passage of the educational bill. It is from the Normal College of that State, and the petition is signed by the faculty, Edwin R. Eldridge, president, Edward M. Shackelford, and various other professors of the institution, strongly setting forth their desire for the passage of the bill, and stating that those from the South who oppose it misrepresent the general wish of the educators and the people.

I also present a telegram addressed to myself, which is a petition from the State Camp of the Patriotic Order Sons of America of Ohio, in which they urge the adoption of the educational bill, believing it to be for the best interests of our educational system, the mainstay of American liberty and civilization. It is signed by the State secretary, E. J. Swerer. This is from Columbus, Ohio, the State organization. Last night I introduced and had printed in the RECORD a like petition from the organization in Cincinnati, Ohio.

I move that these petitions lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BLAIR presented the petition of B. W. Annett, B. T. Tanner, bishops, and 7 presiding elders of the Florida Conference of the African Methodist Episcopal Church, and the petition of John R. Scott and 62 others, citizens of Florida, praying for the passage of the educational bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PADDOCK presented four memorials, signed by 250 citizens of Nebraska, remonstrating against any material alteration in the existing immigration and naturalization laws; which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. BLODGETT presented a petition of the president and secretary of the Journeymen Bricklayers and Plasterers' Association of Trenton, N. J., praying that none but American citizens be employed in the construction of public buildings; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HALE presented a petition of the subordinate Union, No. 2, of Portland, Me., of the Bricklayers and Masons' International Union of America, praying for legislation that shall limit the employment upon Government works to citizens of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a memorial of subordinate Union, No. 1, Bricklayers and Masons' International Union of America, of Cincinnati, Ohio, and a memorial of subordinate Union, No. 6, Bricklayers and Masons' International Union of America, of Canton, Ohio, remonstrating against the employment of aliens on Government works; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of Typographical Union, No. 3, of Cincinnati, Ohio, praying for the passage of an international copyright bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SHERMAN. I present the petition of Samuel Sly, of Wichita, Kans., praying for the establishment of a bank and fiscal agent of the United States, accompanied by the draught of a bill to incorporate, establish, and create a bank and fiscal agent of the United States of North America. Upon statements made to me by a Senator that the gentleman who prepared the bill is a man of ability and a good lawyer, I ask that the petition and bill be printed, simply as a document, not as a bill introduced. I do not introduce it as a bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. What reference does the Senator from Ohio desire?

Mr. SHERMAN. Let the papers be referred to the Committee on Finance and printed as a document.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered, if there be no objection.

Mr. TELLER presented a memorial of the Legislature of Colorado, praying for the construction of a deep-water harbor on the Gulf coast of Texas; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HOAR presented a petition of citizens and residents of Holyoke, Mass., and a petition of citizens of North Adams, Mass., praying for such amendment of certain laws having reference to the erection of public buildings as that none but citizens of the United States be employed thereon; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. FRYE presented a petition of subordinate Union of the Bricklayers and Masons' International Union, of Portland, Me., praying for an amendment of the law so that none but citizens of the United States shall be employed on Government works; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. EVARTS presented the memorial of the Yorktown Monthly Meeting of Friends, of Westchester County, New York, remonstrating against expenditures for the Navy, coast defenses, etc.; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also presented a petition of 101 citizens of Homer, N. Y., praying for the free coinage of silver; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. DANIEL presented a petition of 260 members of the Farmers' Alliance of Sussex County, Virginia; a petition of 46 citizens of Loudoun County, Virginia; a petition of 39 citizens of Loudoun County, Virginia; and a petition of 42 citizens of Loudoun County, Virginia, praying for the free coinage of silver; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. PLATT. I present a petition of the Bricklayers and Masons' International Union of America, by one of its subordinate unions, at New Haven, Conn., relating to the passage of some law which shall secure to citizens of the United States the right to labor on Government works in preference to aliens.

I notice that petitions of a similar character have been this morning referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, but it seems to me that perhaps this petition should go to the Committee on Education and Labor. If there be no objection, I should like to have it take that reference.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so referred, if there be no objection.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. ALLEN, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1127) to pay Emma S. Cameron, widow of James Cameron for property taken and used by the Army during the late war, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. ALLISON, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4970) to simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenues, reported it with amendments.

Mr. FAULKNER, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 371) for the relief of the Mobile Marine Dock Company, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2931) granting jurisdiction to the Court of Claims, notwithstanding any statutory bar, of the claims of J. F. Bailey & Co. and others, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. MITCHELL, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 632) for the relief of P. B. Sinnott, late Indian agent at Grande Ronde agency, State of Oregon, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar. Mr. MITCHELL. That bill has heretofore passed the Senate three times. I ask in unanimous consent, if it leads to no discussion, that the Senate allow it to be passed now.

Mr. VOORHEES. I shall have to object.

Mr. MITCHELL. I will not interfere with the Senator from Indiana, who desires to speak this morning.

Mr. SPOONER, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 245) for the relief of Albert H. Emery, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 222) providing for the erection of a public building at the city of Norfolk, Nebr., reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. STANFORD, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 605) to increase the appropriation for the erection of a public building at Troy, N. Y., reported it without amendment.

Mr. MOODY. From the Committee on Pensions I report the bill (S. 1208) granting a pension to Sarah A. Blakely adversely, on the ground that her application is not completed in the Pension Bureau. I move that the bill be postponed indefinitely.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MOODY, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 1238) granting a pension to Daniel Donovan; and

A bill (S. 2309) for the relief of Joseph O. Cotton, dependent father of Gregory H. Cotton.

Mr. WOLCOTT, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 243) for the relief of Frank Della Terre and Susan F. Della Terre, heirs of Peter Della Terre, deceased, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 681) making an appropriation for the benefit of the estate of William Moss, deceased, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

INTRODUCTION OF CONTAGIOUS DISEASES.

Mr. HARRIS. The Committee on Epidemic Diseases, to which were referred the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 140) to prevent the introduction of contagious diseases from one State to another, and for the punishment of certain offenses, directs me to report them back and move that the Senate concur in the House amendments.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendments of the House of Representatives will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In lines 10 and 11, after the word "to," strike out the words "make an." In line 20, after the word "disease," insert "The said rules and regulations shall be prepared by the Supervising Surgeon-General of the Marine-Hospital Service under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the amendments? The Chair hears none. The question is on concurring in the amendments made by the House of Representatives.

The amendments were concurred in.

ISAAC ENDALY.

Mr. TURPIE. I am directed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5751) to increase the pension of Isaac Endaly, to report it favorably. The claimant under this bill is ninety-eight years old and is utterly destitute of means except $8 a month which he is drawing as a pensioner of the war of 1812. He is feeble in health, and time seems to be the essence of relief in his case. I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to increase the pension of Isaac Endaly, a private in Captain Smith's company of Tennessee Militia, in the war of 1812 between the United States and Great Britain, to $50 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. INGALLS introduced a bill (S. 3178) for the improvement of Calcasieu River and Passes, Louisiana; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3179) to grant additional bounty to the soldiers and sailors of the late war: which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. GORMAN introduced a bill (S. 3180) for the relief of John M. Robinson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SAWYER introduced a bill (S. 3181) to constitute Port Washington, Wis., a port of delivery and to extend the provisions of the act of June 10, 1880, entitled "An act to amend the statutes in relation to immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes," to the said port of Port Washington; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. COKE introduced a bill (S. 3182) for improving Aransas Pass; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HIGGINS introduced a bill (S. 3183) granting a pension to Amanda M. Smyth; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FAULKNER introduced a bill (S. 3184) for the relief of Adam Kidwiler; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3185) for the relief of the trustees of the Presbyterian Church of Springfield, Hampshire County, West Virginia; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3186) for the relief of E. C. Trimble; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3187) for the relief of Robert Thompson; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. TELLER introduced a bill (S. 3188) to increase the pension of Daniel Clark; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BARBOUR. I introduce a bill by request. I desire it noted that I am not committed to it.

The bill (S. 3189) to authorize the construction of the Potomac River Railroad in the District of Columbia, and to define the route of the same, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. HARRIS, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of Asa B. Ayers be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Claims, there having been no adverse report thereon.

REPORT ON IMPORTED LIQUORS.

On motion of Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, it was Ordered, That Senate report 610, Fiftieth Congress, first session, relating to imported liquors, be reprinted for the use of the Senate, including the views of the minority.

MARY B. LE ROY.

Mr. GORMAN. The Senate yesterday passed the bill (S. 314) for the relief of Mary B. Le Roy. There was a slight mistake in the bill, simply of a word. I ask that the votes by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed be reconsidered, so that the necessary correction may be made. It will only take a moment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maryland moves that the votes by which the bill indicated by him was ordered to a third reading and was passed be reconsidered.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is before the Senate and open to amendment.

Mr. GORMAN. In line 7, before the words "to be," I move to strike out the word "same," and to insert the word "sum;" so as to read:

The sum of $50 per month during her widowhood, that sum to be in lieu of her present pension.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT TAUNTON, MASS.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill (S. 1548) for the erection of a public building at Taunton, Mass., was passed yesterday. I should like to inquire if that bill has been sent to the other House?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It has not been.

Mr. HOAR. I wish the motion to reconsider to be entered simply, and the matter to lie over.

I desire to state that the motion to reconsider is made, not because of any doubt about the propriety of the bill, if it exists anywhere, but I understand there have been some little differences of policy between the draughtsmen of this class of bills in this body and in the other, and that it is possible there will be a conference before long on some other bill which will determine the policy of both Houses in regard to the matter. If that be true, this bill will be amended or not so as to conform to what the two Houses shall agree upon in reference to the other bill.

Several SENATORS. This is a Senate bill.

Mr. HOAR. It is a Senate bill, but if it goes down to the other House and has to be amended there, it will have to come back. If it goes to the other House in the shape which that body will probably pass it, it will not be delayed by a return.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to reconsider.

Mr. HOAR. I do not desire to have the motion put now. I desire simply to enter it, and leave it for the time being.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion will be entered.

DEPRESSION OF AGRICULTURAL INTERESTS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there further morning business? If not, that order is closed, and the Chair lays before the Senate the resolution submitted on a previous day by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES]. The resolution will be read.

The resolution submitted by Mr. VOORHEES on the 17th instant was read, as follows:

Whereas the deep and widespread depression and decay of the agricultural interests of the American people, the enormous and appalling amount of mortgage indebtedness on agricultural lands, the total failure of home markets to furnish remunerative prices for farm products, the palpable scarcity and insufficiency of money in circulation in the hands of the people with which to transact the business of the country and effect exchanges of property and labor at fair rates, are circumstances of the most overwhelming importance to the safety and the well-being of the Government; Therefore,

Be it resolved, That it is the highest duty of Congress in the present crisis to lay aside all discussion and consideration of mere party issues and to give prompt and immediate attention to the preparation and adoption of such measures as are required for the relief of the farmers and other overtaxed and underpaid laborers of the United States.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, there is trouble at this time in the hearts and minds of the farmers of this country. There is a deep, strong current of discontent, anxiety, and alarm prevailing in all the farming regions of the United States, and that current is growing swifter, stronger, and more threatening every hour. The spirit of unrest, irritation, and reproach is abroad amongst the tillers of the soil to an extent never before known in American history. The millions who plow and sow and reap are being moved by a mighty and concerted impulse to inquire into the causes which have led to their present calamitous and oppressed condition.

I propose on this occasion to aid them to the extent of my ability in pushing this most natural and necessary inquiry and in securing an honest and truthful answer. The farmer is the progenitor of the human race, and was the first to stand in the presence of the Creator and to receive from Him the decree of the divine mind on the question of labor. From the farmer's loins has descended the human family, with all its widespread and far-reaching branches, and wherever his dignity, honor, and prosperity have been ignored or trampled under foot, there the worst forms of government and the darkest scenes of barbarism have been found. God created a farmer to begin with, and, in all the ages since, His blessings have been most abundant and His civilization most glorious in the history of the nations and peoples where the farmer has ranked highest and where his comfort and prosperity have been the greatest care and chief concern of government.

The foundations of all human progress are in the hands of the farmer, and are laid by him as he asserts dominion by his daily toil over the tremendous forces and illimitable resources of nature. Who fails to be fascinated by a contemplation of the commerce of the seas? The thought is a most inspiring one that at this moment the richly freighted ships of all the nations of the earth are moving through all the oceans, and swarming on all the coasts and into all the harbors known to civilized man; and yet all this mighty system of commerce, traffic, and exchange is as dependent upon the corn-fields and wheat-fields of the farmer as the fields themselves are upon the dews and rains and sunshine of heaven. How brilliant, wonderful, and awe-inspiring appear the great cities of the world to the casual glance of the unreflecting mind.

The ordinary traveler speeds on and on, thousands of miles through farm lands, gazing listlessly at farm houses and farm productions, thinking nothing of the vast fundamental lessons they teach, but looking eagerly forward to the problems, mysteries, and wealth contrivances of the crowded, speculating, stock-gambling city which he is rapidly approaching; and yet that city would wither and perish, shrivel back to a barren, naked beach; its wharfs would rot, and its swollen corporations and haughty millionaires would dwindle into poverty-stricken skeletons, no better fed than Pharaoh's lean kine, were it not that the fountains of all its wealth, support, and grandeur are kept open and running, day and night, by the cultivation of the soil in the great domain of agriculture.

Gilded palaces, baronial castles, marble halls, colossal estates outrivaling in value the richest dukedoms of the Old World, all draw their sustenance from the bosom of mother earth; their roots strike deep into the mold that is turned by the plow, and the farmer at last is made to pay for all. It is estimated that over twenty millions of the present population of the United States, counting all ages and both sexes, are engaged in the cultivation of the soil, and on their productive labor, not only the Government itself leans for support, but also all other classes of citizens derive from the same source their prosperity, their wealth, and too often their profuse and criminal luxuries. Is it not well, therefore, in the present juncture of affairs, to turn away from less important questions and look carefully into the condition of the agricultural masses, who bear the burdens and constitute the strength and glory of the Republic?

Sir, it is now nearly thirty years since the crisis of a terrible war gave to unhallowed avarice an opportunity to prey upon the self-sacrificing patriotism of the country and to plunder the laboring people of their hard and honest earnings, such as was never before in the history of nations presented to the basest passion and most sordid and odious vice in the fallen nature of man. In all the financial counsels of the Government at that time, Mammon, the demon of riches for the favored few, seemed to preside and control.

Mammon, the least erected spirit that fell
From heaven; for 'e'en in heaven his looks and thoughts
Were always downward bent, admiring more
The riches of heaven's pavement, trodden gold,
Than aught divine or holy else enjoyed
In vision beatific.

Nor did this evil god of ill-gotten wealth, this fallen angel of greed and lust for gold, once a dweller in heaven, but now an inhabitant of hell, for a moment fall short of his delineation by Milton when, in his base, hard, grinding, and oppressive spirit, our present financial system, with its many and widespread branches and its far-reaching and destructive consequences, was organized and enacted during the war. No "vision beatific" of an unselfish patriotism, of mighty, mustering multitudes, comprising the flower of the land marching to the altar of self-sacrifice, and treading with high heroic step and mien the wine-press of the battle-field; no vision of a Union restored, a country united, and a flag floating in the sunlight of peace ever for an instant allured the thoughts or diverted the gaze of the American Mammon and his ignoble concave when they were engaged in laying deep and strong the foundations of the plutocracy, the giant money power, which now governs and curses this country and its laboring people.

A system of finance has been fastened on the American people with more hands than the fabled Briareus, and each one with an itching palm to clutch the fruits of honest industry for the enrichment of those who toil not, and yet outvie in splendor many of the crowned heads of Europe. Of this oppressive system there are many parts and contrivances, all skillfully woven together like a great network and having all the time the same object in view, the taxation of one class of citizens for the enrichment of another class. It is sometimes said that certain old sins of the Government should not be recalled at this late day; that they have the sanction of time, wear a venerable aspect, and should be condoned.

When ministers of the christian religion cease to denounce the sins and crimes of the human race because they are old, "hoary and white with beld," then, and not till then, will the fraudulent manner in which our bonded debt was doubled on the tax-payer be forgotten; then, and not till then, will the demonization of silver be forgiven, and then, and not till then, will a high protective tariff, existing not for revenue, but as a machine with which to gorge, glut, and cram the privileged few at the expense of the many, cease to exasperate and inflame the indignation of the intelligent laborers of the world.

The tariff, with all its overwhelming prominence and its overwhelming oppression at this time, is but a part of the vast system devised more than a quarter of a century ago, whereby a moneyed aristocracy has been created, labor degraded and deprived of its earnings, and the Government itself revolutionized in spirit, and soon to be revolutionized in substance and in form. It is true that, while the tariff is only a part of the money-power system of Government, yet its place and agency in that system are of the most vital and commanding influence in its execution. To take toll from all the laboring men, women, and children of the United States on all their wants and necessities, not for Government revenue, but for the protection of the millionaire manufacturers, powerful corporations, trusts, and syndicates, is the base function of the tariff laws now on our statute-books.

Who has the hardihood to rise and say that such laws are now or ever have been or ever will be a blessing to the farmer? On the one hand behold the present condition of the farmer and on the other behold the towering peaks of the highest protective tariff ever known, with perhaps the exception of the Chinese wall. Will you dare go before the distressed farmers of the country in the approaching political canvass with the old, stale, worn-out falsehood that a high protective tariff is for them an event of joy, a rich benefaction, a season of prosperity, and of home markets at good prices? Such a lie in this year of 1890, like a murderer's prayer, will stick in the throat of him who tries to utter it. When you again push the tariff, with its enormous and unnecessary taxation on every article of farming life, into the farmer's weather-beaten and care-worn face as a wise policy for him, will he not exclaim in indignation at your fraudulent pretense—

Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles?

Even so every good tree bringeth forth good fruit; but a corrupt tree bringeth forth evil fruit.

A good tree can not bring forth evil fruit, neither can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit.

Every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down, and cast into the fire. Wherefore by their fruits ye shall know them.

Are you willing to have your tariff tree, your protective policy, tried by this high and immortal standard? The able and distinguished Secretary of State under the present Administration, in a recent magazine article in reply to Mr. Gladstone, has pointed out certain periods in American affairs when, as he claims, there was general prosperity in connection with a protective tariff, and that therefore, by virtue of the unrepeatable laws of cause and effect, prosperity was begotten by protection, and the laboring people, the farmers especially, were blessed in their homes and at their firesides by being forced to buy what they needed in a high-priced market protected from competition and to sell their products, whatever they might be, according to the cheap prices prevailing in the London markets and in the other markets of the civilized world, where no protective policy is known and where the wheat and other great staples of the United States are brought face to face in competition for sale with the productions of the serf labor of Russia, the Sepoy servitude of the Indies, and the practical slavery of other portions of the globe.

I will not stop to controvert, as others have successfully done, the Secretary's accuracy in his statement of historical facts; I need not dwell on the past for the support of my contention that a protective tariff is a curse, and not a blessing. I am not dealing with a theory, but with a condition on which even a blind man, by brief, primary instruction, can look with unclouded vision and reach an unerring conclusion. What is the issue this day between the farmer and the restrictions, repressions, and extortions of a protective tariff? That is the question to consider; that is the question in which American farmers are now everywhere most vitally interested. Are they gathering figs, are they plucking good fruits from the policy of their Government? I challenge the advocates of the present system of protection to answer on this floor or anywhere else.

The farmers of the United States are this hour realizing, upon a general average, not more than 10 cents per bushel for corn, 50 cents per bushel for wheat,  $2\frac{1}{2}$  to 3 cents a pound for hogs, a cent and a half to 2 cents for fat cattle, and even this low and almost nominal rate of prices would be reduced to nothing at all, and the farmers would be brought in debt if the expenses of production as well as of transportation were taken into the account. The compensation to the farmer for the enormous and infernal tax he has to pay under the tariff on all he needs and all he uses has always been the loud, prolonged, and vehement promise of an eager, remunerative home market for all he raised and wanted to sell. Where is that home market? The farmer is hunting for it, and mourning because it is not to be found. Home market! What lies have been told in its name!

The ignorant charlatan and the designing knave have alike poured falsehoods into the ears of the people, assuring the unsuspecting, and those of easy faith in the direction especially of their party ties, that home markets are created and sustained by a protective tariff, until now, after all these years of deception and lucrative mendacity on the part of the money power and its advocates, thousands of farmers in different parts of the country, owning and tilling lands richer far than the Delta of the Nile, are pointing in derision and scorn of all tariff protection to their stoves and fire-places as their only home market for corn. The rich contents of their corn-cribs, the fruits of the year's toil, have become cheaper as fuel than wood or coal, and as they mournfully gaze on this great staple breadstuff turning to ashes for want of a market in this land of railroads, rivers, and lakes, it would seem as if all their hopes of relief at the hands of the party now in power would perish in the same way.

Experience is teaching a harsh and severe lesson to the American farmer, and the time will come, at no distant day, when he will look upon the proposition to tax him, his wife, and his children for the protection and benefit of other people besides himself and his own as he would look upon a law of Congress establishing the army worm, the weevil, and the midge in his wheat, legalizing locusts, lice, grasshoppers, and infecting his cattle with murrain and his hogs with cholera. It is not possible that the fraudulent and monstrous policy of taxing the farmer into poverty in order to make another class of people nabobs and millionaires can much longer delude and mislead any one fit to manage his own affairs and have the care of a family.

From year to year the farmer has been assured, and in certain quarters he is now again being reminded, that protection is extended to the products of his labor against the competition of similar products imported from abroad for sale in our markets. The protectionist who advances this argument is either himself a fool or an audacious knave, who assumes that the farmers to whom it is addressed are fools. Do the home markets of the United States invite the great staples of agriculture from foreign lands? Does the price of wheat, of corn, of cotton, of pork, and of beef in our markets excite the cupidity of the grain-growers and stock-raisers of Europe, Canada, Mexico, or South America? What need is there of a tariff duty to keep the products of foreign farms away from our shores, when in point of fact prices in American markets for agricultural productions pay the American farmer but little more than neighborhood transportation and nothing at all for his labor?

The farmers of the United States sell abroad and feed the world. Every pretense of protection for their home markets is a fraud; every duty laid on such articles as wheat, corn, cattle, horses, eggs, poultry, and other like productions of farm life and farm labor is a cheat and a sham, and is so intended. Under cover of a deceptive and pretended protection, which affords no protection at all for anything he has to sell, the farmer has been for years, and is now, compelled to pay taxes on the necessities of life after the following average rates: On woolen goods, an average of 70 per cent.; knit cotton goods, 39 per cent.; cotton clothing, 35 per cent.; cotton bagging, 44 per cent.; cotton ties, 35 per cent.; tin-plate for roofing, milk pails, and kitchen utensils, 40 per cent.; earthen and stone ware, 58 per cent.; chains, 44 per cent.; window-glass, 73 per cent., and sugar, 70 per cent.

To convince the farmer that he is protected and benefited by such an abominable system as this would seem to a rational mind utterly impossible, and yet in some instances it has been done. I recall one instance at this time, and I will venture to describe it to Senators as I have once before done to a popular assemblage. During the campaign of 1888, in one of our beautiful Indiana towns and in a very fertile belt of country, I witnessed a Republican procession. It had in it many industrial exhibits, claiming to show the power and the glory of a tariff laid for protection. As I scanned the long line of moving vehicles I caught sight of one that riveted my gaze and gave me much food for reflection on the power to mislead and deceive which was abroad in the land. It was a wagon driven by a farmer and loaded with the productions of his fields. There were specimens of corn, wheat, rye, hay, and oats; of potatoes, pumpkins, watermelons, and cantaloupes; of cabbages, beans, onions, pie-plant, and tomatoes; of apples, peaches, pears, grapes, and cultivated blackberries, and on each side of the wagon, in big staring letters, I read the following: "These are the fruits of protection." My first thought was that such a man would certainly become the victim of a bunco-steerer or a confidence swindler before he got out of town, but in a moment I reflected that he had been listening to the eloquent advocates of the monopolists, and had been persuaded that tariff protection had done more for him than the sun, the dews, the rains, and a rich and bountiful soil, with all his own labor thrown in.

The stupendous extent of this unfortunate man's delusion can only be estimated when you turn away from a political parade and look at him while at work on his farm. You there behold the poor, blind dupe breaking up his grounds, preparing them for crops, and then planting and drilling in his corn, wheat, oats, and rye with plows, harrows, planters, and drills on which he has paid out of his own pocket from 75 to 100 per cent., nearly double their real value, as a tariff tax laid for the protection and enrichment of the manufacturer of such implements in this country. You behold this enslaved and deluded victim of the money power cutting his small grain and his hay with a reaper and a mower for which he has paid twice what they would cost him but for a protective tariff.

He uses a double-priced hoe in his cabbage patch and a double-priced pitchfork at his hay-mow and wheat-stack, in order to enable the manufacturers of hoes and pitchforks to avoid foreign competition and thus get rich. He then puts a set of harness on his horses, taxed from the bridle-bits to the breech-bands and every buckle, link, and chain, hitches them to a wagon taxed 85 per cent., at least, on every bolt, spike, and tire that holds it together, and then, with a suit of clothes on his back taxed at about the same rate and with his wife by his side, also covered with raiment at twofold-protected prices, he starts to town shouting for the Republican party, the sideboards of his wagon proclaiming that the productions of his farm are the fruits of protection.

The fruits of protection! They were planted, nurtured, and gathered in spite of protection, and at a double expense because of such a curse in the statute-books of the Government. It is a notorious and self-evident truth that the tariff, as it now stands, increases the farmer's expense account from 35 to over 100 per cent. on every implement of husbandry with which he toils from one year's end to another.

The Mills bill attempted to place all fibers, such as hemp, jute, flax goods, and manila, used in the manufacture of twine, on the free-list. That just and moderate bill was defeated by the monopolists; and now, with a tariff of $20 a ton and 40 per cent. ad valorem on twine, and also a twine trust, creating a close monopoly in its manufacture, thousands of farmers during last summer's harvest were not able to pay the increased price of twine-binders. They have been forced back to the machinery of their naked hands, and with bloody fingers and thumbs they have reflected upon the price of binding-twine, enhanced to 15 cents a pound by tariff and by trust. It is true that party prejudices are stubborn and hard to remove, but surely it is not too much to suppose that between these same sore fingers and thumbs a Republican ticket will not be found this year.

The very house in which the farmer lives is a monument to unnecessary, unjust, vicious, wicked, and criminal taxation. His barn is the same. There is not an inch of lumber, or a single nail, or a pane of glass in either of them which has not cost the farmer an average tax of more than 50 per cent., paid, not to the Government, but as a naked subsidy to the manufacturers of lumber, iron, and glass. His table, spread with dishes and with his daily food, is an altar reared to taxation, on which he sacrifices three times a day to the unholy god of mammon now controlling the councils of the nations and devouring the encreased offerings of unpaid labor. His bed is not a place of untrodden rest; it is lined and stitched and quilted with dishonest taxes, which he is compelled to pay before he can draw his blanket over his weary frame and sink down to sleep.

But in discussing the effects of a high protective tariff on the farmer and on his struggles for a prosperous home, there remains for consideration another page of startling statistics and agricultural disasters. In high-sounding phrase and with the swelling note of a bugle proclaiming victory in advance, the advocates, the orators, and the essayists of protection are constantly boasting of the growth and development of the country, and citing its wealth as an evidence that their policy is sound and just. But is it true that there have been a healthy development of the true interests of the American people and an honest, beneficial accumulation of wealth in this country under our present financial policy, and more especially by virtue of the present system of tariff taxation?

The prosperity of huge corporations, the accumulation of vast fortunes in the hands of the few, the swollen bank accounts of trusts, syndicates, and protected manufacturers, are no more evidences of a people's wholesome growth and greatness than were the riches of Dives when he refused a crumb of bread to Lazarus, nor than the ill-gotten possessions of the Scribes and Pharisees who devoured widows' houses and made long prayers in the days of our blessed Savior on earth. The only genuine strength, progress, and glory of a nation must arise from the increasing value of its agricultural lands and in the yearly incomes and substantial gains of its laboring people, thereby as a consequence securing their contentment and their happiness.

Sir, our present system of protective-tariff taxes was enacted twenty-eight years ago, and I deny that the farmers of the United States have been prosperous under its operation; I deny that they have had fair profits on their labor; I deny that they have had reasonable yearly incomes, or, on an average, any income at all, after barely securing the absolute necessities of life. On the contrary, I assert that while farmers have been compelled to continue the payment of war taxes in a time of peace there has been not only no increase in the value of their lands during the last quarter of a century, but an absolute loss of not less than 33 per cent.

Reliable statistics warrant me in saying that the improved farm lands of the United States, if put to sale to-day under the most favorable circumstances now possible, would not upon a general average realize more than two-thirds their value twenty-five years ago. Take the lands of the State of Ohio as an illustration of this startling fact. Ohio is one of the most favored States by nature in the American Union, and yet three years ago Governor Foraker, in an official address, comparing the value of real estate in 1837 with what it was in 1880 in that great Commonwealth, said:

There has been a heavy decline. Farm property is from 25 to 50 per cent. cheaper than it then was.

But the rich and productive lands of Ohio have been not only rapidly diminishing in value, but their owners have also been forced to mortgage them to a most alarming extent. It is estimated from official statistics that the mortgaged indebtedness of the farmers of Ohio reaches the enormous sum of $300,000,000.

In Illinois, that empire of natural resources and vast cultivation, the showing as to her farming lands and farming interests is still darker and more disastrous. A recent number of the Bankers' Magazine, commenting on the report of Mr. John S. Lord, chief of the Illinois bureau of statistics, points out the fact that the private debts secured by mortgages of record in that State exceed $402,000,000.

It is also shown that of this mortgage indebtedness $181,000,000 is outside of Cook County, the farm indebtedness, exclusive of mortgages on chattels and town lots, being $142,000,000, with an annual interest of $4,919,000. Taking the entire average of the State, 23 per cent. of its whole face is under mortgage. The Bankers' Magazine characterizes these figures as stupendous and alarming, and yet there are other States with even worse records of debt and financial distress than Illinois or Ohio. According to the last report of the Labor Bureau of Michigan, over 47 per cent. of all the farm lands within her borders are under mortgage. During the last Congress the able and accomplished Representative of the Harper's Ferry district of West Virginia made the following striking and uncontradicted statement on the floor of the House:

I do not wish to make any statement that is not sustained by the facts, and so I have obtained the last report of the labor bureau of the State of Michigan, which covers an investigation into the mortgages on Michigan farms and which presents some striking figures. I stand here to-day and say that I have not the slightest doubt that the Michigan farmer is as industrious, as hard-working, as intelligent as the farmer in any other section of the country, and yet this official volume shows that 47 per cent. of the farm lands of Michigan are covered by mortgages and that the mortgages are 46 per cent. of the assessed valuation of the farms mortgaged. Compare the condition of the unprotected Michigan farmer with the condition of the protected owner of the copper mines in Michigan, the latter piling up dividend upon dividend, million upon million, out of the privilege granted him by Congress to tax the people of this country, while the farmer is working early and delving late and piling up mortgage after mortgage upon his estate. The farmers have neither the time nor the money to come here and beseege Congress about these matters. They are chained to their plow, to their daily labor. They can not come here to look after their own interests; but the owners of the copper mines and the other industries that are protected and subsidized are here at all times in your lobbies, urging measures for their own benefit.

In Indiana, Kentucky, Missouri, Kansas, Iowa, Nebraska, and indeed throughout the whole Northwest, from 20 to 50 per cent. of the improved farms are covered by mortgage liens at such rates of interest as farmers can never pay out of the proceeds of their crops, much less also the principal. They are thus brought face to face with the loss of their homes, with ruin, and hundreds of thousands of them are standing in that attitude this day and hour. If, however, it is retorted, as we constantly hear, that the deplorable condition of Western and Northwestern farmers is local, exceptional, peculiar to themselves, growing out of their lack of thrift and skill, and not due to the general policy of the Government, it will only be necessary to turn our inquiries in another direction in order to find that the decay of values in farm lands and in farm productions has been even greater and more ruinous in the older Eastern States than in the West.

Sir, New England is the home of high protection; the busy brains of her people have been engaged from the beginning of the Government in devising tariff duties for other people to pay to the manufacturing classes, and she has placed her privileged few at the head of the money of this country, if not of the world. But like the boomerang as a weapon of war, New England's high protective-tariff policy is at last returning against her own bosom, and carrying widespread destruction to her farmers in their homes, in their lands, and in everything they possess. We are informed by Bradstreet's reliable journal, in an article on statistics—

That depopulation in rural New England is something to create wonder. Recent investigations by the State authorities of Vermont, New Hampshire, and Massachusetts show that an alarming number of farms in fair condition and once owned by thrifty farmers are abandoned entirely and turned over to the bramble and the thistle, untenanted and unrentable.

And, again, we find the following careful and amazing statement recently made public in the press of the country:

The movement to recolonize Vermont and New Hampshire with Scandinavian immigrants has brought out some significant facts with reference to these two New England States. From the State commissioner of agriculture and manufacturing interests it is learned that good farming land is passing out of occupation. In the town of Reading, Windsor County, Vermont, 4,000 acres of lands which are now or have been in former times good farms are offered for sale. One-half of these, says the commissioner, are lands which formerly comprised good farms, but with buildings now gone, and fast growing up with timber; some of this land is used for pasturage, and on other portions the fences are not kept up, leaving old cellar holes and miles of stone walls to testify to a former civilization.

Such lands can be purchased at from one to two dollars per acre. The commissioner tells of having heard of one farm of 200 acres, with fair buildings and good soil, in the township of Chelsea, Vermont, which can be bought for $100. In the township of Vershire, Orange County, there are from thirty-five to forty farms, contiguous or nearly so, abandoned or unoccupied. Many of these farms have a fair set of buildings on them, and others could be made comfortable with a small outlay. A recent telegram in the papers reported that fifteen families of Swedish immigrants had been engaged to settle in Vermont.

A gentleman in Jamaica, Windham County, has compiled a list and description of farms in that town from which the State commissioner takes the following examples:

"A farm of 200 acres, fair buildings, good sugar orchard, plenty of wood and timber, has been one of the best in the town, listed at $810.
 "A farm of 135 acres, good buildings, sugar orchard, fruit orchard, and in good state of cultivation, listed at $730.
 "A farm of 90 acres, good buildings, vacant only one year, with timber enough on the place to pay for it.
 "A farm of 23 acres, good buildings, vacant one year, listed at $225.
 "A farm of 97 acres, good buildings, sugar and fruit orchards, a good farm, listed at $700.
 "A farm of 90 acres, in a high state of cultivation, must be sold, listed at $765.
 "A farm of 155 acres, the finest location in the town; has got to be sold for what it will bring."

The Vermont commissioner then goes on to say that in Essex County there are six towns containing 89,491 acres of land, on which there are probably all told not more than fifteen or twenty families. These are described as good lands, lands that will make good productive farms, well watered, and with timber sufficient for home consumption, wanting nothing but the energy, the bone and muscle to clear them up.

"In Newark, Caledonia County, twenty-five farms, only 3 miles from railroad, can be bought for $3 to $4 per acre."

This is only a partial report on the unoccupied and abandoned farming lands in Vermont. It is known to the commissioner that there are 5,000 acres of such lands in the town of Wilmington.

These are startling facts, and what is affirmed of Vermont is also true of New Hampshire and other New England States. Extensive tracts of land, once dotted with farm-houses, are now covered with young forest trees and brambles.

The only explanation offered by the Vermont commissioner is that, of the people who once occupied these farms, some have died, others have gone West and to the cities, and none have come to fill their places.

In still another account of agricultural decay and desolation in New England I find the following melancholy facts and figures:

Vermont is bad off, and New Hampshire is no better. The last Legislature of New Hampshire appointed Mr. Bachelder to devise means by which the farming interests might be restored, if possible, and waste fields be cultivated. He sent out letters, and the replies are said to be startling. In the town of Jackson alone thirty farms have been deserted, while in Bath there are 75,000 deserted farms. And so in fifteen other towns there are from one to thirty deserted farms, while in fourteen others there are in all 21,000 vacant acres, with tumble-down buildings, and this is said to be only the beginning of the list, which promises, on the basis of what has already come in, to be a revelation. The Boston Globe says the condition of the other Northern New England States is similar.

From New York and Pennsylvania sad stories also come of the manufacturer eating up the farmer. In fact, the tiller of the soil is being ruined by a system which creates an order of plutocrats, fosters monopolies, and begets all-devouring trusts.

Sir, in the face of these appalling facts and cruel figures of ruin to the farmers of New England, as well as to the farmers of the Middle States and of the Mississippi Valley, who will now confront the country and eulogize the workings and the results of a system of tariff protection which, after a continuous trial of twenty-eight years, has accomplished nothing save the concentration, the amassment of enormous wealth in a few protected and privileged hands, depriving the people of a sufficient amount of currency in circulation, impoverishing and enslaving wage laborers, and inflicting upon farmers such a condition of financial wretchedness as to fill their hearts with bitterness and resentment against the law-making power of the Government?

With a cry resounding through the land for Scandinavians and other half-civilized races of Northern Europe to come over and recolonize American States that were of the original and immortal thirteen, who is there, here or elsewhere, to maintain and defend an economic policy under which such shameful disasters have overtaken the most meritorious, the most useful, the most honorable, and the most absolutely essential class of American citizens? With the depopulation of the agricultural regions of New England and their abandonment to the bush and the bramble; with a home market for the farmers of the United States generally for nothing at active rates, except mortgages on their lands on terms as to interest, amount, and time which render payment impossible, and foreclosure, sale, and dispossession swift and inevitable, surely it is not difficult to discover the character of the highway we are traveling or the end we are approaching.

This highway is not new; other nations have trodden it before, and have reached the overthrow of popular government and personal liberty, as we will unless the people speedily rise and rescue themselves from the awful condition in which they are involved. The improved lands of the United States, the homes of farmers, are passing under mortgage foreclosures from occupant freeholders to loan associations, to non-resident money-lenders, and becoming tenant rookeries, paying rent to a landed aristocracy. The meaning of all this is obvious in the light of history.

Ill fares the land, to hastening ills a prey,
Where wealth accumulates, and farms decay.

In the strong language of a gifted writer on this subject—

When darkness settled over Egypt and she lost her place among the great nations of the earth, 3 per cent. of her population owned 97 per cent. of her wealth. When Babylon went down, 2 per cent. of her population owned all the wealth. When Persia bowed her head, 1 per cent. of her population owned all the land. When the sun of Rome set in black despair, eighteen hundred men owned and controlled all the then known world. For the past thirty years—more particularly since the close of the civil war—the United States has moved rapidly along the path followed by these old nations. In 1850 our capitalists owned 37 1/2 per cent. of the nation's wealth. In 1870, only twenty years later, they owned 63 per cent., having almost doubled their accumulations. They have more than kept up this ratio since 1870, and probably now hold fully 80 per cent. of the total wealth of the country. What proportion of the population holds this large percent. It is not easy to determine, but it does not probably exceed 10 per cent. of the 90,000,000 who inhabit this country, and this per cent., so small in numbers, but so omnipotent in wealth, is using its immense power in every department of business and of government in the development and prosecution of schemes for making the rich richer and the poor poorer.

Sir, the inquiry as to the cause, or causes, of this appalling condition is earnest and universal among the laboring classes, and especially among farmers, at this time. The main answer is easy and obvious; it is to be found on the very surface of our affairs. Living under a plutocracy, the farmer does not own his full time and labor; he owns a part, but not all. He needs all the six days of the week in which to work for himself, his wife, and his children, but under the iniquitous system by which the tariff taxes him upon every necessary of life he is compelled to devote the proceeds of at least two days out of the six to the protection and enrichment of the robber barons.

One-third of his time the American farmer is a toiling serf for the payment, not of revenue to his Government, but of naked tribute to those who are protected in charging him from 25 to 100 per cent. more than it is worth on every article his wants compel him to buy. For two days' work, we will say, a farmer can earn a pair of blankets worth $3 to make, but which are increased in price by tariff protection to $5. To whom does the additional labor on his part, necessary to enable him to buy them, belong? The same question may be asked in regard to all his agricultural implements, his household and kitchen utensils and furniture, and all the clothing on his back, purchased in markets viciously protected in the right to add war taxes to prices for the benefit of the manufacturing monopolist on every article there sold.

Sir, we are all familiar with the name applied to a system of government by virtue of which one class owns the labor of another class, and it is a moderate and reasonable statement to make that the American laborer, and more especially the farm laborer, is already one-third slave by law, with the clutch, greed, and power of his master, the plutocracy, increasing the degree and the degradation of his servitude every hour. The relations of the laboring classes to the feudal barons of Europe during the Middle Ages were exactly the same in principle as those now existing between the laboring classes of the United States and the favored few, for whom they are hewers of wood and drawers of water.

Cedric the Saxon had no surer hold on the services of Gurth the swineherd than the lords of the money power have at this time on the hard earnings of American industry. Are we to be blind to the lessons of history? There is always a point in the oppression and enslavement of labor where safety ceases and danger begins. A tax known as corvée in France, requiring and enforcing gratuitous labor on the part of the inhabitants of a district for their lord of the manor, was one of the sore grievances which led to the French revolution. A French writer thus describes the workings of this tax:

It consisted of a number of days' work which the seigneur had the right to require annually gratis of the serf, originated with Charlemagne, only ended by the revolution. It might be required at any day, any hour, at the pleasure of the lord of the manor. He might require any sort of labor: plow the lands of the baron, train his hedges, make and clean his ditches, repair roof or walls of his castle, and even beat the water in the pond all night to keep the frogs still so that monseigneur's sleep should not be broken.

Well might Mirabeau denounce the corvée tax as "the most cruel of all servitudes," and yet the French peasantry of that period were no more required to render gratuitous services to the French aristocracy than are the grain-growers and stock-raisers of the United States to-day to render gratuitous millions and hundreds of millions annually to the coffers of those whom a high protective tariff has made their lords and masters. It remains to be seen whether the American laborer at the close of the nineteenth century will be any more patient of a corvée tax on his time and his industry than was the down-trodden French peasant of a hundred years ago.

Sir, the aristocracy of money is always cruel and coarse and unmindful of all else save its own gains and meretricious splendor. Its lavish and ostentatious displays of ill-gotten wealth often light up the whole argument on the relations between labor and capital, and point to the soundest conclusions ever found in history. Who is protected and enriched by a protective tariff? has been a question of debate prolonged through generations, but can be best determined now by pointing out as object lessons the condition of our agricultural communities on the one hand and certain arrogant, ambitious, and dazzling demonstrations of wealth which have recently taken place on the other.

There came to this country, not many years ago, a subject of Great Britain, with a keen capacity and hungry instinct for the amassment of great riches. He became a citizen of the State of Pennsylvania and engaged in manufacturing iron and steel. The productions of his mines and his mills have been and still are protected in the American markets from foreign competition by tariff duties ranging from 40 to over 100 per cent. on imported iron and steel of various kinds and in various conditions. These enormous percentages have been added to the price of all his sales, and have been paid at last by the farmer, whether the sales were for the equipment of railroads or the equipment of farms. What has been the effect of this policy on Mr. Carnegie and his fortunes? We know that his laborers have not grown rich, for only last July he gave them notice of a heavy reduction in their wages and persuaded them into submission by the presence of Pinkerton men and Springfield rifles.

Who is it, then, if not the working people, that protection has pampered into more than oriental magnificence in the iron and steel works of Pennsylvania? Three or four weeks ago there was a banquet spread in this city, a description of which the next morning was the joy and the glory of the newspapers and the sensation of the whole country. Accounts were head-lined as follows: "Like Lucullus of old—Gorgeous dinner that rivaled an ancient Roman feast—Mr. Carnegie's entertainment—Over two thousand tulips and crocuses and thousands of roses used—A menu which almost the whole world furnished—Delightful musical programme."

We are informed that this banquet was given to the President of the United States and his Cabinet, and also to the delegates and officers of the International Conference, and the brilliant reporter proceeds to say that—

All that money could provide and taste suggest to combine beauty of surroundings with the enjoyment of an epicurean repast had been brought into requisition to secure the desired end, and the result was a success far beyond that anticipated, but none the less gratifying. * * * Undoubtedly it was the most elegant affair ever given in this city, if not in the United States. The room resembled a conservatory supplied with plants and blossoms. The side halls were almost completely hid from view by plaques of palmetto leaves, intertwined with Southern smilax, deep green and glossy, and which grows wild in the Carolinas, whence this had been brought. The north hall, back of where President Harrison and Mr. Carnegie sat, was a gem from the florist's hands.

Mr. PLATT (in his seat). President Harrison was not there. Mr. VOORHEES. He sent his regrets, I believe. I heard the remark of the Senator from Connecticut and I was waiting for some such catch as that. President Harrison sent his regrets, and if he was not there he regretted it, for he said so. Would the Senator from Connecticut have been ashamed to be found there himself? I think conscience is coming to the surface somewhat.

Then, after a vast deal more of the same sort about "maiden-hair ferns," "palms 16 feet high," "mammoth four-leaf clover," "mounds of Ulrich Bruner, Gabrielle Luizeti, and Magna Charta roses," the reporter told a gaping world what the modern Lucullus, sired by a protective tariff, gave his guests to eat. Among other things, the farmers and wage-workers of the country were informed that the fish, being a "sole, was secured from England, the mutton from Scotland, and the spring chickens from Louisiana. The celery, olives, and anchovies were served in the finest cut glass, and the salted almonds and radishes in dishes of solid silver. The forks and table-ware used throughout the dinner were also of solid silver, while the plates and service com-

To the farmer now in trouble, with a mortgage on his homestead, the interest unpaid, foreclosure approaching, no demand for what he has to sell, and no money in the house—to him I commend this picture of the Carnegie banquet as the best explanation of a high protective tariff ever before known in American history. At one end of the tariff question the manufacturer, the protected monopolist, spreads an imperial banquet-board, loaded with epicurean dainties from every clime, and flowing with wines costlier than nectar, while at the other end of the question farm laborers, wage-workers, and all who live by the sweat of their faces are in deep apprehension, in sighs, in distress, and often in tears. When I reflect on the bitter trials which the farmers are undergoing at this time and the depression and suffering attendant upon other working classes, there is but one other occasion of the kind which can parallel, to my mind, the impious mockery of Carnegie's entertainment.

Belshazzar the king made a great feast to a thousand of his lords, and drank wine before the thousand.

They drank wine, and praised the gods of gold, and of silver, of brass, of iron, of wood, and of stone.

In the same hour came forth fingers of a man's hand, and wrote over against the candlestick upon the plaster of the wall of the king's palace: and the king saw the part of the hand that wrote.

Then the sacred historian says the king was filled with terror, his knees smote together, and he cried aloud, and for a time in vain, for an interpreter of the writing on the wall. An interpreter came into his presence at last and, after taxing him with the use of the sacred vessels taken from the Temple of Jerusalem, said:

And thou hast praised the gods of silver, and gold, of brass, iron, wood, and stone, which see not, nor hear, nor know: and the God in whose hand breath is, and whose are all thy ways, hast thou not glorified.

How swiftly your minds anticipate the remainder of the old and sublime story! "Mene, Mene, Tekel, Upharsin" signified the downfall of a kingdom upheld by injustice, impiety, and crime. My earnest prayer and belief is that a handwriting, beginning in the banquet halls of unrighteous monopolies and spreading over the walls of all the farm-houses and homes of labor in the United States, is now heralding the speedy overthrow of a system of extortion and robbery more wicked and criminal in the sight of God and man than all the sins of Babylon when her robes were most scarlet with iniquity.

And now, sir, having pointed out, to some extent at least, the condition of the farmers of the United States at the present time and the widespread and crushing evils which have befallen them through the criminal policy of their Government, it remains as a part of my duty to suggest such remedies as I would adopt had I the power to enact and enforce them.

First. Tariff reform should be so thorough, complete, and unsparing that, after providing sufficient revenue for the Government, not one dollar would be further required of the farmer as protection to high-priced goods, wares, and merchandise, because of their being manufactured and sold by American monopolists. The only protection connected with tariff taxation should be a mere incident to a tariff laid for nothing else but Government revenue, and even that, when it enhances the cost of the necessities of life, should be wholly eliminated if possible.

A tariff enacted for the sake of protection, designed as a law whereby one class of our citizens is protected against competition in the manufacture and sale of articles at increased prices over their real value, is not only a violation of the Constitution, but a legalized crime, more distinctly at war with principles of liberty and equality than the stamp tax which caused the American Revolution. Such is the system now in existence. Its reform and revision on the basis of a tariff for revenue only would relieve the farming class of the payment of not less than $500,000,000 annually extorted from them for the protection, aggrandizement, and enrichment of manufacturing monopolies, trusts, and all the kindred brood of ugly moneyed monsters which now infest the land and prey upon the people.

By the tariff reform which I indicate it would become the farmer's turn to enjoy protection; protection against high-priced markets in which to buy and low-priced markets in which to sell; protection in the ownership of his own time and labor; protection against the condition of a slave for two days out of every six, with monopoly as his owner and overseer; protection against class robbery, spoliation, and plunder; protection in the secure possession and enjoyment of his own earnings without being compelled to divide with legalized looters or pay ransom to financial brigands. I am for this kind of protection, and it would afford immeasurable relief where relief is most needed and most deserved.

Second. A full supply of legal-tender money in the hands of the people, proportioned in amount to the population and business of the country, is as essential to the prosperity of the farmer as a sufficient quantity of blood is to human life. It is nowhere denied that there is at this time a meager and stinted volume of currency in circulation amongst the producing and business classes. This fact is owing largely to the absorption of money by the monopolies at the money centers and to a great extent also to the growth of population and the expansion of business without any corresponding increase in the amount of our circulating medium.

The figures of the census and the statistics of finance show that, while our population has increased 25,000,000 in the last twenty-five years and the requirements of business for the use of money has increased in the same proportion, yet there is in fact less money in actual circulation in the hands of the people or attainable by them for daily use than there was a quarter of a century ago. It is the constitutional power and the constitutional duty of the Government to authorize and enact by its stamp, on either gold, silver, or paper, a sufficient amount of money, full legal tender in quality, to meet the sound and healthy demands of the people in their trade, their commerce, and their development of the physical resources of the country.

Thus the Supreme Court of the United States has decided, and thus, in despite of those interested in the scarcity of money, in low-priced property, and in cheap labor, the law stands settled. With the power in Congress to declare what shall be money and how much shall be issued what necessity can there be for the farmer to offer his lands to the Government as security for a small loan in his sore distress? He has a higher right than this to a much ampler and more enduring relief. I fully agree with the Senator from California [Mr. STANFORD] in his statement that "an abundance of money means universal activity, bringing in its train all the blessings that belong to a constantly employed, industrious, and intelligent people."

I do not, however, agree with him that the land-owners of the United States, the sovereign people who own and support the Government, should be left to become borrowers at the door of the Treasury on their mortgaged homes at one-half or one-quarter of their assessed value, or at any other appraisement. I do not agree with him that such a system would in the long run bring any relief at all. The owners of the soil stand on higher, safer, and more dignified ground. The Constitution of the United States confers the power on Congress to create and issue all the money needed for the relief of the people; and for the value, the integrity, the good faith, and the final redemption of this money all the lands between the two oceans, all the homes on the farms or in the cities, all the wealth of monopoly and of corporations, all the credit, resources, and honor of the Government itself stand pledged and will stand pledged forever.

Let Congress, on such a pledge, such a mortgage, furnish to the laboring masses and the active business interests of the country an amount of currency in proportion to population and trade, and every active industry will be stimulated, prices for agricultural produce will become remunerative, mortgages will be paid off, old debts will be wiped out, wages will increase to a fair exchange for work in the shops and in the coal mines, the wrinkled visage of hard times will be smoothed, and homes now dark with gloom and distress will smile with peace and plenty. The largest amount of legal-tender notes (greenbacks) known in our financial history since the war was $432,757,604, and that at a time when our population was 25,000,000 less than it is now.

The present amount of the greenback circulation is $346,681,016, being a contraction of the currency, for an enormously increased population, of $86,076,588. Had I the power, I would, as a measure of justice, wise policy, and permanent relief to every worthy and industrious class of citizens, restore the greenback circulation to the highest point it ever reached in time of peace, and there maintain it. Let the $86,076,588 be reissued, with debt-paying power, and the humiliating idea of mortgaging homesteads for small loans will disappear forever. No speculative disturbance in values would follow such an increase of our circulation, for it would even then be too small in its ratio to a population of 60,000,000 and to the giant developments yet to take place in this Union of forty-two States.

Third. The free coinage of silver also presents itself as a measure of relief to the American farmer and to the laborer for daily wages. Argument against the use of silver money to the full extent of all our silver resources is never heard in the channels of trade nor in the fields of active industry. Its enemies are not to be found in the ranks of labor, but in the sumptuous council chambers of the arrogant plutocracy, where the chief aim and end of government is to increase the power of money over lands and houses and over men and women by making it scarce and hard to obtain by the plain, unprotected people.

Those who affect an alarm at silver inflation are mostly those who are bent on the contraction of all kinds of currency in order to increase the purchasing power of the money which monopoly and privilege have already given them. The financial credit of no nation in the world stands higher than that of France, and the circulation of silver amongst the French people is $14.67 per capita, while it is but $2.72 per capita with us. With more silver products than all the world besides, the people of the United States are demanding fair play for silver money and the assistance and stimulus of its unlimited coinage and circulation. With all the discrimination that has been made against it, with all the sneers and calumnies that have been heaped upon it, gold can buy no more in the markets than silver and can carry its aristocratic head no higher than the dollar of the fathers. The adoption of the free coinage of silver will mark an era of prosperity to the American farmer and to all the industrial classes.

Fourth. Another measure of relief for the embarrassment and depression of agricultural interests and the disturbance of their markets should be the prompt enactment of laws, either by Congress or by the States, or by both, punishing with State's prison imprisonment those who speculate on the great food products of the world and gamble on their future prices, without ever having owned a bushel of corn or wheat, or a pound of beef or pork, or of any other commodity which they assume to buy and sell. This is an interference with the honest, legitimate trade of the farmer which should be made a felony and punished as such.

Fifth. To the foregoing propositions in the interest of the farmer I would add a liberal policy of pensions and a full and generous recognition of those who served their country in the hour of its peril. Money paid in pensions to the soldier is not only a benefit and blessing to him and those who are dear to him, but also to the produce dealer, the merchant, and to all within the range of its circulation. But for the large sums which for years have been disbursed by the Pension Office and thus reached nearly every neighborhood in the United States and gone into general circulation the present financial crisis amongst the farmers and laborers would have come at an earlier day. As a beneficial measure, therefore, to all, as well as a duty of the most sacred character, the soldier should be paid by his Government as one who was willing to die for his Government. On that lofty basis his equities are without limit, and justice should at all times stand ready to enforce them.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which is the bill (S. 185) to aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate that the unfinished business may be informally laid aside until the Senator from Indiana shall have concluded his remarks.

Mr. VOORHEES. I shall conclude in five minutes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Tennessee? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Indiana will proceed.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, those who have sought to reform the enormous abuses growing out of consolidated wealth, legalized avarice, and educated rapacity have in all ages been met with the most vindictive, unsparing, and sanguinary hostility of which history makes any record in the affairs of men. Those who have invaded the seats of ancient wrong and disturbed the enjoyments of privileged oppression have in every era of human progress been assailed as enemies of law and order, seeking to break down the safeguards of society, as agitators, fire-brands, iconoclasts, and traitors to their government.

Evils which have grown venerable and hoary in plundering the toiling masses of mankind have always been upheld by caste and aristocracy, whether in council, debate, or by the steel-clad hand of war, or by the ghastly gibbet. It was the awful denunciation of the mighty Nazarene hurled against those who were "full of extortion and excess," rather than the preaching of a new dispensation, which inspired the accusations before Pontius Pilate; and those who followed Him with bitterest execrations and most insolent triumph to his death agony on the cross were the usurers, the money-changers, the accursed plutocracy of Judea. And from that great hour to this the resentment of chronic and corrupt riches, entrenched behind accumulated laws and constructions, has known no bounds at the intrusion of the reformer. It has been the most venomous and merciless sentiment ever known to infect and pollute the human soul.

The ablest statesmen and the broadest philanthropists have not been spared when found, in any age or in any part of the globe, laboring to reform the abuses of concentrated wealth. John Bright led the column of reform for the repeal of the corn laws of England, laws imposing tariff duties on the importation of corn into Great Britain, thereby protecting the landed aristocracy in selling their corn at high prices to the laboring classes, who were compelled to have it or starve. He took the side of justice to the working people as against the proprietors of vast estates, and a recent writer says:

For many years Mr. Bright was assailed incessantly, and with extraordinary vehemence and rancor, and as an incendiary agitator who provoked the poor to regard the rich with envy, jealousy, and hatred; as a reckless demagogue who wished to destroy all those ancient institutions which had made England great; as the friend and ally of the worst enemies of his country; as a traitor who cared nothing for her safety and honor. Now that the stormiest of those times are sufficiently remote to be recalled without bitterness and passion, even those who were Mr. Bright's most loyal supporters may see that it was natural, perhaps inevitable, that he should have been regarded as a revolutionist. For during the greater part of his political life he was the strenuous assailant of laws and institutions which were protected by the interests, by the affections, by the convictions, and by the traditions of the wealthiest and most powerful classes in the state. He became known by the energy and vehemence with which he attacked the corn laws. He did not merely argue against them as economically indefensible; he denounced them as criminal.

Thomas Jefferson, more than a hundred years ago, laid the hand of reform on the laws of primogeniture, the laws of entail, and the union of church and state, and as a consequence was painted as a Jacobin and atheist, an enemy to God and man, by the orders of privileged society and by the same powerful classes which afterwards so fiercely sought the destruction of the great British statesman and reformer. No one need suppose that the same rule will not prevail now. The tariff reformers of the United States in the present crisis will encounter a hostility filled with all the wickedness, corruption, and malevolence which more than $500,000,000 a year as a clear robbery from the people and a clear bonus to protected monopoly can inspire.

All that money can do to subsidize the press and fill its columns with false arguments, false statements, and false accusations against tariff reform and tariff reformers will be done; all that corruption funds can do in carrying elections by venal blocks of five, and in thus defeating the advocates of honest and equal taxation, will be accomplished; and all the arts of intimidation on one hand and alluring seduction on the other, in the bestowal of office and the distribution of official patronage, will be resorted to, in order to retain the ascendancy of the money power over the possessions and liberties of the people. In the face of these things, however, and with a full knowledge of what is before us, we will gird up our loins like men and go forward to the fight.

The battle may be long and weary, and some of us may fall in the conflict or sleep in peace by the wayside before it is over; but after awhile, amidst the glad shouts of liberated millions, the sun will go down on a great and final victory of the eternal right over legalized wrong, of freedom and equality over caste and servitude. Hail mighty day of the swift-coming future!

Born of the seventh generation of farmers in an unbroken line on American soil, inured in my youth to their daily labors, and made familiar with their hardships and privations, it is my birth-right to speak for their deliverance from oppression and their restoration to prosperity, dignity, and honor. This I have here and now aimed to do on principles fully indorsed by the people of Indiana when they sent me to this body, and to that intelligent and just-minded people I hold myself responsible.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Mr. President, I desire to occupy the attention of the Senate but a few minutes in order to give an Iowa farmer, not present, but whose expressions I will use, an opportunity to answer the remarkable speech we have just heard from the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES].

Mr. BLAIR. What does the Senator desire? simply to read that piece of paper which he has before him?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I shall not occupy, I think, more than five minutes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. BLAIR. I yield for that purpose, but give notice that I can yield for no other.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. In Des Moines County, Iowa, resides a farmer whose name is Charles M. Garman. He knows by practical experience more about the condition of farmers and the farming class than the Senator from Indiana has learned all his life through his reading and his theory. I desire now to read the case as presented by this Iowa farmer. He says:

In 1846, as my books show, we got only 10, 12, and 15 cents for corn, and wheat in proportion. I remember selling hogs in Schenck & Denise's pork-house in this city—for $1.50 per hundred net. Sometimes I would have to stay in town, pay a hotel bill, take my turn while the hogs were weighed and slaughtered. Sales were made in this city to-day for $3.60 gross. Every practical farmer knows the difference between $1.50 net and $3.60 gross. I remember seeing Joab Comstock hauling wheat into town with an ox team and selling it for 37 cents a bushel. That was in 1846. That year we got 10 cents for corn and 8 cents for oats.

That is the city of Burlington—

Now, that would not have been so bad if we could have bought everything we wanted as cheap in proportion. But unfortunately for us, that was not the case. We had to pay $3 a barrel for salt, which we can buy now for $1.20 to $1.30. A farm wagon cost $140. We can buy now a much better wagon for $60; and hardware we can buy cheaper. A dozen files, for instance, can be bought now for the price which we then paid for one. That was not an exceptional case by any means, but all along through those years prior to the adoption of the protective tariff, in 1861, there was not any great opportunity for farmers to make money. We had to pay $50 to $60 for a good overcoat which can now be bought for $15 to $20, and nobody ever imagined that a good suit of clothes could be bought for $10.

With the development of our manufactures in this country and a diversity of industries an immense amount of farm products is now raised for which there was then no market. And the rates of interest are much lower now than then. I remember paying as high as 22 per cent. before the war, but money can now be had for from 6 to 8 per cent. We used to pay $250 to $300 for a harvester; now we can buy one with binder complete for $100. So it was at every point where the interest of the farm is touched. We can get better prices for our products and we pay less for what we buy. Occasionally there is an article, like sugar, that is an exception to this. We sometimes bought sugar as cheap as now, but it was not as good a quality; mostly common brown sugar.

Then there is another thing to be considered. Farmers now buy a great many things that in those days were unthought of or would have been looked upon as luxuries and extravagance. Our houses now have carpets and furniture, and a great many conveniences that we could not have afforded in the days of low tariff. We dress better, we have better houses, they are better furnished. We have better farm implements. We have a great many comforts that were not enjoyed by the pioneer farmer. These things, of course, cost money. If we would live as plain now as in those days and do as little for schools and churches and the requirements of social life, we could probably put more money in the savings-banks than we do now. But the modern farmer is intelligent and progressive, and wants to keep abreast of the times. He is a reading man and takes a list of newspapers and magazines that in the days of low tariff would have appalled him by their expense. Every farm-house has its little library. The prosperous farmer keeps his family carriage, and in a multitude of ways he indulges in expenditures that he would not have thought of in the days of low tariff.

I commend these expressions of the Iowa farmer to the calm, deliberate consideration of the Senator from Indiana, and I think they will enable him to make in the course of time a very different speech concerning the farmer and the tariff than the one to which we have listened to-day.

Mr. STEWART. I ask the Senator from New Hampshire who has charge of the educational bill to give me about five minutes to make a remark or two.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SPOONER in the chair). Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield?

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, I do not know what to do about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield?

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator from Nevada spoke to me and said he wanted to occupy five minutes. The Senator from Iowa had before that desired to put in his farmer's communication. If the Senator from Nevada wants but five minutes and the Senator from New York will not object, I shall assent, but it must be understood that we are limited.

Mr. EVARTS. I shall not object, Mr. President, to five minutes more being taken on this side, but it must be understood, I think, that it can not be extended beyond that time nor in favor of any other speech.

Mr. VOORHEES. It does seem to me that the Senator from New York ought not to be asked to yield; certainly no further than that. I apologize to him myself for having trespassed upon so much of his time.

Mr. STEWART. I will take only five minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada will proceed.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I listened attentively to the speech of the Senator from Indiana, and while I concur with him that there is great distress in the country, that prices are low, and that times are hard for the farmers, I differ with him most radically as to the principal cause. I concur with the Senator as to the last portion of his speech in which he contended that there is not a sufficient circulating medium. I maintain that a shrinking supply of money is the sole cause of the present depression in business and low price of farm products.

I challenge any one to name a time in the history of this country when high prices for farm products prevailed with a low tariff or to show any time since the formation of the Government when free trade was approached which was not followed by falling prices of farm products without a corresponding decline in manufactured articles. Free trade withdraws our money to pay for foreign productions and produces contraction at home. It also destroys our home market, which is 95 per cent. of our whole market.

I will undertake to show, whenever time will permit, that low prices and hard times are always coincident with low tariff and stringency in the money market. Contraction and low tariff are twin sisters. Their union is always disastrous. Either is sufficient to produce stagnation and distress. The two combined lead to bankruptcy and ruin.

When silver was demonetized the tariff was, and had been for more than twenty years, higher than it is now. The price of farm products and the wages of labor were during all that period more than 33½ per cent. higher than at the present time. The tariff has been largely reduced since silver was rejected, and still prices have continued to go down. From 1850 to 1873 the annual supply of the precious metals from which money could be made was nearly two hundred millions.

The demonetization of silver cut off more than one-half of the supply of money metal. The production of gold has not been more than sufficient to keep good the stock of metallic money on hand. The growth of population and business has enormously increased the demand for money, while the supply has not increased. The result is money has gone up or become more valuable, or, what is the same thing, the average range of price of commodities has declined and will continue to decline so long as contraction of the circulating medium continues.

I make these suggestions at this time because I regard it of the first importance that the depression and hard times which now prevail should be attributed to the right cause, and that the right remedy be applied.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 17th instant approved and signed the act (S. 1701) making an appropriation for the removal of a dangerous obstruction to the entrance of the harbor at Milwaukee, Wis.

The message also announced that the President had this day approved and signed the following acts and joint resolution:

An act (S. 308) to ascertain the amount due the Pottawatomie Indians of Michigan and Indiana;

An act (S. 306) for the erection of a public building in the city of Lansing, in the State of Michigan;

An act (S. 801) granting a pension to Miss Elizabeth A. Tuttle;

An act (S. 806) granting a pension to Cyrus Tuttle;

An act (S. 807) granting a pension to Mary E. Noll, widow of Philip Noll;

An act (S. 810) granting a pension to Eliza A. Talbott;

An act (S. 813) granting a pension to Stephen Schiedel;

An act (S. 2994) to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Arkansas River, in the Indian Territory;

An act (S. 296) vesting in the vestry of Christ Church, Washington Parish, District of Columbia, all of the right, title, and interest of the United States of America in and to square south of square 1092, in the city of Washington, District aforesaid; and Joint resolution (S. R. 63) providing for taking the census of Alaska.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House insisted upon its amendments to the bill (S. 895) to provide a temporary government for the Territory of Oklahoma, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. STRUBLE, Mr. PERKINS, and Mr. SPRINGER the managers at the conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 346) to amend "An act to grant the right of way to the Kansas City and Pacific Railroad Company through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes;" and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

AID TO COMMON SCHOOLS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 185) to aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SPOONER). The Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. EVARTS. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. PIERCE] desires to address the Senate on this bill, and finds it more convenient to do so at this moment than at any other; and I yield the floor to him for a brief address which he proposes to make.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York yields to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. President, I am indebted to the courtesy of the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS], who has been accorded the floor at this hour, as well as to the kindness of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR], for the privilege of speaking for a few minutes on the pending bill. I shall not abuse their kindness. I hope, Mr. President, that I shall have an opportunity to vote on a motion to postpone this bill until the second Tuesday of December next. I should do this in the hope that it could and would be so amended as to divest it of its objectionable features and yet secure in a large degree what seems to me its most righteous objects; for I recognize, sir, the magnificent design of this measure. It is grand in its conception; its object is worthy of the care, the love, the labor, the devotion which its distinguished author has bestowed upon it.

But I fear it is too stupendous in its scope, too liberal in its grants, too royal in its benefactions to be supported without something more than a belief that its terms are wise and that the vast expenditure authorized by its terms will yield the harvest hoped for by its friends.

The sum appropriated by this bill is more than three times the amount required for the entire annual civil expenses of the Government. It is twelve times the amount required for our Indian service; it is four times the sum needed for naval expenses, and nearly equal to our entire annual expenditures for pensions. It would pay the interest on the public debt for two years. It would sustain our postal service for eleven years.

These facts do not argue against the wisdom of the measure, but they do admonish us that we should be well assured, not only of the justice of the bill, but of the faithful application of the money before we proceed to vote it away.

But, sir, I did not rise to debate this bill. That is unnecessary after six weeks of discussion, even if I had the ability to add any valuable suggestions to what has already been said. I desire simply to correct a misapprehension regarding the new States which seems to be entertained in this Chamber.

It has been said to me and to others, personally as well as in debate, that it is rather ungenerous for the new States, which have received such liberal grants for educational purposes, to vote against an appropriation for the benefit of States that have not received such grants. But I find, Mr. President, that every State admitted since 1802 has received donations for this or a like purpose, while appropriations of money for their benefit and for the benefit of the original States are counted by hundreds of millions of dollars. Aside from this, I desire to call attention to the fact that the public-school system of the new States, excellent as it is, owes nothing thus far to the bounty of the General Government.

Not one cent has been received for this purpose. The donations of land made a year ago will form a grand educational fund for the future, but they are not yet available. Our schools in Dakota have been maintained and our school buildings erected from the proceeds of direct taxation. It is a fact, Mr. President, that our people are poor. Agricultural communities are usually poor compared with the condition of commercial classes. Unfortunately, rich men are the exception among such communities in Vermont and New Hampshire as well as in North and South Dakota.

But, sir, poor as they are, they have not forgotten the lessons instilled in their minds, and in the minds of their fathers before them, long before they took up their homes in the West, a lesson which happily has been learned at last by every community North and South alike. The people of the new States are grounded in the conviction that education is the parent of progress, the hand-maiden of advancement, the bulwark of free institutions, and upon that line and in that faith they have labored.

In North Dakota alone we have to-day, with all our shortcomings, 1,362 public schools, giving employment to 1,741 teachers.

In the last five years there has been paid by these "destitute," "suffering," "unfortunate" people, who, it is sometimes feared by our good brethren, "have been granted the boon of statehood too soon," more than $3,000,000 for public education. A State institution of learning has been established which would be creditable to any Commonwealth, and at whose head sits one of the brightest educational lights of New England, while in the State are five denominational colleges and higher schools, all prospering and, I believe, in the future to prosper still more abundantly.

All these schools have been supported, are now being supported, not by the generosity of the National Government, but out of the precious savings of men and women who, recognizing the blessings of free schools, cheerfully contribute to their maintenance. In the whole State, out of a population of about 200,000, there were, according to the decennial census of 1885, taken by authority of the General Government, but 1,403 persons, all told, who could not read and write. I find by a recent report that in six towns of the State, out of an enumeration of 4,089 children of school age, 3,900 are pupils in the public or private schools.

These people have labored, have sacrificed, have submitted freely to taxation to place their system of education on this prosperous plane. Is it exactly fair or just to come forward now and require them to be taxed for the benefit of those who have not made such sacrifices?

This favorable exhibit of North Dakota might be carried into material, social, and religious conditions, but this is not the time to present them. The showing of South Dakota, and I doubt not Montana and Washington, would be equally favorable. Let me in one sentence assure the Senate and the country that States with such records to sustain them will be abundantly able to vindicate the wisdom of their admission and their right to representation upon this floor at the proper time and in the proper place.

But now we are called upon to vote $79,000,000 toward dispelling the cloud of illiteracy which overhangs other parts of the country. I simply wish to call attention to the fact that North Dakota, poor as she is, undeserving perhaps as she is, does not require and does not ask, for herself, this bounty. The Senator from New Hampshire says that the two Dakotas would pay about $500,000 and receive $59,000 in return. But this estimate, bad as it is, is based upon the census of 1880, and does not show the full burdens that the bill would entail upon us. So far as I am able to judge the State of North Dakota alone would pay $400,000 into this fund and receive practically nothing in return.

Mr. President, the people of the West are proverbially generous, but this is asking too much of them. It asks the people of my own State, compelled as they are to contend not only against unfavorable seasons, but against unjust, ungenerous, and arbitrary interpretations of law, to give of their scanty earnings money to educate the illiterate of States old enough, grand enough, big enough, and rich enough to care for themselves.

If there is any duty which the Government owes to the race it has emancipated, any assistance it should render to those kept so long in compulsory darkness, I for one should be glad to discharge that obligation. We may owe it to them as wards of the nation, we may owe it to the people among whom their lot has been cast, and who must necessarily have a hard struggle to dispel the mass of illiteracy in their midst. But the bill under consideration goes far beyond a duty of that character.

It undertakes a gigantic, a wholesale task of education; and in doing so it reverses the general rule of human action; it violates the practice of the very system it advocates, which gives to the deserving scholar the reward of merit, putting instead a premium on illiteracy and bestowing the grand prize on those who have done least to merit it.

And where shall the national generosity stop? Where can it stop if this be once begun? The bill makes provision for nine years. But what then? Can you cease the work when once it has been entered upon?

Mr. President, when you begin this national aid it will be like the spirit summoned by the magician's Fabulus, it can not be stopped or dispelled. Once accustom the States to a reliance upon Federal aid for the support of their schools, and their own pride will diminish and dependence will be the rule.

Do not cheapen education in the sense of making it obtainable without an effort. That which costs nothing, which is gained without labor or sacrifice, is, as a rule, without benefit to the recipient.

It is easy to make this appropriation now with an overflowing Treasury.

It may not be so easy when financial clouds are lowering and taxes are wrung from a burdened people.

Mr. President, there seems to be some doubt as to whether the Republican party has pledged itself to a measure of this character. It is affirmed and denied. But there are some things which it did pledge itself to favor and support, and in such language as to leave no doubt of its meaning. It declared itself in favor of both gold and silver as money, but we have acted upon no measure of this character because for weeks we have been engaged upon this educational bill. It pledged itself to a policy which would give employment to labor, activity to our various industries, promote trade, open new and direct markets for the produce of our farmers, and cheapen the cost of transportation. But we have done nothing, for our time has been occupied by this educational bill. It declared that the gratitude of the nation to the defenders of the Union "can not be measured by laws." It said "the legislation of Congress should conform to the pledges made by a loyal people and be so enlarged and extended as to provide against the possibility that any man who honorably wore the Federal uniform should become the inmate of an almshouse or dependent upon private charity." But the dependent-pension bill is waiting consideration in this Chamber to-day, crowded out by the educational bill.

Mr. President, I want to see those pledges fulfilled. I want them fulfilled first. They will be fulfilled, I have faith to believe, when this measure no longer bars their progress. Let us be just before we are generous. There will be time to shed the beneficent light of education on the comparatively few not now enjoying its advantages, when we have saved the farmers of the nation from ruin and the old soldiers from beggary. Men do not perish bodily for lack of intellectual nourishment. A few months, a year's delay of this measure, will not result in disaster; but, sir, a few months, a few weeks, even a few days may be vital in the cases of thousands of veteran soldiers who have waited and waited long for promised justice.

There has come under my notice alone, as a member of the Pensions Committee, at least a dozen cases of soldiers whose just applications are pending before Congress or the Pension Bureau and who have "spread their tents" on "Fame's eternal camping ground" in the past twelve months, dying with the bitter reflection that the Government had forgotten them. I do not expect, sir, to satisfy all who present claims against the Treasury. That is impossible. But let us redeem our pledges to these men, and redeem them without delay. I do not wish to be misunderstood regarding the author of this bill. There is no warmer friend of the soldier in this Chamber than the Senator from New Hampshire. But I sometimes fear that his zeal for his favorite measure blinds him somewhat to the emergency that is upon us, to the immediate necessity of legislation on undisputed measures of supreme importance: legislation for the relief of the veterans of the war; legislation for the relief of that alarming depression in our great agricultural industry which extends like a black pall from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from Maine to Florida.

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] has just spoken on this subject in eloquent terms. The picture he has drawn of the condition of our farmers is a dark one, but, sir, it is scarcely magnified. I echo many of the warnings he has given; but I call attention to the fact that he offers no definite, and only a general, remedy. He suggests no digested measure of relief, only general propositions, and the trouble is that he, with the rest of us, has allowed the pending bill to stand in the door of progress for two months without protest.

Sir, these sweet words of ours "butter no parsnips;" they remind me of a declaration made by that eminent American philosopher, Josh Billings, who said that when a man was hard up he would rather have ten dollars in greenbacks than ten thousand in christian consolation. What the people want is action, not words, words flowing steadily and eternally in the vast quantity indicated by this huge Record which lies on the desk before me.

If the tariff is responsible for this depression, how does the Senator from Indiana propose to remedy it? Will a little reduction here and there, as proposed by the Mills bill, make the farmers prosperous and a system good which is, according to his view as expressed this morning, wholly iniquitous?

The farmer is not poor because he pays more for a reaper and mower here than is paid abroad, for as a matter of fact he does not do it. At least, I have a letter from that great manufacturing concern, the McCormick Manufacturing Company, which sells so many machines abroad, declaring that there is no place where their machines bring so small a price as in the United States.

Why, sir, we find this same complaint of hard times among the farmers of free-trade England. There is a wide divergence of views regarding the reasons of this depression. I have a letter from a New Jersey farmer this morning which declares that after twenty years of investigation he has become convinced that the whole trouble is occasioned by the maintenance of the tax on whisky and high wines. The cause must be determined by patient investigation and then the remedy applied, whatever it may be.

Let me remark before I leave the subject, Mr. President, that I regretted most sincerely to hear the language of the Senator from Indiana when referring to our Norwegian citizens. If I understood him aright, he spoke of them as among the half-civilized immigrants from Northern Europe.*

Mr. President, the Senator mistakes the people to whom he refers. Among all the thousands of Norwegians and Swedes in my own State I do not believe there is 1 per cent. who can not read and write, while many of them are highly educated and possess a knowledge of public affairs that will compare favorably with any of the Senator's constituents. They are among our best citizens, law-abiding, industrious, and patriotic, and there are no people whom we more gladly welcome to our State than these same people from Northern Europe.

No one, sir, can respect the author of this bill more highly than myself. I admire his earnestness; I have faith in his sincerity. I believe the time may come when the principal and primary object of this measure, which is, I take it, to provide better opportunities of education for the colored people of the South, can be accomplished—accomplished, sir, by action which shall not bind or embarrass the National Government forever; by aid which shall be given, not in obedience to any obligation which we owe the States, but out of a generous desire on the part of the Government to aid people honestly struggling to better their intellectual condition; which shall not check or dwarf the sturdy growth of the excellent system of education now established and being established in the South, and which shall not endanger the work of relief and of patriotism which we have solemnly engaged to perform. When such a measure is proposed I shall cheerfully support it. When, under the light of the new census, the people who sent me here have the opportunity to speak upon this subject, I shall do their bidding, even to the support of the pending bill; but until that time, sir, I must decline to give it my vote.

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President, this measure before the Senate and the country has in two successive Congresses, while I have been a member of the Senate, been fully considered and passed upon. When again it was brought to our attention, early in this session, I had not imagined that any condition of things should make it in my own judgment at all necessary that I should take part in the discussion. I had previously given attention to the topics that seemed to me most pressing when in 1886, and again in 1888, the bill had been under consideration. I had seen that bill passed by the Senate by large majorities, and it had not occurred to me that anything in the condition of this country, anything in the nature of this subject, anything in the attitude and feeling of the people of this country, anything in the sentiment or in the judgment of the public or of the Senators on this floor, would lead to any other disposition of it than a prompt vote and a large majority to be given in its favor.

I could not wish, if the debate were prolonged by others, that I should add to the delay in its passage by repeating what has been better said by others, nor indeed by repeating (for it is not my habit to do so) what, whether well or ill said, has been heretofore said by myself.

But I find now that a very grave subject is before this body and that its disposition toward it is quite changed from what it has been before.

I find that now the possession of the legislative and executive departments of this Government is in the party with which I act and the party with which the Senators who sit on this side of the alley in a body concur. I have seen this bill passed twice with great concurrence from this side and with a large assent upon the other side; and yet the situation of Congress and of the Executive was such that no reasonable expectation could be had that the bill would become a law. At all times, in my judgment, if the bill could have been submitted to a vote in the House of Representatives, although the majority was of the Democratic party, this bill would have passed with a good deal of enthusiasm and with a firm and thorough conviction of its great benefits. But the sages of the caucus and of the committee-rooms stifled the opportunity to ask the assent of that body to it. There was also a question whether the Executive, as then filled, would have approved the bill had it passed both Houses of Congress.

Now, however, all in that regard is changed. Whatever shall be the action of this Senate, if it approve this bill, it is to go to and be approved by the House of Representatives. If presented to the President, it is, as I suppose from his public action and public expressions, either in the Senate Chamber or from the Executive Mansion, sure to receive his approval. I must find some way to satisfy my constituency, some way to satisfy the great Northern people, some way to satisfy the great Republican party that this bill is in better shape now than has been presented, in my judgment, by any of the opponents of the bill.

It is said that this is not a Republican measure and that the Republican party is not committed to it. The great body of the Northern people have committed their power in both these Houses of Congress to the Republican party; other portions of the country, with almost unbroken front, have committed their power in the two Houses of Congress to the Democratic party, and this alley divides not only the Republican from the Democratic party, but it divides, in a general sense, the depositaries of the power and will of the great Northern people from the depositaries of the great power and will of other portions of the country. I may hope that some time, not while I can be a member of this body, but some time, the alley that divides the political parties will not present a division of that nature or of that tendency.

But now it exists, and this measure, the most beneficent, as I think, that has been presented to the attention of Congress during the time I have had the privilege of a place upon this floor, is to be considered, not as a Republican measure, not as a matter of opposition by the Democratic party, but as a matter that is to be expressed and decided by the generous and noble feeling of the great body of the American people. If, then, I find that by the arrangements of our Government when this great power has been intrusted to the Republican party, when no measure can fail here that this party approves, I am at a loss to understand why this bill now here should be killed and not be charged as having lain at the responsibility of the Republican party.

It is said that the pledges of the convention platform may be waived out of sight as a courtesy and as a manner of speech. Mr. President, that form, that method of disposing of this question savors too much of imputing hypocrisy to the Republican party, and, as Mr. Burke said, hypocrisy can afford to be magnificent in its promises, for, never intending to go further, it costs nothing.

Mr. President, I feel myself obliged to take up rather more seriously, and yet I hope not at any very great length, the very merits, the very pith and marrow, the very motives, the very purposes and very results that are embedded in this bill. We can not disguise from ourselves that this nation looks at this measure in view of historical transactions of the last twenty-five years. Whatever may be said of the conformity of the motives, the desires in support of this bill and those who oppose it, it must be admitted, however prevalent they may have been heretofore, however much they may find this or that support in previous controversies for the last fifty years on the subjects that enter into this, we are now confronted with it, not as a general and speculative view of aid to education from the Federal Government, but, as the situation is, whether the Federal Government shall give the proposed aid under the circumstances and the condition of the people at both ends of this country and the relation of the great body of the people who enter into the considerations and interests that affect this bill.

Before I consider the special aspect that leads to this measure and to engage its immediate and its prompt support, what is the general proposition? It is this: This nation, opulent, prosperous, powerful, looks at the situation of ignorance in some portions greater, but in all portions considerable, that needs attention. Out of the full Treasury as it now stands and as it will be replenished from the wealth of this people, it is proposed that the Federal Government shall administratively, in the way of distribution, look at the condition of the several States and their populations, and apply a portion from the Treasury of the wealth raised from the people to the object of education.

Mr. President, education is the great portal of the national, the political, and the social life of this country, and the public schools are the means by which and through which is distributable and is distributed this sustenance of national, political, and social life. All other matters that may interest this people are but distant in their affections in their duties, and in their security. What are all the other forms of aggrandizement either in art or in science or in culture, what are they all, compared with this great matter of the people's life? What are they all but as the purple vintage of the golden fruitage as compared with the corn and the wheat and the springs that sustain the natural life of this people?

It may be thought, then, that it is not an unworthy, that it is not an unimportant, but that it is a great and most pressing, occasion for the wealth of this people to be expended, whenever the occasion and the needs shall attract attention to this necessity and shall ask for this succor. Now, this being the object in view, it is thought that the revenues of this Government might be well employed through a period of eight years, coming to an aggregate of $77,000,000, and thus dividing itself between, not equally but substantially, eight and nine millions a year.

We find that no special burden is needed to be imposed, no extraordinary taxation to be levied for the exercise of this benefit, but that we have before us our methods of taxation, of which Mr. Jefferson, speaking upon this very subject of the application of the revenue in this way, spoke as the affluence that came from the collection of the Government without the people seeing the tax-gatherer at any man's door. The revenue of this Government comes from the customs and from the excise. Whatever of this modicum of expenditure should be assigned to foreign customs and what to domestic excise, the funds are not exacted in that name and for that purpose by an extraordinary stress upon the payer of taxes or the energy of the Government in exacting them.

People have their own ideas of how much of this ample revenue from customs is a burden upon our citizens. Some think that it comes out of the wealth of our people in fuller or lesser measure. In my own judgment this fortunate people is in the attitude towards the rest of this world of being a tax-gatherer from foreign nations. No doubt, duties in conditions of trade may be a burden upon consumption entirely; others, I have no doubt, may be a burden upon importation entirely; but as a general rule, speaking broadly and at large, the exactions through the customs are about one-half paid by foreign contributors to the wealth supporting our Government and its occasions.

If we turn then to the excise, that, as we know, comes from the body of our people; but in what shape is that exacted? For the most part it is in those forms of the use of tobacco and the use of spirituous liquors, and the participation that any of our citizens shall take in these modes of filling the coffers of the country is voluntary on their part. No one believes that this is an oppression that is felt by those who find their incentive to these at least unnecessary indulgences in their contribution to the public revenues.

We have, then, this great occasion and this abundant opportunity to meet it. We have here what any nation, that was master of all its powers and felt the pressure of all its duties, might well feel, that if there were in the situation of the country any provocative of its beneficent action, it should be taken for granted at once that it should be made. This bill is of that nature. It is to be taken from the collected wealth of the country by these forms by which it is drawn into the Treasury, and to the extent that I have named in amount is to be applied to the education of the people of this country.

But it is said that this Government, this people, are not the masters of this question as it is to be disposed of, as it is to be dealt with, as it is to be determined by the Congress; for in that happy arrangement, which no one can applaud more than I and no portion of this nation can more applaud than the great State which I in part represent on this floor, it is said that this General Government, with its great resources of wealth in the Treasury, is incapacitated from dealing with this general necessity of the education of the people. I state it thus broadly. I would state it even more strongly, that it could not be done if the direct necessity called for it and there was no opportunity to meet it except the wealth of this Government.

It will not do to confuse the question of constitutional power to meet an exigency of this kind by confounding it with the question whether it is urgent, whether it is important, whether it can pass in silence and unattended to. No, Mr. President, that is not the way to argue constitutional questions. So far as that point is involved in this debate, so far as it is involved in any consideration of the people of this country, the question is this: Supposing, in the event of the condition of the people of this country showing a dire necessity for their education, that the corruption of our institutions, that the vigor of our population, that our safety and our welfare turned upon this education, that there were no other resources than those which this Government had brought to its coffers by taking away the excise and the customs from any of the States, would the power of action exist here? Now, that is the question, so far as the constitutional point goes.

I find, however, no occasion to dwell much upon this subject. I have listened with interest to the arguments upon the other side of the alley on this topic. I find that they have trodden in the worn footsteps of the same path that for a hundred years has gone on from step to step of negation to this Government of its capacity for the exigencies which attended it. This people have not found themselves much impeded in the general progress, in the general enlargement, in the general exercise of the authorities of this Government, and I have noticed that the arguments of constitutional impediment are seldom put forward by debaters or theorists against the execution of any desired movements of this people. I find it used more as a stalking-horse, behind which to aim, according to the wishes and the interests of the people or of the country, as they are in their view. That marks the difference and makes out the resistance in a measure that is proposed.

But at any rate it must be conceded that the constitutional question has been very much attenuated. It is conceded that, if the public domain were now at our disposal for this very object, there could be carried out in every way every detail of this measure, and all the wealth of all the territory belonging to the United States would be at the disposal of this Government and could be freely used without either danger of violating the Constitution or of submitting to humiliation by taking the distribution in that form. I have never been able to give very great weight and dignity to the proposition that the land which is situated as a common property of the United States, for disposition under the phrase of common benefit and general welfare, could be treated as a trust imposed upon the land that would be satisfied by the application of the wealth in that form to this very object, but that under the trust power given to this Government for all the occasions during the whole future of the safety of this country over the stormy sea of human affairs, of human passions, of human interests, this clause of common defense and general welfare was not a trust power as wide as the trust that was designed.

No, Mr. President, we have got over that question on everything but education. In the close, restrictive method of early construction by the great men on one side or the other in the progress of this country, what is there left but this one great and universal interest that can not be exerted by the United States Government?

Let me ask, as I shall wish to comment upon them, that the words of Thomas Jefferson may be read from the desk. Mr. Jefferson, after speaking, in his inaugural address to Congress in 1805, of the happy condition, of the prosperity of our revenue, of our security in regard to our foreign debtors, of our peace and all the growing hopes of this country, and that all these revenues, as he expressed it, were collected by the foreign duties without a single tax-gatherer approaching the taxpayer, spoke these words, which I ask the Senate to ponder upon.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

These contributions enable us to support the current expenses of the Government, to fulfill contracts with foreign nations, to extinguish the native right of soil within our limits, to extend those limits, and to apply such a surplus to our public debts as places at a short day their final redemption, and, that redemption once effected, the revenue thereby liberated may, by a just repartition among the States and a corresponding amendment of the Constitution, be applied, in time of peace, to rivers, canals, roads, arts, manufactures, education, and other great objects within each State.

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President, see how this great master of political thought and expression rises by one step to another till he brings out education at the head of the climax; but it rests in his mind, it rests in his political deliberations in precisely the same situation as all the other subjects there mentioned. He was then in favor of all these beneficent advantages coming from the General Government in all these forms of the exercise of its authority. He had the opinion that an amendment of the Constitution was necessary, and that it ought to be had, in order to arm this Government with greater opportunities to be useful with the resources of our revenues in these other and great topics that I have mentioned, rivers, canals, roads, arts, manufactures, education, and then the general great objects that are of importance within each State.

Now, no such amendment of the Constitution has been made. Perhaps the first instance in which this great statesman thought the Constitution should be amended was in the acquisition of Louisiana and again of West Florida; but those transactions needed from this people no corroboration. No money could be better spent, raised from this people at that time, in the way either of common defense or of general welfare, than in the acquisition of Louisiana, when the situation of beligerent and hostile cabinets in Europe put it in our power to acquire it.

And now at this hour, when this great leader in thought, this great lover of education, Thomas Jefferson, has thus spoken, shall we after this lapse of time look in the face of the American people, look in their face, in view of the action and the history and the methods and the results of this administrative authority by the General Government, that carried rivers, canals, roads, arts, manufactures, without an amendment of the Constitution, and tell them that this primal and universal interest of education was so deep buried in the clauses of the Constitution that this country could not unearth it, though it could do so for every other purpose and every other occasion?

Mr. HAWLEY. I beg permission of the Senator from New York to let me suggest a view on which I should be glad to hear his opinion more strictly and directly. I believe nobody has ever denied that the National Government might properly dedicate public lands to education, especially when it founded new States, and that it might give the proceeds of taxes in general or of the sales of public lands to certain great national purposes. But we are discussing something else here today. We are discussing the first measure that ever was in Congress that followed this dedication to the close details of State administration and attempted to control minor State officers.

Mr. EVARTS. I am obliged to the Senator. I know, I think, what I am discussing. I know what is before this Senate, and I confine myself literally to the very topic to which he invites my attention; but I can not allow that the arrangement of my argument should be disturbed to so preposterous a result that what is to follow should be made to precede.

Mr. President, if we stood upon this attitude, see how accurately the situation, as now unfolded, is portrayed in the situation that was before Mr. Jefferson. Who will doubt that he would have put education above everything else? It is always recorded among the manifold glories of his historic fame that education from beginning to end was what lay nearest to his heart, came oftenest to his lips, and was most sturdily and earnestly lifted up before this people.

Perhaps the Senator from Virginia, if I am wrong, may correct me, but I believe it is recorded of Mr. Jefferson in Virginia, and in public life there, that as early as 1778, while you were nearly under Revolutionary government and were all engaged in a Revolutionary war, Mr. Jefferson desired that the Congress and the General Government, such as it was then, should use money to educate the colored men, the slaves of this country.

He was one of those statesmen who could see the end from the beginning, and he knew that in human affairs there are two ways by which men are governed in social, in political, in national affairs. One is by power from without and the other by power from within. Force and fraud, which is by the lawyers treated as equal to force, because the consent is extracted by the force of the fraud, and not by the assent (and this old, old topic of the human race and government by force or government by consent had come in the happy period of our happy Revolutionary independence), brought us to understand and this great statesman to express that by the consent of the governed, and not led by force, must a free Government be maintained.

What, then, is there left but that out of the traits and out of the interests and out of the passions there should be drawn out from the natural person the means by which consent was to be given and upon which peace was to depend? Thus do we deduce from the internal powers of man the means of free and equal society and of free and equal and just government, and educating that is education. As the great Grecian political philosopher has said, "It is by education that I learn to do by choice what other men do by force."

Mr. President, I should hope, in the aspect in which this case thus lies, it was only necessary to determine whether there was a benefit in the sense of the welfare of this people and in the aspect that it should be regarded by this Government, and whether this great Government and this great people have now resources by which to meet that end.

But the long history of this Government in its relation to the States and to this subject of education needs no argument to prove that in reality and in the observation of Government it has always occupied a prominent place. I need not recite the endowments that have been given to States, whether new States were formed or whether this form of wealth was, to use Mr. Jefferson's phrase, to be as a repartition among the States for their occasion.

I now come to a consideration of the particular traits of this bill. Although this constitutional objection will never put an end to this bill, although the constitutional objection that there is not power to use money as well as land for the purposes of education is harbored on this side of the Chamber, let us see whether the other criticisms and the repugnancies which are exhibited—to which I will pay every degree of respect on either side of this Senate—let us see whether these difficulties are in the way of encouraging and sustaining this particular method which is now proposed for our adoption.

In the first place, this bill recognizes or assumes that there is a condition in the population whereby, either under motives growing out of recent events or by some general result which has been produced, there is greater need of education prompted and aided, supported and amplified, that is not within the resources or promptly at the hands of the States, and that there is not only this need, but that it is of such nature and of such condition as that it may be penetrated, that it may be permeated, that it may be enlivened, that it may be led into all the operations of generous mind and of submissive will to the good order of society and the maintenance of this Government.

Then the question is only this, further, whether this application, whether the mode and way, whether the amount, whether the adequacy or the exuberance ought to be regarded. These are the only qualities of this bill, and they are to be looked at. They are to be looked at as a transaction of a nation towards its citizens, of this Government towards the State government, and to be looked at not by aunds and ifs and buts, for no government was ever conducted by aunds and ifs and buts.

Let me then look at the recognition of illiteracy and its measure. It is before us. Its figures are given to us from the very highest altitude of education down to the lowest depths; I mean the lowest depths within our borders of ignorance and need of education. They are all displayed before us. They run from 2 or 3 per cent. to 50 and 52 and 54 in some portions of our community. Then it is said that the pressure is such that the adequacy to deal with it promptly for the occasions of the country is not at hand within the States, and that this supply will furnish the means by which the desired result can follow.

This being conceded then, as a matter of statistics, the bill proposes to take from the Treasury in eight successive years $77,000,000, to be distributed, we will say, something like $8,000,000 or $9,000,000 in each year. I have heard on this floor such stupendous estimates of the greatness of these sums as, they say, should appall, if they do not strike with remorse, every supporter of this bill. It would seem as if this was going to break down our finances, to postpone all attention to the necessary and general burdens of Government, all the occasions that rest upon our Government or upon our duty in other directions.

Now, this immense mass that is always held up as if it was to be called in and paid out over night by the people, this $77,000,000 in its mass is about a dollar and a quarter a head of the population of this people, and running through these eight years it is reduced to about 15 cents a head. If you take it upon the adult population, and as to the record shown by the right to vote, it would be about 75 cents on each voter in each year.

Sometimes we hear magnificent exaggerations. We are told in one day that this Senate is the greatest assembly of lawgivers in the world or that history has shown. Let me not disparage this grateful estimate of our importance. We are then told that our people at large are the richest people on the face of the earth; that in our accumulations, in our power of earning, in our energy, in our faculty, in our wits and our wisdom we are ahead of all the world, and I imagine, by a strict and logical relation, all this latter magnificence may be traced to education more than to anything else.

Now, we are asked to devote 15 cents a head of our population in a year, or 75 cents a head of the voters of this population, to stimulate, extend, conserve, animate, and revive the stimulus of all our wealth, our education, and our common schools. Well, away with this dizzy and dazzling imposition upon the strength and the authority of this people. Away with this imposition upon the intelligence of these Senators, these members of the greatest legislative body in the world. Whatever other reasons there be, this reason can not go down with the people of this country. It can not go down with the historical aspect which will be given to it. It will not be an answer for us to make at the hustings or in the conscience of the Senators. Not there, then, is found the obstacle. Let us find something more obligatory and more important than that.

Then it is said that this bill, as the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] would have us think, for the first time undertakes to distribute the wealth of this country (for I have got by the question of distinction between money and land and wealth and duty) in aid of strengthening a system of education in the States. I can not dwell upon the subject in full, but I point now the attention of the Senate to an act passed in 1862, one of those great and beneficent measures that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] who sits farthest from me, when in his seat, has given to this country. I mean the act that is known as the Morrill act, and I will ask the Secretary to read only the title of the act, that I may draw it to the attention of the Senate for some comment that I shall make upon it.

The SECRETARY. An act entitled "An act donating public lands to the several States and Territories which may provide colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts," approved July 2, 1862.

Mr. EVARTS. The method adopted by that act, to make it efficacious in its distributive and profitable employment to the end in view, was to allow each State to take a certain number of acres found within its own borders and this carried the fee directly of that land; but no State was allowed, not finding that land within its borders, itself to take in possession and title any land in another State. Such an imperium in imperio by one State in another State was discarded as inadmissible, but each State thus having to resort beyond its own limits was allowed to issue scrip, and its assignees were able to take it up at the rate of $1.25 an acre wherever they could find the land. This seems to be but a flimsy distinction between carrying money or carrying land.

But what I ask the attention of the Senate to is the further explanation of the Morrill act, which I do not hesitate to declare and challenge the contradiction of, that every principle, every method of the procedure in the bill now under discussion is found in the Morrill act. This Government undertook to follow into each State the use and the application that each State should make. It required the Legislature to accept it under its obligations. It required the governor to report all transactions under it. That very measure, so recent in our recollections, stands as a model for this general bill, with nothing more recently to be added except what may be in the region of expediency or prudence or advantage. But no mind is to be shocked, no equilibrium is to be stirred by any novelty in the procedure of this bill, if the Morrill act was found a useful measure and plan, and if experience has approved it as a benefit and advantage—a noble and continuing advantage without one single suggestion of weakness or injury to the competency and the welfare and the dignity of any State.

Look at the reception and the brilliant exhibition, without any sense of humiliation on the part of any State, that this donation, as the title of the act calls it, received, and how it has been employed. Take the great and wealthy State of New York, able to support its educational system, able to endow its colleges, able to carry on with ample revenue from an opulent and vast population all the occasions of a great and generous scheme. Let me point at one instance within the borders of that State, sometimes called by its own people and sometimes called by those without its borders the Empire State. Let me point to Cornell University, founded, upheld, having its vital and its ample strength under this donation of the General Government to the great and opulent State of New York. True, this fund was wisely, prudently, fortunately managed. In some quarters it did not turn out so prosperously; but a great benefactor, Mr. Ezra Cornell, who had given a great endowment of his own fortune to this college, undertook to buy the scrip certificates that were to be turned into land and into money, agreeing that the outgrowth of the investment should every dollar of it go to the benefit of this college; and now it stands as one of the great colleges of the land, a college such as never before in so short a time grew out of nothing by influence of endowment of wealth into so great and beneficent a structure.

Let us hope that our distinguished Senator from California [Mr. STANFORD] may show another great example in the endowment he has made and is making for the benefit of education in that, his adopted State. But more than that, $15,000 a year, as I am informed by my friend, the Senator from Iowa, on my left [Mr. ALLISON], is paid out of our Treasury to these colleges thus built up by the nation, which it is thought now it will be humiliating for some portion of this country to receive in the shape of aid to common schools.

Let me ask Senators, and especially the Senators representing the new States, not merely those who have lately been welcomed here so heartily, at least on this side of the Chamber, to look a little at the situation in the conduct of this Government on the subject of public lands. When the method of devoting the land, by reservation from public sale, to occupation for homesteads and in other forms, was adopted, this entire area of the wealth of this Government in the shape of its public lands was withdrawn from any opportunity of what Mr. Jefferson called "a repartition of its wealth among the States." Is it imagined by that action, not certainly in its intention, all the States that may be in stress, all the States that may be in a convenient necessity for a proper application of the wealth of the country as derived through its other revenues, shall not receive it? Was it merely intended that those new States should thus substantially give to themselves the land within their borders? for it does not move an acre from them and it stocks it with occupants that alone give value to land. The lands granted are within their borders. This immense endowment is operating under a wise and beneficent arrangement, I agree, but is it to impoverish the ability of this country to use other forms of its wealth in aid of education by other means and in other portions of the country?

Now, Mr. President, let us look at the situation from which perhaps one would like to withdraw any reiteration of examination. I refer to the condition of illiteracy as growing out of circumstances with which the action of the Government for the common defense and for the general welfare has to do. I refer to the emancipation of the slaves. I confess that I do not much share the feeling that the emancipation of the slaves was too quickly followed by enfranchisement and endowment of suffrage. It was a prodigious transaction, just as the first step was a prodigious one. I would agree that no other community ever settled so great a change in its domestic situation without preparation, not by choice of its own deliberation, but by external authority.

The emancipation of the slaves in every honest aspect must have been at the cost of the community wherein slavery resided in its care and digestion of the situation thus produced, but it was for the benefit in the largest sense of this great country of ours, from the farthest corner of Maine to the farthest shore of California and down to the States themselves where emancipation was brought about for their good, more greatly perhaps than for any others, but only for their good in that situation of enjoying the benefits that accrued to this whole nation and all its vast prospects in the future. Now the question would arise, and it has been spoken somewhat, as I said, hastily on this side of the Chamber, that it was a mistake perhaps to carry full enfranchisement to the South.

A free community, as a wise Grecian has said, is subject, where they have participation in the government, to two opposite inconveniences. If only some portion of the citizens participate in the government, then it is an occasion of discontent that all do not participate, and if they all do participate then the discontent is that some have as much share as others. This wise observation of human political affairs can not be corrected and can not be suppressed. When we are looking at the question of whether you have within a State a proper franchise, with all the people having every civil right, having every equality before the law, every footing in the courts, every protection under the general and in the State governments, how are any of them to be deprived of suffrage? Can we not understand that that is a dreadful problem? And no community, in my judgment, can stand still on that line of demarcation between suffrage and its effacement in every other particular.

Whatever, then, may be the prodigious burdens, what the prodigious duties, what the prodigious dangers that may attend the treatment that this Government has given to this subject, let us at least remember that there is one footing on which we should all agree, that that is a burden which belongs to the great Government and the great people; and certain is one thing, at least, if no impediments are to be found in the organism of administration, of law making and execution, that the hearts and minds of all of us should sympathize with the grand transaction which will ever rest in history as an action incapable by any nation but the greatest that the world has ever seen. What country, what institutions, what glory, what martial power, what population assembled together under one Government, ever before was equal to the solution of so great a problem?

For myself, I would say, whenever I am brought to confront some treatment, some action, some conduct, some principle that will help to raise the whole transaction into that which rests upon the whole nation and appeals to the conscience and the heart and the will and the intellect of the whole, I will bear my part of it as a humble sharer in so great a sacrifice. I will not stop to talk about the sentiment and the conduct, the mistakes and the difficulties now. I will take and I think the great State of New York will take its share in this immense, ennobling transaction. If these great things were done without preparation, to be sure the human mind and the moral government of this world are not to be changed about that situation; it is the resources of our men, of our people, of ourselves that will go on with that conciliation of antagonistic and inconsistent conditions of society in any portion of this country that will take the place of the preparation that the inexorable laws of conduct by the nation render impossible.

Now, Mr. President, let us look into another view. You can not hide it from us, no one can hide it from himself, that whatever there may be of weakness in our society and in our institutions, in freedom, in equality, in justice, wherever the weak point in the whole area of the country, in the whole enumeration of its population, wherever that weak and dangerous point is, is the weak and the dangerous point of the whole country. There is no natural, no artificial, no social, no political body but where, if there be the weakness of disorder and disease, that spot is the master of all the rest. To the relief of that, all the resources of a curative nature, all the resources of legislative and of social succor, are to rush to save the mischief, which is the mischief of the natural or the political body, and not of the limb or of the part immediately affected. Amputation, excision, may save in a dire necessity what is left of the whole and noble body that is thus mutilated; but it is, alas, a last and final subjection to a dire thing that is not to be met with patience or philosophy until every method to the contrary has been exhausted.

In that situation this matter of education is looked at and the distribution of this money is made precisely and by an accurate adjustment, so far as in such large transactions is possible, to the apportionment among the States to a reasonable estimate and calculation of the degree and pressure of illiteracy. Does any one doubt that every motive, every argument, every calculation in the frame of this adjustment has looked only to that consideration?

But then we come to a singular argument, that, although the money is distributed most largely to the States where this pressure is most felt and where this trouble arises from the presence of the emancipated slaves, a pressure traceable to that condition and the sources from which it came, yet, when you come to take the fund which the State has placed at its disposal, when the bill comes to apply it, it no longer applies it in proportion to the ignorance of the whites and the blacks as thus statistically ascertained.

Why, Mr. President, this is a provision for a State to do what it can do with its own resources in educating its children in the common schools. That is the institution; that is the only one we deal with; and is there any other mode of distributing the application of this fund, great or small, through these public schools, than that it shall be adjusted upon the number of scholars that are there? What methods would critics have of distributing in the way of applying to the direct education of boys and girls in the public schools but in the ratable proportion of scholars? And as this well-spring is opened in every corner of this land and this education shall bring out larger and larger access to the schools by the colored people, then this plastic, this open, this flexible mode will adjust itself to that.

I can not conceive anything in this criticism that deserves attention; but if I wanted a reason other than that which I have stated for large endowments to assist in removing the mass of ignorance, not only among those of educational age, but among the old, the aged, the middle aged, the robust, I would like to hear these earnest Senators from the happy portions of our land with which they are familiar, who, with so light a tongue, talk of the task of education and of the school age in these New England communities and this great mass in portions of the South. We hear from the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] the description of an interesting picture of the great importance of the education obtained outside of the school, and how to have the child at the mother's knee taught the prayers and the precepts of the gospel, and hear from the father the manly and interesting facts of life and preparation to tread the foot-steps of prosperous fathers, and from the pulpit that has to teach to the young and to the old together the continual need, day after day and week after week, in audiences of five hundred or a thousand hearers every Sunday in the year, the great doctrines that have been inculcated upon them from their cradle.

Who could bear this burden of the education of the black children outside of the schools that have been opened so nobly by the States themselves and which we intend to open? No, no, Mr. President, these idle, these, I must say, irresponsible comparisons of the condition of children who are taught from the mother's breast in this education of life until they go to the first school as little toddling children and then to the grammar school and then to the education for higher pursuits, is a picture, when you transfer it to the dark ground of these populations, that can not be recognized. Why, Mr. President, the only inlet into the hamlets or the cabins of the old, the aged blacks is to be through this little angel of light, sent from the public schools, and this superincumbent mass rests only upon this one gleam to be carried into that household by the instruction of the public schools.

We are told, forsooth, that education in the common schools is but a small part of the education of man. No, Mr. President, these older men, these older women, these men of motives, these women here in the same darkness, so far as education goes, with the little young that they wish to turn into the sunshine of education, these can not receive the direct benefits of instruction; but these grown girls, these grown boys, coming up into full enjoyment in their journey of life, are able to tell the fathers and the mothers and to read to them and talk to them about the forms of life and the means and methods by which people are elevated and civilized and made submissive to the law. Though this great mass can not shed on those below them in age any of this light and sustenance, yet these young girls, this growing race, may stand somewhat in the position of that noble Roman youthful matron who imparted to a blind and imprisoned aged father the sustenance that nature gave her for her own offspring.

It is said that there is an innovation upon, an interference with, an oppression of the freedom of the States. Why, Mr. President, this bill is as observant as it is possible to have one which reserves oversight by this Government to follow and secure the application of the endowment to the purposes intended. It is in this bill, as in the Morrill act and as it is in various other forms of endowment, a mere reservation of sufficient authority to accomplish the result, and it is criticised on this side of the Chamber for the reason that it is so exacting, that it is so continuous in its operations as not to make it worth the giving of their acceptance to it.

Where are the lovers of education that want to help this bill? Where are the lovers of a benighted race that hasten to sustain this bill? Let them come with their offerings of frankincense and myrrh upon this altar of education. I suspect these arguments of impediment, when during the ten years, certainly during the three considerations of this bill in this body since I have been here, where were the improvements, where the better helps, where the worthier means, where the better agencies that were proposed? I did not hear them. Let us then take from those who feel the needs, take from those who wish to meet the needs, and let us have their counsel and their aid in helping to improve this measure.

But, Mr. President, it is said that the North and the South stand in attitudes of distrust on each side and of aversion each to the other. It is claimed that after the conclusion of the war this great wound in the body politic should have been cured at the first intention, and that the Northern people are responsible for that not having taken place. A wound as wide and as deep as that to be cured at the first intention, as if no ragged edge, as if no fever would set in, as if no nerves could be involved and liable under contact of so rude a touch as this war had inflicted!

Mr. President, although quite aside from this situation as it now exists that we are to apply our attention to, I must here differ from these calculations. I do not believe that at a remote or a much nearer date any great fact more interesting to humanity at large would appear than that this great people suffered immense change in its condition, both politically and socially, and survived it with as little of terror, as little of danger, as little of misconception, as little of fever as ever could attend such a vast, such a deep, such a permanent transaction. Was it not amazing that this great body of the American people could rally all its resources, that there should be no punishment and no proscriptions, and that in the halls of Congress all should again be collected on equal terms, and nothing left to darken the air but the mutual oburgations across this alley and that whenever we get up a benevolent discussion about education we should meet with these mere technical objections?

Mr. President, I do not take any share in any distrust on this side that the States of the South, as we call them, will not apply these sums if they accept them. I do not recognize as at all creditable to the other side of the Chamber that they should be disdainful of our succor or contentious of our sympathy. It is not our succor nor our sympathy that I plead for. It is the sympathy and succor of the United States of America. A no less noble benefactor than that stands forward for your acceptance, and for this side I will say that we ask no greater confidence from you in a detailed, in a limited, and what may be considered a narrow trust, when you have been given the great amnesty and the great pardon for all the trespasses that have been committed and that are brought now and then into view. I do not like, when every feature and every proportion in this transaction is on the grandest scale, that flaws and defects are to be pointed out on one side or the other of this transaction. No; now is the time it is to be done, now is the time it is to be refused, now is the time it is to be rejected, now is the time in the name of the country when it is to be proposed.

Let nobody flatter himself that this country will stand in this friendly relation, all parts of it in the same condition, if this bill is defeated, that it will be if this bill is passed. Let no men flatter themselves that the people of this country are inattentive to this very transaction that passes in this bill. Millions of noble men and women through all portions of this country are turning their intelligent eyes upon this transaction as it proceeds on this side of this Chamber; millions of eager and straining eyes of the healthy and the feeble and the ignorant from the other portion of the country are gazing with hopeful eyes upon this side of the Chamber, and of clear scrutiny upon its rejection, if it proceeds from the predominance of the feeling and the votes on that side.

Society is not to stand still, government is not to stand still, the moral government of the world is not to stand still. Great phrases are no help to a situation. Some say that you will endanger self-help if you extend this aid. Why, Mr. President, would it do for a benevolent bystander to refuse to cast a rope to a struggling and drowning man on the ground that it would enfeeble his self-help?

Instead of going into an idle analogy let us look at the great, the benevolent system of life-saving that is carried on by this Government for shipwrecked passengers and shipwrecked mariners; and are we to be told in the self-satisfied situation of the landsman, "Oh, no! Do not send your cars and boats, your ropes and your mortars, and your lights and rockets. Oh, no! All this method of helping the seamen will lessen their self-help. They have all been brought up, until in the last fifty years, on the plan of saving themselves, and what better education could they have for saving passengers than to learn how to save themselves? No, let the seamen alone; let them learn to take care of themselves." To my apprehension the suggestion that I hear touching the application of this bill in this matter of enfeebling the people has as little relation to the situation of necessity and the opportunity of self-help as this figure which I have presented to your attention.

But we have experience in the benevolent forecast of a great American merchant who took hold of this business at the expiring days of the rebellion. He took out of his large fortune a great portion of it. He loved his country. He knew that the war had demolished the prosperity and fortunes of the South, and he knew the immense and pressing necessity of the enfranchised slaves, who needed a method that would educe from that population by education the means of dealing with a tremendous situation. Selecting such men as he could place confidence in at the North and at the South, he put in their hands a sum that gave them, perhaps, $100,000 a year, with no injunctions except in those portions of the country that needed it from the results of the war and with equal access to this benefit of both races. For twenty years these gentlemen have administered that trust. Do you wish to tell me now that if, instead of having $100,000 in our hands, we had a million a year, two millions a year, five millions a year, there would not have been a more rapid, a more extensive, a more convincing and admirable exposition of the result?

But the result is one of the greatest that ever happened because of its being pointed where it was needed and when it was needed, and every State superintendent, and every State governor, and every board of instruction will tell you that this largess of George Peabody was the first light, the first encouragement, the first help to men to help themselves. The smallness of the sum would come to very little in the direct education of this boy or that girl over this vast area, but it was a stimulant to the weak, to those who could add their help, which with our help would become an amount that would produce results.

Search the record of these State agencies and superintendents, find out how much this little private endowment—little for a nation, but noble for a single benefactor—stimulated and worked out by other agencies, has accomplished. The contributors, out of their means to be added together with this aid, would do something important. Thus we find out now how wise the benefaction is, and all thank this great benefactor, and no particle of friction, irritation, interference, faulty or meddling disposition has been exhibited by any. Then ask me whether, when we have added to what has been secured by other benefactions and when all have brought about a larger education and a larger means of education—when we have opened the channels that were clogged and closed—we are to be told, forsooth, on this side of the Chamber that they have now so far advanced that help will do no good. Mr. President, the people who look at this matter outside of this Chamber in this way and the Senators who propose this criticism have not looked into the situation.

Mr. President, however large the area of general discussion, however more direct might be some need of our criticism, I feel that I can not trespass upon the attention of the Senate one moment more. But I wish it understood that when great and important arguments are presented here and we are told on one side what might have been done, and on this side what ought to have been done, those are only meditations of disappointed hopes. These are living hopes that are now here. The question is what ought to be done now and what can be done now?

We are told that all, or perhaps all, that is needed to permeate and render alive and beneficial the action between the two races, either in politics or in social affairs, is justice. Ah, Mr. President, when did the human race ever learn to do justice except by education? Who can say in these communities what is justice to the whites, who can say what is justice to the blacks, unless by the education of both? Who can learn what justice is, not in abstract or in rhetorical declamation, but in the intimate sense of giving what is due to every one—sum cuique tribuito—at every hearth-stone, in every court-room, in every pulpit, in every market-place? Who has welcomed from above the star of justice that could enlighten the human race except by following the methods that the great and beneficent Governor of the human race has made, that they shall follow the precepts step by step as far as they could in these great inculcations? Then, indeed, it may be that education in these regions of danger and difficulty and doubt and distrust may have brought out all actual and living enjoyments—justice, that is safe against all the vicissitudes of human affairs; justice that is safe against growing old even with time.

Cassibus hæc nullis, nullo delictis æro.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I desire to submit a few observations upon this bill before the vote shall be taken upon it, in order that my own position may be understood upon the subject. I have upon former occasions when the bill has been before the Senate for consideration voted for it, and I propose to do so at this time, unless some change should be made in the condition under which the bill stands before the Senate.

I shall support the bill because it is a donation and only a donation, a gift from the people of the United States to the different States, a gift without condition for the purpose of education, containing within the bill no other conditions than those which have been applied to the agricultural college and the experimental stations. In these respects it differs in nothing from the previous bills which have been passed and are now the law.

Considered in the light of reason, the appropriation contained in this bill must be regarded only in reference to the respective merits of the different subjects of appropriation, as education, contrasted with the Army, the importance of education as contrasted with the Navy, or public buildings, or any of the objects of national policy and expenditure.

I am not disposed to exaggerate the importance of this appropriation. It will have its influence, and a good influence, and under the provisions of the bill it is apportioned with reference to the particular necessities of particular States. For instance, in the State of Florida the amount collected under the revenue laws of the country which will have to be appropriated in some form or other to pay the appropriation of this bill will be about $400,000 approximately, more or less, while there will be paid to the State, if subsequent Congresses shall approve the appropriation and enact it into law, something like a million dollars. The State of Florida, therefore, will be benefited by receiving a larger sum for the purpose of education than will be paid by the people of that State.

I support the bill further because it is an appropriation out of money already in the Treasury, a surplus that has been accumulated there and which must be paid out for some purpose of appropriation. If it were a bill to impose additional taxes upon the people of the country I should vote against it, but it is a bill for temporary aid and making an appropriation out of money already in the Treasury. Whether that money shall be paid out to other purposes hereafter is another and a different question. It is in the Treasury now and subject to be appropriated for the purposes of this bill.

I do not conceive that there can be any defense made of a permanent system of appropriation by Congress for local education or common schools or education unless it be in the shape of a great national university situated here in the District of Columbia. Unquestionably local education must depend on local support as a system. Nor would there be any justification for the provisions of a bill which proposed to use the power of taxation in the National Government to collect from the people of any particular State or locality the money necessary for the support of their systems of education, having the effect to deprive the people who pay the tax of the power to direct and control the appropriation.

That has been objected to as comprehended in the policy and the effect of the pending bill, but it is not a reasonable conclusion and the bill does not justify that proposition. The bill is simply one for a donation or an appropriation of a specific amount of money for the temporary support of education. In that point of view I think that its effect will be beneficial. It will be in the direction of aiding local education in the portions of the country where assistance is needed, and I think the bill would have been better if it had been confined to those localities where the need of assisting the efforts of different communities or States is most important.

Mr. President, I speak of the Southern States and especially of the State of Florida. The State of Florida has been taxed by her own consent and the action of her own people to the utmost extent of the capacity of her people, and more than she has been able reasonably to bear, for the support of education. I find that since the war the State of Florida has paid in customs revenues to the Federal Government $8,213,419 and from the internal revenue $5,657,652.05. Now, in addition to this sum of money they have taxed themselves for the support of education, for the common schools in the State, a sum which may be reasonably estimated at between three and three and one-half million dollars. You will perceive that this is a large proportion of the taxation imposed for the support of the government, and when you consider the circumstances of the country you will see that it is equal to the utmost capacity of the people of that State.

That the surplus in the Treasury should be appropriated in temporary aid of education I can not see that there can be any reasonable objection upon any ground of public policy. If it be said that it is establishing a precedent, a precedent of what? A precedent of aiding education under extraordinary circumstances in the line of policy that the Government has already adopted. This fact prevents the effect of any precedent for evil, and if there should occur similar circumstances hereafter the precedent can have only a beneficial effect.

If it be assumed that the appropriation carries with it the power of control and asserts in the General Government the right to interfere in the affairs of the States, I deny it. If it did it should never receive my support.

If there was in it any interference whatever with the absolute power of the State to direct local education, to accept or reject it, to apply it through its own instrumentalities to the purpose specified in the bill of promoting common-school education, I should never consent to its passage. But, whatever may be the opinion, or the hopes, or the desire of those who favor the bill, there can be found in its provisions nothing that justifies this conclusion and nothing from which such an assumption of power may be reasonably inferred.

I do not consider that this appropriation nor the appropriation of a thousand millions of dollars, if it were practicable and if the capacity of this country and the disposition of the people of this country were adequate and willing to make an appropriation of that amount, would effect the objects which have been contended for and set forth here.

Education, it is true, is one of the most important objects of public policy—the common-school education, schools to be established everywhere, industrial schools, in my judgment, far more than the ordinary common-school education; but they can not change the established force of nature and the necessary economies of natural law.

We have been told here that one great object of this appropriation is the establishment of a homogeneity amongst men, a common standard of thought and judgment. I do not accept that as a controlling influence over my vote. The colored people of the South have been set forth as the special and particular object of this appropriation. I vote for it because they share in its benefits, but not because the appropriation of this money will have any great appreciable effect upon the condition of the colored people.

They have found amongst the people of the Southern States their best friends. They have found that that people have voluntarily imposed upon themselves taxes for their education equal to their utmost capacity to bear. They have found that the money has been equally and fairly divided between them and the people of the white race. In proportion to the taxable resources of the people, as heavy a burden of taxation has been imposed by the people of the different Southern States as by the people of any other States in the Union.

Mr. President, the condition of the colored men has been made a text in connection with this bill, and it has been urged that their relations to the people of the South furnish an especial reason for this appropriation. In so far as that touches the means of the people to establish a general system of common schools for both races it is proper and pertinent, and carries force with it. In so far as it furnishes any suggestions of a failure on the part of the people of those States to do everything that it has been possible to do, it is a mistake and has no proper place in the argument. If it relates in any respect whatever to placing the colored man in a condition other and different from that which he would occupy without this appropriation, then there is another error.

While I appreciate the generosity and the fair and just feeling which has characterized the Senator from New Hampshire who has introduced this bill and stood by it session after session, while I approve of it as a proper object of public policy to grant out of the surplus of money which has accumulated in the Treasury by virtue of excessive taxation and which must be distributed somehow and to some objects, while I maintain that this is a proper object and one of the best objects to which it could be devoted, as a pure and simple grant to the States, claiming no power whatever and conveying no power whatever to interfere in their local affairs, it has my cordial support and would have for the whole amount of the surplus in the Treasury. While I take this view of the subject and maintain these propositions, yet in so far as the relations of these two races are concerned, the colored people have received, as they will receive, every possible consideration which sound policy, which kindly feeling, which a proper consideration for their rights would demand; and they have received it in a larger extent than they have received from any other community, from any other States, or any other people in the history of the world.

Mr. President, we have had a great deal of consideration given to the condition of the Southern white people and to the Southern colored people, and the relations which exist between them, and it has been assumed and repeated here and throughout the country that there was a necessity of some repressing influences, of some severe legislation to be directed towards the Southern white people because of their want of consideration for the colored people who live among them and among whom they live. I should never vote for this bill if it contained such an idea, if it did not apply to them and to the white people equally, if it was not an aid to education without reference to these considerations and to this imputation upon the Southern people.

Mr. President, history shows no condition of the world, no period of time in which the colored race have ever received from any people the consideration which they have had from the white people of the Southern States. This is not mere assertion. When we consider the history of this country and the contributions which have been made to this Government from the relation which has been sustained between the white and the colored people of the Southern States and the civilization which has grown up out of that relation, it is a matter of astonishment that we should have here suggestions from persons outside of those influences impeaching and distrusting and reflecting upon the character and the sympathy and the kindness of feeling of the white people of the South for the colored people.

From what condition did George Washington come, and Thomas Jefferson, and the Lees, and the great patriots who formed this Government, who more than any other people contributed to its formation and shaped its institutions? Was it not from a condition of society in which the white people and these colored people lived together? Who was it but a Southern man and a slave-holder, a descendant of slave-holders, a man of elegant taste and accomplishments and ample fortune, with these circumstances and surroundings, brought up in the midst of these people, whose heart was fired with sympathy for these suffering and oppressed masses of mankind, who traveled on foot throughout France, and came back to this country and made war upon all distinctions of caste?

Who was the author of the Declaration of Independence, and who did more to form the Constitution of the Union than any other, and to impress upon our institutions the idea of the equal rights of men in their respective conditions to life, liberty, and property? Was it not Thomas Jefferson, the outcome of this relation between the colored people, the slaves, and the white people, and who was the first advocate and the great advocate of freedom for those people?

Mr. President, the beginning of this Government was a constitutional union formed more largely under the influence of the people who had grown up out of this relation between the two races than any other. It was such people who gave the spirit of freedom, the spirit of equality to our Constitution. It was such people who gave shape and form to our institutions, and it is because of this sympathy with mankind this great, benevolent, and philanthropic Thomas Jefferson to-day stands first in the hearts of the people everywhere throughout the world as the great representative of popular government, of sympathy for the people, and of defense of their rights.

But let us follow for a little while the condition of these people. I have said before that the twenty-five years since the war exhibits a kindness, forbearance, and sympathy with the colored people which the history of the world does not show anywhere else. The colored man has with the white people of the Southern States more friends and warmer friends and warmer sympathies as a race, and a people more willing to advance him, to place him, where he is qualified for it, in proper positions than in any other part of the world; yet those people do not recognize him as being fit, nor is he fit in the mass, to control their institutions and to be a dominant political power in the affairs; nor is it left to themselves do they desire to exercise political control over the white people of the Southern States.

Mr. President, a fair and a just comparison will be to see what was the treatment of the colored man after his emancipation in the States of the South and what was his treatment after emancipation in the States of the North. Without any disparagement or reflection upon either or imputation upon any one, it is a just and fair process of argument to inquire, in respect to the feeling of these different people and the imputation of an interference with their rights and a want of sympathy for them, what was the condition in which the negro was left in the two respective portions of the country. I desire to put in the RECORD here a quotation from a book, Notes on the History of Slavery in Massachusetts, by George H. Moore. I will ask permission to print it without detaining the Senate to read it.

The extract referred to is as follows:

V. Be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid (the senate and house of representatives in General Court assembled). That no person being an African or negro, other than a subject of the Emperor of Morocco or a citizen of some one of the United States (to be evidenced by a certificate from the secretary of the State of which he shall be a citizen), shall tarry within this Commonwealth for a longer time than two months, and upon complaint made to any justice of the peace within this Commonwealth that any such person has been within the same more than two months the said justice shall order the said person to depart out of the Commonwealth, and in case that the said African or negro shall not depart as aforesaid any justice of the peace within this Commonwealth, upon complaint and proof made that such person has continued within this Commonwealth, within ten days after notice given him or her to depart as aforesaid, shall commit the said person to any house of correction within the county, there to be kept to hard labor, agreeable to the rules and orders of the said house, until the sessions of the peace next to be holden within and for the said county; and the master of the said house of correction is hereby required and directed to transmit an attested copy of the warrant of commitment to the said court on the first day of their said session, and if upon trial at the said court it shall be made to appear that the said person has thus continued within the Commonwealth, contrary to the tenor of this act, he or she shall be whipped not exceeding ten stripes, and ordered to depart out of this Commonwealth within ten days; and if he or she shall not so depart, the same process shall be had and punishment inflicted, and so forth.

Passed March 26, 1788.

Mr. CALL. I read this to show the condition of the colored people in the two respective States. In the one they were banished and not allowed to remain, and the statute punishes them with whipping and with imprisonment. In the Southern States they have been educated. They have been educated at the expense of the white people, notwithstanding they have produced by their labor always since their emancipation far less than the white people. They have been educated upon equal terms with the white people. The school fund, the public fund derived from taxes, has been appropriated with strict impartiality between the different races in proportion to their numbers.

I wish to go a little beyond that. I desire that this proposition may be considered by the people of this country. Under whose care and whose treatment has this colored race prospered, multiplied, and progressed to their present condition? Banished from the Northern States when emancipated, banished by statute from most of the original thirteen States, how is it that in this period from the year 1788 and to the year 1868 and up to the year 1890 these people have continued to grow in numbers, to increase in prosperity, to accumulate property in the Southern States alone of all the countries in the world and in all the history of the race?

If you contrast the condition of these people to-day with those in Africa we may form some idea of the debt of gratitude and humanity due to the people in the Southern States and to the relations which existed between them and the Africans—the Africans, who, however they came amongst them, found a home there, not imported by those people or their ancestors, but driven amongst them by the hostile legislation of other States, and finding friends, protection, and homes, and increasing until now they constitute an important portion of the producing population of the country, protected in all their rights and in all their real interests.

Is not that a fact which is to stand in the face of every species of invective, of misrepresentation, or of accusation against the people of the South? Who is it that feels an interest in these people, strangers to them and bearing no part in this great work of kindness and protection for years, who stands up now to accuse the Southern people of a want of kindness? What part have their accusers borne in the great work of protecting and caring for these people, who nowhere else in the whole history of recorded time have found a place of progress or of protection or of even anything like civil rights of any description whatever?

We have heard a great deal about the treatment of the negroes by the Southern people and the hardship of the lot of the colored race and their ancestors. I wish to read from Stanley's Adventures in Africa a short paragraph:

I also busied myself—

Says this author—

I also busied myself in collecting a vocabulary of Kirna and in inquiring into the manners and customs of the people, and by this means became acquainted with the ceremonies observed at the burial of a chief of Urui, which are probably unequaled in their savagery.

The first proceeding is to divert the course of a stream and in its bed to dig an enormous pit, the bottom of which is then covered with living women. At one end a woman is placed on her hands and knees, and upon her back the dead chief, covered with his beads and other treasures, is seated, being supported on either side by one of his wives, while his second wife sits at his feet.

The earth is then shoveled in on them and all the women are buried alive with the exception of the second wife. To her, custom is more merciful than to her companions, and grants her the privilege of being killed before the huge grave is filled in. This being completed, a number of male slaves—sometimes forty or fifty—are slaughtered and their blood poured over the grave, after which the river is allowed to resume its course.

Stories were rife that no fewer than one hundred women were buried alive with Bambaré, Kasongo's father; but let us hope that this may be an exaggeration.

The same author shows how the slave trade is now conducted in Africa by the native Africans, as follows:

At Uganda the trade begins to assume a wholesale character, yet it wears here a rather business aspect; the slaves by this time become hardened to suffering. "they have no more tears to shed," the chords of sympathy have been severed and they seem stolid and indifferent. At Ujiji one sees a regular slave-market established. There are "slave-folds and pens," like the stock-yards of railroads for cattle, into which the naked wretches are driven by hundreds, to wallow on the ground and half starved on food not fit for hogs. By the time they reach here they are mere "ebony skeletons," attenuated, haggard, gaunt human frames. Their very voices have sunk to a mere hoarse whisper, which comes with an unearthly sound from out their parched, withered lips. Low moans, like those that escape from the dying, fill the air, and they reel and stagger when they attempt to stand upright, so wasted are they by the havoc of hunger. They look like a vast herd of black skeletons, and as one looks at them in their horrible sufferings he can not but exclaim, "How can an all-mighty Father permit such things?" No matter whether on the slow and fanishing march or crowded like starved pigs in the overloaded canoes, it is the same unvarying scene of hunger and horror, on which the cruel slave-trader looks without remorse or pity. It may be asked how are these slaves obtained? The answer is, by a systematic war waged in the populous country of Marungu by banditti, supported by Arabs.

These pay guns and powder for the slaves the former capture, which enables them to keep up the war. These Arabs, who sell the slaves on the coast, furnish the only market for the native banditti of the interior. These latter are mostly natives of Unyamwezi, who band together to capture all the inhabitants of villages too weak to resist them. Marungu is the great productive field of their satanic labors. Here almost every small village is independent, recognizing no ruler but its own petty chief.

These are often at variance with each other, and, instead of banding together to resist a common foe, look on quietly while one after another is swept by the raiders. In crossing a river, Stanley met two hundred of these wretches chained together, and, on inquiry, found they belonged to the governor of Unyamwezi, a former chaplain of Speke and Burton, and had been captured by an officer of the prince of Zanzibar; this prince had made a treaty with England to put a stop to this horrible traffic, and yet here was one of his officers engaged in it, taking his captives to Zanzibar, and this was his third batch during the year.

Contrast that condition with that of these people now in the Southern States, and in all fairness ask the question how is it that not in New England, not in the North, benevolent as they are, progressive as they are, but in the Southern States and with these people whom you are accusing, they have grown up into this vast multitude of civilized beings, understanding something of the social life and social duties, and living in peace and friendship with the white people?

Mr. President, let us have some truth in this matter. Let this great monumental fact of the progress of these people from this condition in their native Africa give the credit where it is justly due, and award a proper tribute to the Christian feeling, to the sympathy, to the affection that grew up in the relations sustained between these people. It has not gone yet, although it has been greatly diminished and changed by the efforts which have been used to make them an influential and even a controlling political factor.

Mr. President, I am a friend of the African race. Whatever can be done, not to crush them in the millstones of political agitation, but to educate them, to develop them, to lead them to the course which Providence and the natural economies will direct, I am willing to do.

You will not by a system of common schools change the course of Providence. You will not make the leopard change his spots nor the Ethiopian his skin. You will not divest the white race of their racial distinctions. You will not dispossess them of their disposition to preserve the purity of their race. You will not by the expenditure of the money appropriated in this bill, nor a hundred times the amount, alter the course of nature and of Providence. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] said here the other day that the fact of the existence of these people in the Southern States upon terms of kindness and of peace and of prosperity to some extent and the fact of the impossibility of their controlling those States where they were a numerical majority were two antagonistic propositions that could not be reconciled.

But the colored man is docile. He has his kindly qualities, and he lives in peace and happiness where there is a directing hand, where he feels that there is not an antagonism created between him and the white race. If left to himself, where he is educated, where he is qualified by a virtuous life, he will receive political promotion from the kindly feelings and sympathies which have in these hundred years made him grow up from a small number into a vast multitude of people, performing in some way and to some extent the duties of civilized life.

But if you undertake to create under any conditions whatever a control which is not exercised by them anywhere, which is not true anywhere in the North and will never be done, that a naked numerical majority, uninfluenced by social and personal considerations, shall be the absolute law; if you undertake to create that kind of antagonism, you interpose a barrier to his progress; you interrupt these kind feelings; you destroy the sympathies which have been the moving factor in his advancement from a condition of barbarism all along in prosperity, in an abundance of all the necessities of life, in the main with a greater degree of abundance of comfort than is to be found amongst any laboring people anywhere in the world, because, with a country comparatively new and a fertile soil and the colored man devoted to agriculture, the conditions were most favorable for his abundant supply of all the material wants of life, and the natural sympathies that religion and humanity create grow up and control in a spirit of kindness and affection the relations of the two races.

I protest against the idea that you can by the mere substitution of a common-school education supply that education which christianity furnishes, which sympathy creates, which the relation of the two races upon terms of decent friendship develops. It plays but an unimportant part by the side of that education which the natural affection and kindness of the white race gives to the colored people living in terms of peace and quiet and of mutual assistance with them.

That is the education that has made the colored man capable of a future, hopeful of attaining some condition where he will be upon the plane of civilization with other races; and it is to the white people of the Southern States alone that it is due and that it will be due. If assistance in the shape of a pure and absolute donation to the people who have proved their right to it by the fact that they alone have ever given to the colored man protection and, in their relation and their contact with him, the development which he possesses at this time, if a system of aid from the National Government in a proper way is left to them to use and dispose of, that alone is the condition which is possible for their improvement, their development, and their protection, if you do not intervene considerations of political power.

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. HIGGINS] said here the other day in a speech which he made that nothing showed the necessity more of this appropriation than the different views of the representatives upon both sides of this Chamber, which he was pleased to term were the best outcome and representatives of the morality and the intelligence of their respective constituencies, as to the assassination of a United States marshal. But, Mr. President, there was no foundation for that observation. The standards of morality are eternal. They are the everlasting yea and amen of Divine Providence, and they are in their application to all races the same.

In Delaware, in Vermont, in Florida, or in Mississippi the United States marshal or the United States judge who covers himself with the mantle of public authority that he may be an assassin and a perpetrator of outrage upon women is not representing the majesty of the law or the Government. In covering his shoulders with the mantle of religion and of law he is still the outcast. The judge who, sitting upon the bench, perjures himself, or the Senator who, in a spirit of harshness, will deal with the rights of others in a spirit of persecution, can not protect himself from the just scorn of an outraged public opinion by claiming the authority of the law.

In these respects they do not represent the law. Hence, my friend from Delaware was mistaken. The standards of morality are and ever have been the same in all sections. Who will say he surpasses Thomas Jefferson and George Washington and the compatriots of their day in his appreciation of morals or his proper regard for public authority? They were the representatives, as these people of the South are to-day, of their people, their institutions, their relations, their contact with the colored people.

Then, again, what more? Who will stand up and say that there can be contact in terms of equality between an inferior race, constant contact, surrounded by them, unless they be separated—contact, I mean, upon terms of equality—without unfavorably affecting the progress of the higher race? If you want a man to be progressive you must surround him with the influences which are better than he is, or at least as good as he is. If you surround him only with those which are inferior and his whole association is with them, you must limit him in his progress.

But such was not the relation which the colored people sustained with the white population of the South. They sustained a relation of dependence upon the one side and protection on the other. They sustained a relation of friendship upon one side and contribution and assistance and support upon the other. The relations were those of affection and charity and religion and kindness in the main, though there were then there, as here, monsters who perpetrated wrong.

But this was the general character of the relations, and the outcome of their morality was in George Washington and in Thomas Jefferson; and I challenge the Senators who asperse and make charges upon the Southern people to produce brighter specimens of humanity in all the history of the world than those which came from these people in their contact and relationship with the slave population of the South. I insist that the people of the Southern States still have the same high standards of religion and morality and charity, and their representative men are equal in these qualities to those of any other people.

Mr. President, I support this bill. I support it because education is a great public object—not the mere learning to read and write, but the education of the mind and the heart and the character. It contributes to it. The little pittance that is given here to each State will amount to but little, but it is better appropriated in that direction than to be appropriated to the Army or the Navy, or to public buildings. It is better because it will be an evidence, in my judgment, of a disposition on the part of the people of this country to render aid to the Southern people, now sorely taxed and laboring under a heavy burden.

All the propositions that maintain the propriety, the necessity of absolute local support of education and local control of education I acquiesce in. They are true. It would be absurd for the National Government to impose a tax upon the people of the different localities to be collected and then paid out by appropriations by Congress in support of local education. If that were the proposition, in my judgment it would not deserve support because it would be an attack upon the principle of local support, of local education. But it is not that. You have an excess in your Treasury, and the question is, To what will you apply it?

You will not reduce the taxes until another accumulation has been made. Shall it go to the bondholders to pay them their immense premiums? Shall it go to the Army or Navy? Shall it go entirely for the support and education of the Indians? Or will some part of it be given to these people who justly claim the merit of whatever advancement the colored race has made from the condition of barbarism to their present situation? Shall it be appropriated and given to them to dispose of, not for the blacks alone, but for the whole community of whites and blacks who, under their administration, are in the main living in happiness and in contentment and in prosperity?

Mr. BATE obtained the floor.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Senator from Tennessee yield to a motion to adjourn?

Mr. BATE. Certainly, sir.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate adjourn, the Senator from Tennessee being entitled to the floor.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, March 20, 1890, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, March 19, 1890.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. G. H. CORREY, D. D. The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

REPRINT OF A BILL.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution for immediate consideration.

Mr. COOPER, of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I rise to call up the contested-election case of Mudd vs. Compton.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois is to reprint a bill.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Illinois. It is.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That House bill 7846, Fifty-first Congress, first session, entitled "A bill to provide for the establishment of Government telegraphs," be reprinted.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it will be so ordered. There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

MARYLAND CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—MUDD VS. COMPTON.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER] calls up the contested-election case of Mudd vs. Compton.

Mr. COOPER, of Ohio. I offer the following resolutions.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Barnes Compton was not elected as a Representative to the Fifty-first Congress from the Fifth district of Maryland, and is not entitled to the seat.

Resolved, That Sydney E. Mudd was duly elected as a Representative for the Fifth Congressional district of Maryland to the Fifty-first Congress, and is entitled to his seat as such.

Mr. MORROW. Mr. Speaker, when the House adjourned last evening the business pending was the pension appropriation bill. I understand that this resolution is claimed to be one of superior privilege.

The SPEAKER. That measure was pending in Committee of the Whole, and the question of the right of a member to his seat is of the highest privilege.

Mr. MORROW. If that appropriation bill is to give way for this contested-election case, I want it understood that when it is disposed of we will proceed with the pension appropriation bill.

Mr. COOPER, of Ohio. You can have the floor immediately after this has been disposed of; and I wish to announce that it is agreed that the debate on this case shall be limited to six hours, three hours on each side, and the previous question considered as ordered, after which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MOORE] will offer what substitute he desires for the resolutions offered by the majority of the committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the agreement proposed? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MORROW. I desire to give notice that I shall insist upon the consideration of the pension appropriation bill as soon as this case shall be disposed of.

The SPEAKER. It will be in order after this contested-election case has been disposed of. Does the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER] desire to take the floor now?

Mr. COOPER, of Ohio. No, sir; I desire to yield one hour to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY]. The understanding is that the debate is to be limited to three hours upon each side, after which the previous question is to be considered as ordered, with liberty to offer a substitute to the resolutions offered by the majority.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, in opening this case in behalf of the Committee on Elections, I wish to say that the questions involved in it are largely, or perhaps mainly, questions of law. The majority report shows that the contestant was elected upon the face of the returns by from two to three majority. The minority report, upon the other hand, shows that the contestee is entitled to his seat by a majority of 37. So that we have an issue clean and clear of 154 majority upon the one hand and of 37 upon the other. It is not claimed, and will not be claimed by the minority on this floor, that the governor in giving the certificate of election in this case to the sitting member had all the returns of the Congressional district before him. But, upon the contrary, it will not be disputed that as to one county, Charles County, there were two precincts which were wholly unreported to the governor.

This fact being conceded by the minority report and also being conceded by the majority report, it seems to me it does away with the prima facie effect accorded to the governor's certificate in the case.

How did it occur that these two precincts were omitted from the returns from Charles County? No one specially was to blame about it. It was a mere accidental error committed by the judges of election. They have a very complete election law in the State of Maryland, and among those laws is a provision for a glass ballot-box; and there is also a provision by which one copy of the returns shall be sealed up in that ballot-box and returned to the county officials, and that the ballot-box shall not be opened again until ordered by the court or until proper process of law had for that purpose.

Now, as to some other precincts I will say, merely as a matter of history, that the same error occurred as to some of the boxes which gave the sitting member a majority, and the sealed returns were also erroneously locked up; in other words, both sides by mistake put all the returns in a sealed ballot-box in several instances. The sitting member being an old member and having that shrewdness which is accumulated by large experience in matters of that kind, got his friends together and they "saw through a glass darkly," and read the returns through the glass ballot-box and corrected the returns through which the majorities in his favor appear; but the contestant [Mr. Mudd], on the other hand, attempted to have the ballot-box opened by legal process. Now, notwithstanding the fact that these ballots and returns were locked up for the two precincts and were omitted and were not sent to the governor and in view of the proper proceedings pending to have the ballot-boxes opened and the original returns certified, the governor gave the certificate to the sitting member. The circumstances under which this certificate and others of like character were given by the governors of some of the Democratic States are quite fresh in the memory of this House.

The House was close; it was uncertain who would control it, and it was important that the governor should give to Mr. Compton, the sitting member, the certificate of election in time that he might help to organize the House. Something in the nature of an "urgency deficiency bill" was put in the form of a requisition upon the governors of West Virginia, Tennessee, and Maryland. The governor of West Virginia responded with an alacrity that promptly gave to two gentlemen certificates for seats to which they were not entitled on this floor. The governor of Maryland gave the certificate to the sitting member without warrant. Now, in the correction to which I have already called your attention, both the majority and the minority of the Committee on Elections have agreed that the returns for these two precincts should be added, and when these returns are added and various corrections as alleged shall be made by the minority report have been made, it is claimed by the minority that Mr. Compton is entitled to a seat by a majority of 37. There is, Mr. Speaker, another item that was omitted from the returns—a mistake of 28 in the vote from Calvert County.

Under the theory of parliamentary law it is my duty to address my remarks to the Speaker, and I am supposed to be endeavoring to convince you, Mr. Speaker, that the majority report is right; but, in fact, I wish more particularly to address my remarks to my good friend from Texas [Mr. MOORE] who wrote the minority report. I am not trying "to call the righteous," but I am trying to call my friend from Texas "to repentance" in this case, and to see whether he will agree that upon the face of his own report laid before this House the sitting member is entitled to his seat.

In Calvert County there was a mistake made of 28 votes in the count. The Republican papers and the Democratic papers and the general public were informed as early as the 10th of November, 1888, that the vote for S. E. Mudd in Calvert County was 1,166 instead of 1,138.

In footing up the returns, however, and sending the general result to the governor, the various precincts were not set out separately and reported, but the general result only was certified. It appears from the evidence in the case, without any dispute, that the majority of the judges of election in the county were Republicans, that a Democratic deputy clerk did the footing, and that the Republicans read off the figures to him and he footed them up and made the result 1,138 when it ought to have been 1,166. The mistake was not then discovered, and the returns from each precinct not being sent to the governor, he had no opportunity to make the correction. I wish to call attention to the return as published in the Democratic newspaper, the Calvert Gazette, on the 10th day of November, which gives the vote as 1,166 for Mudd, 896 for Compton.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Will the gentleman state whether those were the official figures?

Mr. LACEY. These figures agree, as I will explain further on, with the official figures as they are now on file in the clerk's office of that county.

Mr. COOPER, of Ohio. And the deputy clerk himself discovered the mistake the very next day.

Mr. LACEY. Yes; the next day after the mistake was made this clerk forwarded a correct statement to the governor, calling attention to the mistake in the footing. There is no dispute about that. We have in the Sun Almanac—not the New York Sun, but an authority almost equal, possibly better, inasmuch as it comes nearer home—in the Baltimore Sun Almanac we have the figures given at 1,166 votes for Mudd instead of 1,138, and at the same time this almanac states that the official returns for Congress returned to the executive department at Annapolis are, for Mudd, 1,138.
